PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the City of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the City of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier" in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, and pursue such a course as to him may seem best, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present or to come.

The Editor would state that from his numerous corespondence in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon-makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription--$2 in advance.

JOHN TAYLOR.

Dear Sir:—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious. The local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities and religion: or any other thing that you may deem interesting. Not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian, I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter-Day-Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

NEW YORK CITY.

IT IS BETTER TO REPRESENT OURSELVES, THAN TO BE REPRESENTED BY OTHERS.

Poetry.

Hark! A Sound From the Mountains.

BY ELDER W. G. MILLS.

Awake! O ye Bards! from your long silent slumbers,
Though bright are the hopes that arise from your dream!
And kindle the world with the fire of this theme!

CHORUS.

The concave of heaven re-echoes the word:
Jehovah again by His prophets is speaking—
LET A TEMPLE BE REARED BY THE SAINTS OF THE LORD!

There alone on the earth can He find peace and order,
Yet the Saints cannot give Him a place for His seat.

The holy Apostles resound the glad story,
Their counsels will hallow the tidings they bring;
The Temple, displaying the latter-day glory,
Must be built, O ye nations! to Zion's great King!

Ye elders, whose tongues glow with heavenly fire,
Whose hearts burn to spread forth the Kingdom abroad;
Let your words burst like thunder, or sweet as the lyre,
That the Saints may soon build up the Temple of God.

Oh ye Saints! blend your voices, and sing, for salvation
Will be known in the Temple in these latter days;
This, this is the time of our fond expectation,
We'll learn of the Lord, and we'll walk in his ways.

Let the rich be their treasures of value bestowing,
The poor give their mites, till the structure be done;
Then we'll sing, and we'll shout, and be blest o'er-flowing,
When our Father, the works of the faithful will own.

UTAH.

FROM THE HON. J. M. BERNHISEL, DELEGATE FROM UTAH.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR: As the delegate in Congress from the Territory of Utah, I have the right to debate any question which may engage the attention of that body; and, doubtless, a liberal interpretation would be given to the language by which the right of a delegate is secured to me. The practice in the House of Representatives has given an extensive range to debate, and sometimes matters personal have been mingled with those that are national. That which affects the constituency, has been generously allowed to be personal to the representative, and I have precedents which would justify me in troubling the House, in which I have the honor to occupy a seat, with the correction of errors which have been infused into the public mind respecting the administration of the governmental affairs of the Territory of Utah. The propriety of such a course, however, appeared to me, in many cases, to be questionable, and I avail myself of the press to correct one or two errors, to which the press has given an injurious circulation.

Governor Brigham Young has been superseded by a distinguished military gentleman, whose appointment the Senate has confirmed. I may, therefore, by a brief explanation, vindicate the character of Governor Young, without suspicion of motive to secure his reappointment, which might create distrust of the facts to which I appeal.

By the twelfth section of the act of the 9th of September, 1850, entitled an act to establish a territorial government for Utah, the sum of twenty thousand dollars was appropriated to the Territory, to be applied by the Governor and Legislative Assembly to the erection of suitable public buildings at the seat of government. That sum was advanced to Governor Young, in the month of July, 1851, and he has been unwarrantably charged with a misapplication of that money. Of that accusation a very simple statement will be an ample refutation.

On the 30th of September, 1853, Governor Young rendered an account and vouchers, setting forth the expenditure of ten thousand, three hundred and seventy-three dollars and forty-eight cents. Of this sum the Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, First Comptroller of the Treasury, allowed eight thousand, seven hundred and three dollars and ninety-eight cents, but disallowed one thousand, six hundred and sixty-nine dollars, paid for services of various persons, as a committee, and otherwise including travelling expenses on an expedition to select a site for the seat of government. Mr. Whittlesey objected to it as an unusual charge, though its necessity must be apparent. However, that sum deducted, the balance amounts to eleven thousand two hundred and ninety-six dollars and two cents, for which Governor Young holds himself ready to account. The Indian hostilities, which have troubled the Territory, and other causes, have delayed the completion of the public buildings; but Governor Young has given notice to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the best refutation of the accusation against him, that he will honor a draft at sight, if that officer of the General Government will draw upon him for the unexpended balance in his hands.

Can other evidence be necessary to show the wantonness of Governor Young's assailants? Papers that have borne the character of respectability, with intemperate zeal have pandered to prejudice on no more subtantial basis. On the one hand, Governor Young is represented as defiant to the General Government, threatening hostilities towards any gentleman that may be sent to succeed him; and on the other, the people are said to be disloyal to the General Government; and, in the imagination of zealots, armies are marshalled in battle array, and Utah is already a field of blood. Captain Stansbury, of the corps of topographical engineers of the United States army, who, in his exploration and survey of the valley of the great Salt Lake of Utah, had ample opportunity to form a correct estimate of the people among whom he so long dwelt—and he will not be suspected of partiality to Mormonism—in his report to his superior officer, which the United States Senate and the House of Representatives published, says he feels confident that the imputations which have been made against the personal character of Governor Young, are without foundation, and that his personal reputation is above reproach:

"Certain it is (says he) that the most entire confidence is felt in his integrity, personal, official, and pecuniary, on the part of those to whom a long and intimate association, and in the most trying emergencies, have afforded every possible opportunity of forming a just and accurate judgment of his true character."

The disloyality of Governor Young and the people of Utah is disproved by the same unquestioned and unquestionable authority. An illustrative incident in the history of that people may put to shame their assailants. I quote again from Capt. Stansbury:

"In their progress westward through the northern part of Missouri, they were again driven from that State by violent threats into the southern borders of Iowa, whence, after much hardship and suffering, they reached, in the course of the summer, the banks of the Missouri, beyond the limits of the States. Here they inclosed land and planted crops, leaving some of their number to reap the fruits, which were to be applied to the sustenance of other companies that were to follow as soon as they should be able to procure means.

"They were about crossing the river to pursue their journey westward, when an officer of the United States Government presented himself with a requisition for five hundred men to serve in the war with Mexico. This demand, though sudden and unexpected, was promptly and patriotically complied with; but, in consequence, the expedition was broken up for the season. Those that remained, being principally old men, women, and children, prepared to pass the winter in the wilds of an Indian country, by cutting hay and erecting log and sod huts, and digging as many caves as time allowed, and their strength enabled them."

In another portion of the same work, Captain Stansbury says:

"From all that I saw and heard, I deem it but simple justice to say, that, notwithstanding these causes of irritation, a more loyal and patriotic people cannot be found within the limits of the Union. This, I think, was emphatically shown in the promptitude and cheerfulness with which they responded to the call of the government to furnish a battalion for service during the Mexican war; while in the heart of an Indian country, and on the eve of a long and uncertain pilgrimage into an unknown wilderness; they were suddenly called upon to surrender five hundred of their best men to the hazards of a hostile campaign, and to the exposure and vicissitudes of a march of two thousand miles across trackless deserts and burning plains, to fight the battles of their country. Their peculiar circumstances presented almost insuperable objections to a compliance with the requisition, yet not the slightest hesitation was evinced. 'You shall have your battalion at once,' was the reply of Mr. Young, 'if it has to be a class of our Elders.' And in three days the force, recruited principally among the fathers of families, was raised and ready to march. Here, certainly, was no evidence of a lack of patriotism."

The same author quotes from addresses delivered by Brigham Young, in which he expressed his exalted estimation of the constitution of the United States, and the laws enacted in subordination to it, exhorting the people to magnify the laws, and assuring them that "there is no law in the United States, or in the constitution, but I am ready to make honorable." The author then adds:

"The following language used by Gen. D. H. Wells, at the celebration of the fourth anniversary of the advent of the Mormons into the valley, will show, I think, what was the feeling of the people:

"'It has been thought by some that this people, abused, maltreated, insulted, robbed, plundered, murdered, and finally disfranchised and expatriated, would naturally feel reluctant to again unite their destiny with the American republic.' * * * 'No wonder that it was thought by some that we would not again submit ourselves (even while we were scorned and ridiculed) to return to our allegiance to our native country. Remember that it was by the act of our country, not ours, that we were expatriated; and then consider the opportunity we had of forming other ties. Let this pass, while we lift the veil and show the policy which dictated us. That country, that constitution, those institutions, were all ours; they are still ours. Our fathers were heroes of the Revolution; under the master spirits of an Adams, a Jefferson, and a Washington, they declared and maintained their independence; and, under the guidance of the spirit of truth, they fulfilled their mission whereunto they were sent from the presence of the Father. Why should we relinquish our interest in that country made dear to us by every tie of association and consanguinity?' * * * 'Those who have indulged such sentiments concerning us, have not read Mormonism aright; for never, no, never, will we desert our countries cause; never will we be found arrayed by the side of her enemies, although she herself, may cherish them in her own bosom; although she may launch forth the thunderbolts of war, which may return and spend their fury upon her own head, never; no, never, will we permit the weakness of human nature to triumph over our love of country, our devotion to her institutions, handed down to us by our honored sires, made dear by a thousand tender recollections.'"

Captain Stansbury elsewhere says:

"Direct charges have been widely published, seriously affecting the patriotism and personal reputation of the Mormon leaders, as well as the feelings of the people toward the General Government. Such doubts and apprehensions are, in my judgment, totally groundless, and the charges I believe to be either based upon prejudice or to have grown out of a want of accurate information. A residence of a year in the midst of the Mormon community, during the greater part of which period I was in a constant intercourse with the rulers and people, afforded much opportunity for ascertaining the real facts of the case."

But persons who never approached the longitudes in which Utah lies hesitate not to denounce the Mormons as rebels and traitors, and, by a perversion of language, attribute to Governor Young a defiant spirit. Governor Young has never threatened opposition to the General Government, or violence to a successor, nor have the people of the Territory of Utah failed to respect the federal laws. The language which has been perverted was the exposition of his confidence in the government of God, and the expression of his devout submission to the Providence which rules all created things. He believes that if it is God's good pleasure that he shall retire to a private life, or continue Governor of the Territory of Utah, distinguished station in the General Government and political pre-eminence among men, will be powerless to change the designs of Omnipotence: and hence he has said, How futile it is for man to be solicitous about that which man cannot control! Will it be questioned that God rules in the armies of Heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth? Why, then, should it be deemed presumptuous in Governor Young to give utterance to unquestioned truth!

Nor is it true that Governor Young and the Mormon people refuse to comply with the requisitions of the General Government "so far even as to transmit a copy of their laws or a statement of their public expenditures." Of the latter enough has been said already, and of the former it will be sufficient to say that it was not their duty. The Federal Government provides its own officer to discharge that and other duties, as will be seen on a perusal of the law itself.

"SEC. 3. There shall be a Secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States; he shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the Governor in his executive department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws, and one copy of the executive proceedings, on or before the first day of December in each year, to the President of the United States, and, at the same time, two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, for the use of Congress."

If there had been neglect in the discharge of these duties, it would not have been the neglect of Mormons; but truth and justice require the statement to be made that the laws have been transmitted to the executive authority, and to the Congress of the United States.

Governor Young's assailants have also charged that he is sustained by a military force in opposition of federal authority. Thirty thousand men in arms, says one writer, and seven thousand disciplined troops, another, support Governor Young in his contumacy. That there are arms in Utah to keep the Indians in check, no one will deny. What frontier settlement has them not? That there may be volunteer companies of militia, is also true, and in this respect Utah is not unlike every village in the land.

But Gov. Young is like the Governor of every State and Territory in the Union in his means of defence. He has no military power that is not possessed by all men in his station. An army is not necessary in Utah. Of the people of that Territory, Gen. John Wilson, of whom Mr. Smith writes as a citizen of the first respectability, and officer of the Federal Government in California, has said in a letter to the Hon. Truman Smith, then a member of the Senate of the United States:

"A more orderly, honest, industrious, and civil people, I have never been amongst than these; and it is incredible how much they have done here in the wilderness in so short a time. In this city (Salt Lake) which contains now, as I believe, from about four to five thousand inhabitants, [they are now nearly double that number,] I have not met in it a citizen a single idler, or any person who looks like a loafer. Their prospects for crops are fair, and there is a spirit and an energy in all that you see that cannot be equalled in any city of any size that I have ever been in, and, I will add, not even in 'Old Connecticut.'"

Of Gov. Young the Hon. L. H. Read, the late Chief Justice of Utah, who was sent out by the Federal Government, from the State of New York, says:

"I was received by Gov. Young with marked courtesy and respect. He has taken pains to make my residence here agreeable. The Governor, in manner and conversation is a polished, gentleman, very neat and tasty in dress, easy and pleasant in conversation, and I think a man of decided talent and strong intellectual qualities. I have heard him address the people once on the subject of Man's Free Agency. He is a very excellent speaker, his gesture uncommonly graceful, articulation distinct, and speech pleasant. I was extremely edified by his address and manner. The Governor is a first-rate business man. His private business is extensive; he owns several grist and saw mills; is extensively engaged in farming operations; all of which he superintends personally. I have made up my mind that no man has been more grossly misrepresented than Governor Young, and that he is a man who will reciprocate kindness and good intentions as heartily and freely as any one."

That Colonel Steptoe will dissent from the testimony of the late Chief Justice Read, is not anticipated. He has had the means of observation, and is enabled to know that the inhabitants of Utah have been maligned by men who, to secure the reputation of writing con spirito, sacrifice truth and decency. As a people, they are hospitable to strangers, respectful to authority, and loyal to the Government. To prove themselves good members of civil society, they can point to the labor they have performed, and the thriving villages, and fertile farms into which they have converted a distant wilderness. They desire to enjoy in peace the fruit for which they have toiled.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. BERNHISEL,
Delegate from Utah.

LAST CASE OF ABSENCE OF MIND.—When Congress pounced upon Utah for polygamy.—OMAR PASHA.

From Our Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5, 1855.

To the Editor of The Mormon:

DEAR SIR—I take advantage of the present opportunity of dropping you a line, before the issue of your first number, (as I learn it is soon to be out,) with a few items from the capital, and shall continue to forward such news from time to time as I shall deem of interest, for your disposal; and if of sufficient value, to keep our friends "posted up" of doings in the capital through the columns of THE MORMON.

There is quite an amount of important business now before Congress, in which the country at large is interested, with which they get along very slowly; although there were many bills passed both Houses previous to my arrival in this city, of which I have not yet had time to gather up the details, but will forward you a list at the earliest opportunity.

Some time last week a bill passed the House providing for the establishment of a Surveyor General's office in the Territory of Utah. The bill gave two townships of land for a University, and every sixteenth and thirty-sixth section for school purposes. The bill, in its original form, proposed to donate one quarter section of land to actual settlers in the Territory. During the discussion much excitement prevailed, and although many members expressed their willingness that Utah should enjoy all the privileges of other Territories, there were yet many who manifested the bitterest feelings towards the Mormons. The bill was so amended as to strike out the section donating lands to actual settlers, and in this shape was sent to the Senate. Congress can pass laws donating lands to settlers in Oregon and New Mexico, but those of Utah are refused, and yet the settlement of Utah was attended by far more hardships, labor, privations, sufferings and danger than either of them. The difficulties to be surmounted in planting settlements there, and in bringing a naturally dry and barren soil into cultivation, were greater than ever attended the settlement of any Territory of the Union. The beauty of the farms, and the productiveness of the soil of "fair Utah," which is the admiration of every traveler, and a theme for the pen of every letter writer from those secluded valleys, are the results of the intelligence, skill and industry of the Mormons.

That country, before the Mormons went there, was but little removed from a desert, (as is now the case in valleys where there are no settlements,) the soil, naturally hard and dry, (seldom or never raining, but a few showers in the spring and fall seasons,) is made productive by expensive canals, or ditches, constructed to convey the water that flows down from the lofty Wasatch range upon it during the irrigating season. And I will venture to say, had not the Mormons settled that country, it would have remained a barren waste for at least a half century yet to come; and if there are any among the hardy pioneers in the nation's history who merit any favors from government in the shape of donations of land, the Mormons, for reclaiming a howling wilderness, and turning it into a fruitful field, are among the first.

Had Utah been settled by any other people than Mormons, I have no doubt the bill, in its original form, would have passed, and the privileges granted to the settlers of Oregon and other Territories would have been extended to those of Utah. And yet we live in a land of boasted religious liberty, whose government accords to all its citizens equal rights and privileges.

A few nights ago I listened, with interest, to a lecture delivered by Mr. Marsh, formally American Minister to Constantinople, at the Smithsonian Institute; upon the subject and feasibility of introducing the Camel and Dromedary into the United States, for the purposes of transportation accross the continent.

The lecturer seemed to understand the subject well, and from actual experience with those animals, recommends the experiment to be tried on a large scale, as being the most likely to succeed.

Only think, of the idea of exchanging the small Spanish Mule and Indian Pony's, with which we have so often crossed those vast plains, for those immense animals, weighing some fifteen hundred pounds, carrying burthens of near a ton weight, and travelling at the rate of fifty to seventy-five miles per day. I would say if we can't have the Pacific Rail Road, give us the Camels.

The Messrs McGraw and Co., contractors for carrying the Mail from Independance to Salt Lake, have been here, asking Government for relief, and remuneration for losses, sustained from the Indians &c., to enable them to continue their contract. There is about to be a proposition brought before the House, to run a daily line of stages from Independance, by Salt Lake, to California.

Yesterday the Senate passed the Land Bounty Bill granting lands to the Soldiers of the War of 1812. The French Spoliation Bill, is the order for to-day. The House was occupied upon the Private Calendar for the past two days.

A MORMON IN WASHINGTON.

News of the Week, etc.

Latest News.

MESSRS. Allen & Eddy's Pacific Telegraph Bill passed on the 13th.

The bill grants right of way of two hundred feet in perpetuity. The parties select their own route; build in their own time; fix their own rates of toll; and extend for protection the penal laws of the United States, over the whole of the property of the line.

It is rumored in Washington that Santa Anna has been assassinated by three of his officers; but it is not generally believed.

The Asia arrived on the 14th, but brings no news of importance. No particular change in the Crimea. The Queen has sent for Lord Derby, and commissioned him to form a ministry. He reports he cannot accomplish it.

Sardinia furnishes 15,000 men for the Crimea; and England agrees to lend Sardinia one or two millions sterling, at 3 per cent. France and England are to protect Sardinia during the present war.

FROM CUBA.—From the New York Herald we learn that there is another anticipated outbreak in Cuba. Secret conspiracies have been detected; a great number of arrests of many leading men have been made; among them the Governors of Mantanzas, Principe, and Trinidad. Two British line of battle-ships entered the harbor of Havana—the Boscawen and Cellussus. The Rear Admiral, Arthur Fanshaw, C. B., was received with great ceremony by the Governor, by whom a grand banquet was given to the officers.

UTAH.

Owing to the severity of the weather this winter, and the great amount of snow upon the plains, we are deprived of our quota of news from Utah; the latest news we had was by the December mail. Probably the Sierra Nevada on the West has been as bountifully supplied with snow as the mountains on the East, for we get nothing from there by the way of the Isthmus. We live in hopes, and think by our next we shall have something from the mountains.

We glean the following from the Deseret News of November 30th. The weather up to that time had been very mild.

"The following doings of the City Council of Salt Lake City:

"Much to the gratification of all lovers of good conduct and good order, the Mayor and Common Council of Great Salt Lake City, at a late session, repealed all licenses for selling beer and intoxicating liquors, and there is an ordinance making such sales fineable without a license, we begin to think there is a prospect for inebriates to put their time and means to better use than to loaf about slop shops, or be seen drunk in our streets, or found prowling at nights where they have no business.

"Should taking away licenses, fines for breach of ordinance, and lopping dead branches from the Church, fail in stopping the traffic, we hope the Bishops, and citizens in each ward, co-operating with the Mayor and City Council, will take effectual measures to abate all nuisances.

"The members of the Legislature were making their way to, and some had arrived at Salt Lake City.

"Gen. C. C. Rich and others had arrived from San Barnadino, Cal., accompanied by Geo. Q. Cannon and others from the Sandwich Islands.

"Messrs. Oliver B. Huntington and Stephen Kinsey arrived on the 27th November from Carson Valley. They came through on the new route, and will furnish us with an account of it.

"Indian summer weather still continues. Slight warm shower on the 23d and 24th. 29th, a few fleecy clouds—very warm.

"The mail carrier states that he called at San Pedro for the mail on the 20th ult., but the Postmaster would not deliver it."

We think our neighbors in Utah are placed in an awkward fix; closed up on the east by snow, and on the west by obstinate officials. It is high time that the bill now before Congress, or some such measures, should be adopted, for we seem to be excluded from postal privileges that all the rest of the world enjoy.

The above new road on which Messrs Huntington & Kinsey came promises to be of great importance for telegraphic, railroad, and mail facilities, as well as for general travel. We hope to have details soon.

Departure of Emigrants from Liverpool.

We learn by the Star of February 3d that the Rockaway sailed from Liverpool for New Orleans on the 6th of January, with 24 saints on board, under the Presidency of Elder Samuel Glasgow.

On the 7th, the ship James Nesmith, Capt. Mills, for New Orleans, with 441 saints, under the charge of Elder Peter O'Hansen, all from Scandinavia except one.

On the 9th, the Neva, Capt. Brown, sailed, having on board 13 souls, under the charge of Elder Thomas Jackson, for New Orleans.

On the 17th of January the clipper ship Charles Buck, Capt. Smalley, sailed for New Orleans with 403 saints, including the remainder of the Scandinavian Emigration for this season, in charge of Elder E. G. M. Hogan, and the remainder of the British saints who had been transferred from the ship Helois, (which had parted her cable and stranded,) the whole under the Presidency of Elder Richard Ballantyne, who had returned to England from his mission to Hindostan.

The Weather in New-York.

For a few days past, the weather has been intensely cold, very much surpassing our experience of the same latitude, in the Vallies of the "Wasatch," and equalling, a regular old fashioned Down-Easter.

From every part of the country we hear of almost incredibly cold weather; through the northern part of New York State, the mercury fell to nearly thirty degrees below zero.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 17, 1855.

INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS.

WE now present ourselves before the public, to make our editorial bow; to be frank, however, we do not feel ourselves particularly honored in being re-called to the editorial chair; but as a matter of duty to ourselves, our church, and the world, we undertake it.

We are well aware of its responsibilities and labor; and take hold of it as we would of any other piece of drudgery; and we shall feel better pleased when we get through with our labors, than at its commencement; and leave any one who covets the honor to gather the laurels. At the same time we do not shrink from the task; but shall try to entertain and instruct our readers, according to our ability.

As it regards a declaration of our views, we wish, with all courtesy, to inform our readers that we must necessarily refer them to our pages; that we have no particular standard, except the broad platform of truth—religious, political, social, moral, and philosophical. We are not bound down to any particular party, or creed; either religious or political. It is true we are Mormon, inside and outside, at home and abroad, in public and private, everywhere. We are so, however, from principle. We are such, not because we believe it to be more popular, lucrative, or honorable, (as the world has it); but because we believe it to be more true, more reasonable and scriptural, moral and philosophic; because we conscientiously believe that it is more calculated to promote the happiness and well being of humanity, in time, and throughout all eternity, than any other system which we have met with.

But after having said so much we are aware that we differ in sentiment with millions of our fellow men; but as we believe in free discussion, we are willing, at all times, to hear other's views dispassionately expressed; and if any persons have in possession any moral, social, political, scientific or philosophic truths, that we have not, we shall feel obliged to them to make them known; and are ready to embrace them. Again, if they will point out any error that we have embraced, we promise to lay it aside; we at the same time are as ready to communicate to others.

For our religious faith, we will refer our readers to another column, where they will find it, in both French and English.

Concerning politics, we believe that Columbus was inspired to search for this land; and that others were actuated by the same spirit to come here. That God had reserved this continent for the developement of great and important events, associated with the human family.

We believe that our fathers were inspired to write the Constitution of the United States, and that it is an instrument full, lucid and comprehensive; that it was dictated by a wise and foreseeing policy, and does honor to the heads and hearts of its framers; that it is the great bulwark of American liberty, and that the strict and implicit observance of which, is the only safeguard of this mighty nation. We therefore rest ourselves under its ample folds.

We believe that all legislative assemblies should confine themselves to constitutional principles; and that all such laws should be implicitly obeyed by every American.

We believe that all men should have a right to do good; a perfect freedom of action; and be protected in that right; "Free trade and Sailors' rights"; but that no man is free, or at liberty to do wrong; or transgress law.

We believe that all men are responsible to God for their religious acts, and therefore ought to have perfect freedom of conscience.

We believe that the President, Governors, Judges, and Governmental officers, ought to be respected, honored, and sustained in their stations; but that they ought to use their positions and power, not for political emolument, or party purposes; but for the administration of justice, and equity, and for the well being and happiness of the people.

We believe that legislators ought to be chosen on account of their intelligence, honor, integrity, and virtue; and not because they belong to some particular party clique.

We believe that the high party strife, log rolling, wire pulling, and political juggling, and spoliation, is a disgrace to any politician; that it is beneath the dignity of an American, and that it is disgraceful and humiliating, alike to the people and statesmen of this great republic.

We believe that legislative enactments ought to be for the good of the whole, and not for any particular location or district; and that anything else is at variance with the spirit and genius of our institutions.

We believe that although there is much to lament, and room for very great improvement, both in our Executive, Judiciary, and Legislative departments, that we have the most liberal, free and enlightened government in the world; and we go in for the Union, and the whole Union, E Pluribus Unum—one, and inseparable.

Concerning ourselves we form a Territory, and feel proud of our position; and although much obliged to our loving Uncle Sam for paying our Territorial expenses, we cannot but feel that in many instances we are treated rather cavalierly by the old gentleman, and with that natural go-ahead-ativeness, and independence, associated with the character of our nation, we shall feel proud of the time when we shall have arrived at sufficient maturity to mingle among men; to be numbered among the stars of our constellation; and when Utah, from the mountain heights, can reach out a friendly hand to her neighboring States, and help to swell the number of States in our glorious Union.

Concerning our paper, we have a three-fold object in view. The great facilities of Railroad travel, from the East to the West, together with the sickness and great mortality by way of New Orleans, has induced the Presidency of the Church to alter the direction of the European emmigration; and as it will, in future, pass by here, an agency is needed to keep them from being imposed upon, and from imposing upon others. And as our emigration never has been burthensome to any society, we hope it never may. One object of this paper is to keep them advised as to routes, and give them general instruction.

Another is to instruct the Saints and our friends in these eastern countries.

A third, to correct many false and slanderous reports which are continually put in circulation, and to advocate the interests of Utah and Mormonism generally.

POLYGAMY.

SINCE this doctrine has been promulgated by us, as a part of our religious creed, every variety of opinion has been expressed, by men in all classes of society. It has been talked about by religious and irreligious, professor and profane. It has been the theme in the Legislative Hall, the Pulpit, the Bar-room, and the Press. Polygamy and the Mormons, the Mormons and Polygamy, has resounded everywhere. A universal hue and cry has gone through the length and breadth of the land; from California to Texas, and from Louisiana to Maine. "The cat is now out of the bag"—Eureka! Eureka!! we have found it.

On this, our first issue, it may be expected that something should be said by us, in relation to this matter. This we undertake as cheerfully as any other task; for we are not ashamed, here, in this, the great Metropolis of America; this theatre of Arts, Science, and Commerce; this nucleus of intelligence and ignorance, wisdom and folly, religion and infidelity, virtue and vice, purity and corruption; in this city of gorgeous splendor and squalid misery, and want, to declare that we are polygamists. We are not ashamed to proclaim to this great nation; to rulers and people; to the President, Senators, Legislators, and Judges; to high and low, rich and poor, priests and people, that we are firm and conscientious believers in polygamy; and that it is part and parcel of our religious creed. We do this calmly, seriously and understandingly; after due deliberation, careful examination, and close investigation of its principles and bearings; religiously, socially, morally, physically, and politically; we unhesitatingly pronounce our full and implicit faith in this principle, as emanating from God, and that under his direction it would be a blessing to the human family.

We have not room to enter into the merits of this subject, this issue; but shall touch upon a few items which circumstances render necessary, and leave the details for another time.

We are aware that strong prejudices exist in the minds of the good and virtuous, the honorable and high-minded of our land, in relation to this subject; and we think we can respect, and appreciate, all such feelings, when honestly and candidly expressed. These are serious matters; pregnant with importance, and not to be trifled with. They enter into the domestic circle and sinuate themselves into all the conditions and relationships of life, and therefore demand the most serious, calm, and dispassionate consideration. Society is already corrupt enough, God knows; and to seek to tear down the flimsy barriers that so feebly guard our weak, rickety standard of morality, would be a thing to be deprecated by every honorable man.

These things are not with us a matter of theory and speculation; nor a system of loathsome, sensual gratification. We have higher aims and more exalted views of the relationship of man and wife; and it pains us to see the fountain of life thus perverted and corrupted. We cannot without sympathy behold man, who was created in the image of God, to stand at the head of creation, become a poor, effete, degraded being; and woman, chaste, beautiful, and lovely,—deceived, crushed, bartered, betrayed, sunk in crime, a creature of, and for lust; or view the powers given of God to man for the propagation of his species, perverted to debauchery and lasciviousness, with all its revolting, deadly, corrupt and damning effects, without some regard for fallen humanity. Neither can we behold without emotion that body which christians expect to be the residence of their spirit in the resurrection of the just, which ought to be pure, chaste, virtuous and noble, become polluted and degraded; a receptacle of disease—the effects of transgression; unhealthy, weak, emaciated, a living, loathsome, crawling mass, and children inheriting from their birth diseases entailed by their parents "to the third and fourth generations."

We as eternal beings believe in eternal laws, covenants and unions, emanating from God, and based upon purity and virtue. We are not united only, "until death do us part," but expect an eternal union, in the eternal worlds; based upon living, intelligent, eternal principles; our gospel, our religion, our covenants and marriages; all our acts refer to this; and no one can detest the loathsome, degraded, corrupt, and miserable state of the world, in relation to lewdness, lasciviousness, adultery, and debauchery, more than we do; and were women treated with us as they are in thousands of instances here, it would cost a man his head. They would find, as in ancient Israel, more than one man who dare use "the javelin."

We are not surprised, then, that men of reflection and virtue, having a knowledge of the world, should feel indignant at polygamy. They look upon it as something pandering to the brutal passions of man; and from the exceeding low standard of virtue, can scarce conceive of anything but lasciviousness associated with the sex. We respect the conscientious feelings of such men; for we know that with their ideas of such things, they must be extremely revolting; but we would respectfully ask such persons if they ever seriously reflected upon the matter? And further; is it prejudice, education, and the corrupt state of society that has led them to these conclusions; or matters of fact, deduced from scripture, reason, history, or precedence? Did they ever think that Abraham, Jacob, David, Solomon, and a host of other good men mentioned in the scriptures, were polygamists? That the twelve tribes of "Israel to whom belonged the covenants, promises," &c., descended from four women; the wives of one man? Did they ever reflect that those polygamists were more virtuous than this generation; and that for such things as are practiced here every day with impunity—adultery; a man would be "stoned to death by all Israel"? Did they ever reflect that it might be possible for the Lord to be unchangable? That he had not learned much from man in a few thousand years; and that possibly he was not in error then; and if not then, that the same principles might probably be as correct now as they were at that time? It is well for us not to be too hasty. Did they ever reflect that Peter says there shall be a "restitution of all things"? Did they ever think that there might be something socially, morally, religiously, and politically wrong, which leads to the amount of corruption that now exists? If not, we would recommend them to pause and consider before they condemn. We would here state this is a subject that has attracted the attention of the virtuous and good in all ages. It is a subject that statesmen, philanthropists, and philosophers have, in all countries, vainly endeavored to check, for generations; and that Princes, Kings, Presidents, and Emperors have vainly tried to remove.

To check this, legal enactments have been made—sometimes, as in England, licensing brothel houses; at other times, putting up before such places a lantern at the door, with "burning shame" written on it; sometimes, by the most stringent laws, with various penal enactments appended. Various legislative enactments have been made in Prussia, Austria, France, and other continental nations. But what has it all resulted in? Nothing. Go to England now, and you see thousands of poor, miserable, homeless outcasts, wandering about the streets, and seeking to drag out the remnants of a miserable existence by bartering their—was I going to say virtue? Oh! name it not! It is too humiliating, loathsome and degrading. In some of the leading cities of France these poor outcasts have their own beats on the sidewalk allotted to them; and in the sale of their dishonor (Who are the purchasers in all these cases?) will show their tickets like cabmen, or porters. In some of the cities in Germany—take Hamburg, for instance—they are prohibited from going abroad professionally, by law; but are located in certain districts of the city; and there they swarm by hundreds. Whole streets full may be seen, bedecked and bedizened, at windows, inviting passers by, and offering themselves for market.

Need I mention the boarding houses and hotel accommodations here in our own land, and trace matters of this kind from our splendid saloons and parlors—through the streets—down to Five Points? Are not these things all known? I might here ask, whose are those unfortunate children that our ladies have been seeking out, and feeding and clothing lately with such laudable benevolence? And further, where do our mulattoes come from?

But we must stop; we have gone far enough; the picture would be too dark. It was necessary to lift the curtain a little; but prudence, propriety, and decency says, let it fall. We would just remark that philosophy, morality, law, and Christianity, as now taught, has signally failed to stop this monstrous social and moral evil. The present state of the world proves their incompetency. The Lord's way, as practiced by ancient men of God. The "Restitution"—as lately revealed—we think will stop it among us.

WE noticed quite a serious article in the Herald of the 14th, upon the Mormons and their destiny, written with a great deal of acumen, displaying their usual predisposition to the prophetic. Wonder how it is that the Herald don't believe in modern revelation. But more anon.

The article referred to came too late, as the paper was just going to press. We will refer to it more in detail in our next, and refer our readers to the serious consideration of the lecture on the second page of the Herald.

THERE is no news of importance from the Crimea—Sebastopol not taken. It is rumored that Lord John Russell will resign. It is difficult to guide the ship in such stormy weather.

THE KNOW NOTHINGS.

Among the many parties that have lately thronged the political world, the Know Nothings is one that has taken a bold and prominent stand. Unlike many other systems that have had to struggle through opposition in their infancy and which have taken years to develope, and organize; it has sprung into existence in a day, and like the young violinist Julien, and other precocious youths, it has almost developed the powers of a man while yet in its childhood; causing the attention, wonder, and in many instances, the admiration, of many of our most sage, and intellectual politicians; baffling their schemes, overruling their caucusses, controlling the elections and performing political feats only equalled by Don Quixote, or Alladdin, and we have thought, in many instances, quite as astonishing to themselves, as was the sudden elevation of Sancho Panza to the government of Berita. Perhaps one great cause of its sudden development, is, its close affinity to "Young Americanism," which has been generating for years, and which although almost all condemned as a crysalis; yet, when it has crept out of its shell, returned into the aeriel element, and displayed its flaunting colors all seem desirous to grasp.

There is an element of power associated with this new sect, which when it has time to develop itself fully, may form a powerful lever, in the administration of our government; but like all new discoveries of Steam, Electricity, Hydraulics &c., though powerful, and beneficial to community, when under scientific government; the more danger is there to be apprehended from unskillful hands. That masterpiece of science the Magnetic Telegraph; which conveys thought with lightning speed; brings into close proximity the acts, and thoughts of distant nations, and outstrips the earth in its velocity; can nevertheless be made the instrument of death. The very power that propels a magnificent steamboat, if unskifully managed, will blow to atoms the beautiful structure, and engulph its projectors, admirers, as well as those it bears, in one common grave.

It is not enough then that we have power; we want a power that can be controlled; a power to which we can set limits, and bounds; and to which we shall be able to say "Hitherto shalt thou go; but no farther." Air, water, steam, &c., all possess power; but we must have our sluice-ways, and embankments, our indicators, escape and safety valves; all under proper management. Union is power; but the power of union may be applied for evil as well as good. It needs knowledge, wisdom, integrity, and virtue, to govern that power, and to make it a blessing to humanity. We as a nation are powerful, because united on the basis of a liberal constitution; but let a few unprincipled demagogues bear rule, scatter the seeds of discord, destroy public confidence, excite and influence sectional feelings, without a counteracting power, and this Union, which cost the struggles, treasures, and blood of the venerable patriots of '76, would be severed; its powerful sinews cut; and this beautiful structure; the symmetrical proportions, rapid developments, increasing wealth and intelligence, and the unparalleled prosperity of which, has been the envy and admiration of the world, would be prostrated; imbecile, and weak, a scene of civil war, anarchy, and confusion: the taunt of autocracts, and the ridicule of kings, and tyrants.

Is it not enough then that we have power, that power must be wielded for the public good, for the well-being, interest, and happiness of all. European monarchs have power; a power over the body, and over the mind, a power to enslave, to bind, to crush; a power of ancient institutions, precedent, priestcraft, kingcraft, &c. They have the power to govern the people, and throw around the millions of the masses a network, out of which they vainly endeavor to extricate themselves, and with which the vox populi has little, or nothing to do.

There is evidently a fear, real or professed, manifested by the Know Nothings, lest foreign influence should predominate, in this country; and that aided by the subtle machinations of priestcraft, a system of things should be introduced, tending to uproot republicanism and sap the foundations of the Temple of Freedom. It advocates Native Americanism, Americans for Office, American Schools, American Talent, American Military, Laws, Police, and Legislation. It opposes the formation of "military companies, composed of foreigners." It seems to be principally directed against Roman Catholicism, and proclaims "War to the hilt on Political Romanism." "Hostily to all Papal Influences in whatever form, and under whatever name, when brought to bear against the Republic," and also "Eternal enmity to all who attempt to carry out the principles of a Foreign Church, or State," whilst it would afford "the amplest protection to Protestant interests." It advocates the "Repeal of all Naturalization Laws," and that citizenship shall only be granted to foreigners "by special Act of Congress." It is in fact, "Young America" of an older growth, more matured, and with a combination of other elements. Its sessions are in secret, and its members not generally known; owing to this, coupled with other peculiarities, they have obtained the name of "Know Nothings." It has created quite a sensation throughout the Union, and has overturned and frustrated the plans of many of the old parties. It takes a bold and determined stand, and exclaims with vehemence against many of the abuses of the day. There are many journals which advocate its claims: among which is a Boston Weekly, from which we extract some of the above. It is named the "Know Nothing, and American Crusader." The latter title is certainly ominous, and brings to the mind some former crusaders. We sincerely hope this may be productive of less evil and more good, than its Roman Patronymic; the first was a combination of Romish Power, and Papal Nations with sword and spear, against the Infidel, for the possession of the Holy Land. This a combination of Protestant Influence, and Protestant American and political power, against Popery. It is a crusade, if you please, against his Holiness the Pope, and Holy Mother Church; the Church of Rome.

The Way they Make Lawyers in Utah.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29, 1854.

I am down here about 200 miles from Salt Lake City, with a party of six men, partly as an escort to the Judges of the Supreme Court, and also to have a talk with Walker, the Chief of the Utahs. Two Indians were recently tried by the Court and hung for the murder of two children, and considerable apprehension was felt lest the tribe should take revenge upon the persons of the Judges. We have seen a great deal of the different tribes of Utes, and thought when we started we might possibly have a little fighting, but it turned out otherwise, and our relations with the Indians proved to be perfectly peaceful and friendly.

I have never before appreciated the troubles of frontier life. All the towns south of the Salt Lake City are completely overrun with Indians, who keep the settlers entirely under their thumbs. They walk into a house, demand what they want, and, if refused, draw an arrow on the females, and frighten them into submission. They go into the fields, steal the wheat, and take it to the miller; when the grist is ground, they fight with the miller if he requires his toll. The people make them presents continually, and try to conciliate them in every way, and the Utes return the favors by calling them "squaws" and "cowards," and shooting them whenever it suits their convenience to do so.

Since we started on this trip, I have been admitted as attorney and counsellor at law in the Supreme Court of the Territory, which gives me the privilege of sitting in the court room, and using all the paper I want, as at present. Though the Judges have made a lawyer of me, I assure them that I am like necessity, "and know no law."

Last night the people of this place got up a ball for our benefit, (that is to say, on our paying expenses.) It was opened with prayer by one of the Mormon elders. The females were all married, as every one is appropriated by the time she is fourteen years of age. In the city the Mormons are still keeping up their policy of holding us at a respectful distance, socially, but are paying the most profound attention to our pockets. I doubt if the prices in California, in her palmiest days, could have compared with those we are paying here.

It would seem from the above that the Utah Judges have been trying their hands in the manufacture of lawyers; with how much success, may be judged from the above.

As we shall notice in another number the position of the Indians, we shall not now explain; our writer is evidently ignorant of their state. But, speak softly, he is Attorney and Counsellor at Law in the Supreme Court of the Territory, and as he states he gets his paper for nothing, with the use of the Court House, he may turn scribbler and write a book of Mormon expositions, or long newspaper articles—penny a line. Wonder if he possesses the franking privilege?—lawyers should have it—especially Supreme Court lawyers. I find, however, that our pseudo lawyer is quite shocked at having to pay for going to a ball; perhaps he has been in the habit of going free to balls, or being paid. We have known men that could handle the whip and take care of coats, cloaks, &c., and get pay for their services at such places. But we again forget our hero is a supreme lawyer, and has the "privilege of sitting in the Court House, and using all the paper he wants;" and out of consideration to his dignity, they ought, after the courtesy of getting up a ball, by all means to have admitted him free. But again, the Mormons keep him at a respectable distance. This is really astonishing! When will they learn to appreciate men of talent and standing?

We publish this for the benefit of our friends in Utah, that they may be made acquainted with the legal embellishments of their bar. This "star" will, of course, dazzle their dumb-fusticated intellects; they will gape, wonderingly upon his giant intellect; listen with profound attention to his eloquent digests upon Chitty, Story, and Blackstone; and bless their happy stars that they have been graciously permitted to come within his orbit.

We are not acquainted with all of our present Judges; but think timber for the bar must have been very scarce when they had to have recourse to such material; perhaps, however, he was the best they had—that was not Mormon; and policy suggested that somebody else, besides a Mormon, should be selected "to satisfy the prejudices of the people"—(East.) But to be more charitable, perhaps, as the liquor law is passed in Salt Lake, in the absence of other venerable feelings, they may, on their Southern tour, have taken a stroll to the Temple of Bacchus; and as such visits make even Judges boosy, (so we have seen it,) they thought they would try their hands at Lawyer-making, and hence their not very rigid examination into his legal qualifications; and hence, also, his statement to them that he was "like necessity, he knew no law." Perhaps he would have been nearer the mark if he had said, he was necessity itself, personified.

Now we don't wish to be too severe upon our Judges, for mistakes will happen among the best of men; but then they ought to have taken him aside next day, and lectured him, told him to be shady, blink his eye, look wise, and not say much, &c. They might, however, have had the same difficulty that a gentleman we heard of had with his son. The story runs thus: Expecting company, the gentleman whose son was not very bright, said to him, "Tom, when the company comes, don't say any thing, and then the people won't know you're a fool." "I won't," says Tom. Company came, and dinner was served. A gentleman near says to Tom—"Sir, shall I assist you to a little Turkey?" Tom is silent. "Chicken, sir?" Tom more silent. "Allow me," says another gentleman, "to help you to a little veal." Tom determinately silent. "It is very good, sir." Not a word. "Gentlemen, very desirous to please—perhaps, sir, you would prefer a little chicken and ham?" Tom, with a powerful effort, still preserves silence—not a monosyllable escapes his lips. "Gentlemen, look at each other," one exclaims; "he must be a fool!" "Father! father!! father!!!" says Tom, "they've found me out! they've found me out! and I didn't say a word."

Perhaps our lawyer had his lecture, and kept still as long as he could.

BROOKLYN, Williamsburgh, and Flatbush are now united in one. The three united are denominated the city of Brooklyn. Mr. Hall, the Mayor recently elected, was the first Mayor of Brooklyn, twenty years ago, when it was yet a small city. The suffrages of the united city have again called him to that honorable office: it speaks well for his popularity.

IMPORTANT CHANGE.

FOR a number of years past; say fourteen, or fifteen; our emigration from Europe, destined for the Western States and Utah Territory, has been shipped from Liverpool via New Orleans and St. Louis. But the increasing mortality among the emigrants on that route, for seven years past, together with the recent movement of the Church in appointing gathering places in the East, coupled with the increased facilities in transit in the Eastern States, has led the Presidency of the Church to change the course of our emigration from New Orleans to our Eastern cities.

A place of gathering has been appointed in Cincinnati, and another in St. Louis—the former under the Presidency of Elder Orson Pratt, the latter that of Elder Erastus Snow. Orson Pratt has not yet arrived, but is expected in the ensuing season. In the meantime, Elder Orson Spenser, a very learned and talented gentleman, who is well known among the saints, will preside in Cincinnati, and give direction to the affairs of the Church in that place.

The following is an abstract of President B. Young's letter of instruction, on the subject of emigration, to Elder F. D. Richards, President of the European Church, and Emigrating Agent at Liverpool:

"You are aware of the sickness liable to assail our unacclimated brethren on the Mississippi river, hence I wish you to ship no more to New Orleans, but ship to Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, giving preference in the order named. Whenever you ship a company, whether it be small or large, be careful to forward to Elder John Taylor, at New York city, a correct list of the names of the persons in each company, with their occupation, and approximate amount of property, or means, and forward it in season for Elder John Taylor to receive it before the company arrive in port, that he may be so advised as to be able to meet them, or appoint some proper person to do so, and counsel them immediately on landing as to the best course for each and all in every company to pursue—viz., whether to tarry for a season to work in the place or immediate neighborhood of their landing, or proceed to Cincinnati and its region, &c.

"In case any should still choose to ship for New Orleans, ship them from England no later than about the 1st of December, that they may be able to get off the rivers before the sickly season sets in, for many have died off with the cholera and other diseases incident to the sickly season on the rivers, and I do not wish the brethren to be so exposed as they have been; and counsel them to hurry up the rivers, and get off from them into Missouri and Iowa to work, or on the plains, as the case may be, before the warm weather sets in."

Pursuant to our instructions, as also contained in the above, we have been making inquiries as to the best and cheapest route for the conveyance of our emigration to their several places of destination, and are now in communication with some of the leading forwarding companies; and on the arrival of the saints shall be enabled to give them all the information desired in relation to this matter.

We shall, of course, receive from Elder Richards, as per instructions, a correct list of the names of the persons in each company, their occupation, means," &c., and thus be prepared in time to make arrangements, and give counsel, as to their future route or destination.

☞ These railroad and forwarding companies would find it to their interest to advertise with us; as "The Mormon" will be circulated extensively among emigrants, not only on the routes in this country, but also in Europe; and while it will give information to our own people, it will, at the same time, be the medium of communicating intelligence on this subject to thousands of others, before they arrive here as well as on the various routes afterwards.

WE have read in the New York Times a long, labored, and scurrillous article, well besprinkled with "barefaced falsehood," "filthy impostures" "knaves of Utah," "huge blasphemy," and other mild, courteous and polite epithets flowing from the chaste and virtuous bowels of our immaculate censorian. We wonder that a gentleman of such high toned moral feelings, breathing the pure un-adultery-ated (?) atmosphere of the chaste city of New York, would have tarnished his vestal purity so far as to descend from his lofty pinnacle of morality and virtue, to mouth such "filthy impostures." We think the sisterhood will demand an ablution, or a purification with the "sacred fire."

If he thinks such things will pass current among common mortals, we think he has made a great mistake, his unsupported statement and vituperation, we think, will not go far against the testimony of hundreds of honest men.

We have been at a loss to know why he should pen such an article. It could not be for the improvement of the morals of the people of Utah; for such an object can never be attained by falsehood.

If he is in the pay of his private friends, the English anti-Mormons, of whom he speaks, we think he has made a blunder; his article is too gloringly inconsistent; has too many assertions; too few facts, and is altogether too blundering to pass current among them. They have lots of penny lecturers amonget themselves, who would get up a more plausible story.

If his object is to squeeze for hush money, and he wishes to levy black mail, he is again mistaken. We never have any dealings with such gentry; we have nothing to hide; we are willing to compare Utah any day with any other part of the world, and have no secrets; and we would recommend him, before he makes another attempt, to read Howe, John C. Bennet, Turner, and a few other anti-Mormon publications that we could mention, that he may be able to make out a more plausible story: (for being lately re-introduced into the editorial corps, we begin to be ashamed of the cloth,) and hope, by a thorough examination of these various "Mormonism's Exposes" that he may be more successful next time.

We give him this gentle hint, in hopes that he will reform. If not, we shall be under the painful necessity of exposing him.

Indian Difficulties.

THE following we think a sensible view of the subject—we have always found it much easier and cheaper, to feed and clothe the Indians, than to fight them; there are, of course, exceptions to all general rules; and sometimes a little chastisement, judiciously administered, may be necessary. We are however decidedly opposed, to this reckless, indiscriminate and wanton slaughter of the Red Man. If we profess more enlightenment, than they, we ought at least, to manifest it in our acts.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 31, 1855.

The facts which have been disclosed in the House by Mr. Edgarton, and by General Houston in the Senate, in regard to the origin of the recent hostilities of the Indians, ought to render Congress very cautious in their legislation on the subject. They have not forgotten the history of the Florida War, which cost thirty millions of dollars without accomplishing any beneficial object which could not have been secured by pacific means.

If the cost of the present war is to be at all proportioned to the cost of that, it will considerably exceed the estimates of either of the belligerent Western Powers for the annual cost of the war in which they are engaged.

It will, within a few years after its commencement, cost much more than the estimated expense of the construction and equipment of the Pacific Railroad. It can be nothing short of a war of extermination, if in its progress, it is to be conducted in the spirit in which it was on our part provoked.

In view of the expenses of such a war, it becomes the imperative duty of the President to husband the public treasure, and by deferring such payment of the public debt as has been for sometime going on, to avoid the necessity of resorting to loans, especially during the present stringency of the money market. That the President will take this view of the subject there is no reasonable doubt, for no one knows better than he that the war will be vigorously prosecuted by our generals for reputation, by frontier settlers for revenge, by the contractors for profit, and by a promiscuous host of speculators, land stealers, for objects of personal cupidity.

The moment the war is once commenced, it will be beyond the control of the Commander-in-Chief of the army of the United States, and all his cabinet advisers. Calls upon Congress for men and money, for new cavalry regiments, more volunteer enlistments, more subsidies of Indian allies; for loans, and treasury notes, will become the whole burden of the Executive messages to the next Congress, and the Congress that will follow that.

The proposition of General Shields for accompanying the sword with the olive branch, is well conceived, but it would be more likely to succeed if negotiation should precede a preparation for hostilities. For when preparation is made, the war interests will not be foiled.—[Cor. of the Baltimore Sun.

Sandwich Islands.

"The news from the Sandwich Islands, received by the Star of the West, is to the 17th ult. The most important piece of intelligence is the death of Kamehameha III., at the age of forty-one years and nine months. He is succeeded by Prince Alexander Liholiho, his nephew, a young copper-colored gentleman of some education, who assumes the title of Kamehameha IV. Prince Liholiho and his brother visited this country several years ago with Dr. Judd, who was once an American Missionary, and at that time a leading member of the late king's cabinet. They stopped at the Irving House, Broadway, and received the visits of many of our citizens. After visiting several cities they went to Europe. While in this country the present king was not allowed to sit at the supper table with the other passengers on board one of the Sound Steamers, on her passage between New York and Boston, in consequence of his color. This incident, it is said, had such effect on the mind of the Prince that he refused to join the annexation policy of his uncle."

We have been informed that there are parties now in Washington from California, who are landed proprietors in the Sandwich Islands whose object is to further the anexation project. If, as we understand, they are desirous to have them come into the Union with certain restrictive conditions, precluding them from the elective-franchise because of their copper-color, we would not blame our young Prince for being opposed to anexation. He would have stronger reasons to be offended, than at the slight put upon him on the Sound Steamer. We think we would rather be a King even on the Sandwich Islands, than to resign ourselves subjects, and posterity, to slavery for the honor of being annexed to this free and enlightened Republic.

New Postal Bill.

THERE is a bill now before Congress, appropriating $500,000 annually, for the conveyance of a daily express mail through Utah to California. It is to commence within one year after the contract, which is to be for four years. The time allowed for the first year is twenty days the trip; for the second year, eighteen days; and the remaining two years sixteen. It makes way-letters 50 cents—the same amount as letters going the whole distance.

Such legislation we protest against as being partial, unjust, and oppressive.

In the first place, if Utah had not been established by the industry and perseverance of that people where it is, it would have cost five times the above amount to have taken a mail through; and, again, is it honorable to make a convenience of the Mormons, and then charge them double the amount of others for that convenience.

While on this subject we must notice another. Congress called upon the Mormons in the Mexican war to send a battalion of five hundred men. They did so, and arrived in California just as their services were needed. Gen. Kearney well knows their value. They call on them to do the fighting, and then give to foreigners of every grade, land, and rob their own citizens of that for which they fought. Is this just? is it equal? is it honorable? We leave it for Congress to reply.

We hope before it passes, these things will be taken into consideration.

We shall publish the bill next week.

We approve of the bill, with these exceptions; but think the time is too short. Twenty days is quite little enough. We don't think it can be run in less time in winter, any year. A shorter time will defeat its object, if Independence, Mo., is the starting point.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions and spread it to the ends of the earth.

UTAH LAND SURVEYS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Feb. 1, 1855.

The bill establishing the office of Surveyor-General at Utah, and granting lands to actual settlers therein, was taken up. This occasioned a long debate last session, involving the question of polygamy, when Mr. Bernhisel said the more wives a man has the more necessity for homesteads.

Yesterday, while in Committee, the enacting clause was stricken out, which prevented the resumption of the debate. This morning the question was stated on concurring in this action of the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., expressed a hope that the House would pass the bill, meeting out the same justice to Utah as to the other Territories.

Mr. Peckham—Is not the bill to encourage polygamy?

CRIES—"Yes;" "No, no." (Great confusion.)

Mr. Keith—Is it not designed to put the people of Utah on the same footing as those of other Territories?

Mr. Benson—Is polygamy recognized in any other Territory?

CRIED—"No."

Mr. McMuller moved to lay the bill on the table.

The House struck out the enacting clause by a vote of 109 against 74, which is equivalent to the loss of the bill.

Mr. Phelps moved the reconsideration of the vote, intending if the motion prevailed to propose striking out from the bill the provisions donating the lands. Recently, the Executive has appointed another Governor entertaining different religious opinions from Brigham Young. The people of Utah have the right to complain if Congress does not make provisions for the survey of the lands. If you do not donate the lands, give them the privilege to buy. He was willing to make the grants.

Mr. Benson wished to know whether the friends of the bill approved of the course suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. Phelps replied he made the suggestion without consultation.

Mr. Bernhisel preferred Mr. Phelps' motion should not prevail. We only, he said, ask to be placed on an equal footing with the people of other Territories.

Mr. Disney said the public interests were paramount to the consideration mentioned by the delegate from Utah. Provision should at once be made for a survey of the lands in that Territory.

Mr. Haven concurred in the views of Mr. Disney. The House objected to the bill because of the domestic institution in Utah which tolerates bigamy. He thought the House ought to meet the question now. He desired to move an additional section disapproving and declaring null and void all the laws in the Territory allowing a man to have more than one wife at a time.

Mr. McMullen was willing to give the people of Utah all they are entitled to, but would not grant lands until they enact a code of good morals.

Mr. Phelps' motion was agreed to.

Mr. Disney proposed a substitute for the bill, merely retaining the provisions relative to the establishment of the office of a Surveyor-General in Utah, and granting lands for schools and University purposes.

He moved the previous question.

Mr. Haven appealed to him to withdraw his motion, so that he might submit an amendment of the character he had indicated.

Mr. Disney fully appreciated the commendable zeal of the gentleman to place on record his opinion of Mormonism, but this was not the time. He (Mr. Disney) wanted to exclude all extraneous matters.

Mr. Disney's amendment was adopted, and the bill passed.

Mr. Houston moved that the House go into Committee on the bill reducing the Tariff, but subsequently, after some conversation, withdrew the motion, giving notice that he will renew it as a test question on next Wednesday, when the House adjourned.—[N. Y. Daily Times.

In looking over the above, we were highly amused to see the excitement among so many of our dignified Statesmen, and upon a "trifling Territorial bill" too. It reminds one of an expression made by the celebrated John Randolph, when, in opposition to the manufacturing interests of the North, he said, "I would go a mile out of my way to kick a sheep;" or a later remark from a celebrated member, upon the bill for a Pacific telegraph, "that the Indians of the plains would dig up the wires to catch lizards with." With what parental interest these modern "Vestals" watch over the morals and future welfare of our country. Shades of the departed Patriarchs, and fathers of the faith! with what mortification you must compare your lives with these Patriarchs of modern times. Should you, in your visits to mortals, chance to venture within the shades of that immaculate capitol, think not that your reception would be better than the visitors of Lot.

But what is it that causes the excitement and so much pro'undity? Is it that the virtue of this great nation is at stake? The pure soil to mar, the purity of the parents' Oh shame on the insinuation of so much weakness in our country's morals; and [illegible] by the guardians of her honor. "'Tis the best cut of all."

And it is but a "trifling Territorial bill," and one of the honorable members cries out, "Is not this bill to encourage polygamy?" Well, this would seem to be a new feature in land bills never before discovered, that the originator of such bills little dreamed of. And pray, Mr. P., how is the bill to encourage polygamy? Is it a production of the soil, that you fear it will overspread the land? Have land bills produced this result in other Territories, that while they professedly do not believe in it, yet they practice it? Mr. P., your sagacity and virtue entitle you to a seat next term.

Mr. K. asks, "If the bill is not designed to put the people of Utah on the same footing as other Territories?" Why, certainly; was not the "organic act," making Utah a Territory, given for that purpose? And why should it not be on the same footing as other Territories? Is it because they have their "peculiar institutions?" Mr. K., hurt not the "oil and the wine," lest others suffer also. Are you an advocate of centralization, or do you go in for popular sovereignty?

Another profound question from Mr. Benson, "Is polygamy recognized in any other Territory?" Well, Mr. B., we really don't know; but you know it is recognized in all our large cities and towns, many of which contain more inhabitants than all Utah, and you have never asked the like question of any of them. Now, with all due deference, Mr. B., we suggest the propriety of putting a similar question before the passage of every bill, to every member, from Maine to Texas.

Mr. Havens' proposition to declare null and void certain laws, is good, in case they have such laws in Utah, and provided, he will apply the same to all the States, as well as Territories of the Union.

I beg the honorable gentleman's pardon, for the insinuation; I would not venture to lift the veil, nor cast a single reproach; but poor Utah has been the target so long, that we really think your fire should be turned to those that are older and stronger, and better able to bear it.

We think Mr. H. will not be mistaken for a "Mormon."

Mr. McMullen, we appreciate your liberality; Utah only asks for what she is entitled to; "but you would not grant lands until she enacts a code of good morals." But speak softly, Mr. M.; Utah is yet young, and may improve. Perhaps a little good council from the "Old Dominion" would be very appropriate. Your proposition of a "code of good morals" for Utah forcibly reminds us of "a good-humored joke" between certain members of the Upper House.

Toombs says to Gillett, "They say, Gillett, that you abolitionists are mad with the Almighty for making the niggers black." "Your informant is slightly mistaken," replied Gillett; "we are only mad with you slaveholders for making them white."

Now we respectfully suggest that the honorable gentleman from Virginia, unite with the honorable gentleman from New York, and get up a code that will apply either side of Mason & Dixon's; and we feel quite confident that the States will all adopt it, even as far West as California; and perhaps to the Sandwich Islands.

Why Don't the People go out West?

THIS is a question that we have often had put to us by men who are acquainted with Western resources. The Western country certainly affords a vast field for men of enterprise and perseverance, and a desirable outlet for millions of the surcharged population of the Eastern cities. There are millions of acres of rich land, occupied only, by deer, antelope, buffalo, and Indians, that need only the plough, the hoe, the axe, and the spade; coupled with the industry of man, to develop its resources and pour forth into the lap of the laborer, in rich profusion, the blessings of a bounteous earth.

There is no need of going to California to find land; there is some thousands of miles of land to travel over to get there: land on the hills, land in the valleys, land on the mountains, land on the plains, land on the prairies, land by the rivers, land with wood and water, and land without either—it is all land. And if we shrink from the red man, and are afraid of the buffalo, elk, and wolf, we can go to Nebraska and Kansas; we shall find in many parts a rich fertile country, abounding in water, with more or less timber, according to location. And if this is too new, there are millions of acres in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota; and if a man don't want to be a squatter, a pioneer, or to break up new ground, there are thousands of farms already under cultivation, that can be bought at a reasonable price; and if this does not suit, they can be worked on shares, either with team and seed found, or without. These things are well known to Western men, and hence when they hear of hard times, a cry for work, as many as 15,000 out of employ in New York, and a proportionate ratio in other cities; when they hear of subscriptions for the poor, soup kitchens, calico balls, and all the other unnatural, though philanthropic means, that are resorted to, to supply the wants of a famishing people, arising from the artificial state of society that exists in these large cities, they very naturally inquire, Why don't the people go out West? Why don't they seek to develop the resources of the soil? Why don't they aim at more rational employment? Why are there so very many consumers, and so few to supply? Why have we to pay such high prices for bread, and so much land lying waste? In England, France, Germany, Switzerland, and most, or all of the European countries, there would be some excuse for this; in ours, none. The laborer in those countries cannot obtain land; in ours they can. Lands here, are within the reach of every persevering, industrious man.

It is true that the withering influence of speculation has put its blight upon our manufacturing and commercial interests; but, as in the latter, so in the former, we generally have a purging every few years, and things come down from their artificial and nominal, to their real value; people then leave their phantoms, and shadows, and come down to sober realities. These things operate more against States than individuals, as may be seen in many parts of Illinois and Iowa. There is, however, land enough for all; a very great amount in market, and very few buyers. Why don't some of our philanthropists turn their attention to these facts? Why, even our land speculators might make themselves rich by affording facilities to poor and industrious men, if they had to take them out and give them some land. The fact of a settlement would enhance the value of the remainder, and amply repay them. People speculate in every thing—why not try something for the good of humanity, especially when by judicious arrangement they can, by doing others good, do themselves good at the same time.

It is true that there have been some feeble efforts at emigration from Massachusetts and other places, in the shape of "Emigration Aid Societies;" but then they are fettered by party policy and political interests. They are necessarily placed in an unpleasant position with other partisans, who are also brought there, subservient to other political parties, and who feel equally as zealous, and in many instances, instead of being able quietly to pursue their calling, and procure bread for their families; they find themselves entangled in the broils of those, through whose agency they are thus located; and in the room of [illegible] at home, frequently find themselves [illegible] sion of broken heads and bloody noses. Why not leave things to take their natural course free and untrammelled? Why will the people mount these old political hacks? Why have they not independence enough to be free, and leave political demagogues to pull their own wires and fight their own battles? We say—Emigrate, but go untrammelled by political influence.

☞ We are obliged to omit several communications for want of room.

Correspondence.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, Dec. 26, 1854.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR BRO. TAYLOR: I have received, per Elder Clinton, your prospectus of the MORMON, and shall endeavor to raise you a number of subscribers, for certainly so laudible an undertaking is deserving of effectual encouragement. Judging from the character of your former publications, the MORMON cannot fail to be of particular interest to the Latter Day Saints, and not unworthy the attention of the general reader. The History of Mormonism is fraught with incidents of singular, sublime, romantic, and tragic interest. The bright side of our story presents a picture of unparalleled success in spreading the gospel, an unexampled prosperity in building cities, rearing temples and organizing religious and political government. The first has had to contend with superstition, prejudice, strong and formidable societies, and persecution in all its various shapes. The second has been organized out of the debris of a population scattered through religious persecution into a Territory, forming a political organization, united, intelligent, strong and energetic; where there is more equality, more prosperity, and less want and suffering than is exhibited in any other State or Territory. The one has been calumniated by priests and religious bigots; the other by interested sixpenny politicians; both court light and enquiry, and are at the defiance of religious or political demagogues; and both are living examples of the mercy of God to his people, and a striking illustration of the power of truth over error.

Twenty-four years ago and the church of Christ numbered only six members; but they were valiant souls, of sterling integrity, unwavering faith, and of an unyielding perseverance in the cause of truth—men of God, approved of the Almighty, and being dictated by the revelations of Jesus, they have laid the foundation of a system that is destined to revolutionize the world—to circumscribe the universe. They and their coadjutors have gone forth simple and unlettered, to contend against the talents of a learned hireling clergy, who have stepped promptly forward to rescue their crumbling crafts from threatened ruin. But they were soon forced to the conclusion that scripture and reason were not the weapons with which to successfully oppose the work of God, and tar and feathers, fire and sword, have been seized upon as more potent and more effectual arguments. As the cause of truth has steadily progressed among the nations, the powers of darkness have increased in a parallel ratio. The devil has looked with an uneasy jealousy on the progress of righteousness. It threatens to overthrow his long cherished institutions; it is a dangerous encroachment on his long established usages, a fearful rebellion among his hitherto loyal subjects, a determined opposition to his laws, that have filled the mind of his Satanic majesty with fearful apprehensions for the safety of his kingdom. God grant that his worst fears may be speedily realized, that we soon may witness the entire overthrow of wickedness and the establishment of universal righteousness.

Success to the "Mormon." May it go boldly forth on its hallowed mission, removing the ignorant prejudices of the masses, reanimating the cold and lukewarm Saints, and giving an accelerated impetus to the massive wheels of Time. More anon.

CHAS. H. BASSETT.

N. B. We shall be pleased to hear from Elder Bassett often.—[ED.

BOSTON, Jan. 28, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

PRESIDENT TAYLOR—Dear Sir: According to promise I sit down to write, but I can assure you it would be much more natural for me to sit down and spin a good yarn, than write for a paper; but as I promised, here's at it:

I feel it rather a new business to go out into the world, and preach the gospel without purse or scrip, I can box the compass with any man, and take a ship to any part of the world; but to lead a corrupt world from error to truth, seems a more difficult matter: however I find that truth is not without its influence, for a number of my friends are believing my testimony and I don't see why they should not; for Mormonism has more truth in it than any system I have met with; it is surely Zion's ship, and the only one to take you safe to port. I feel happy in the religion I have embraced, and would like others to share the same blessing. I meet with a good many breakers but I think the old ship will weather it through.

This place, however, is not the valley. They think we are a strange set, and I think they are. I have been to Cape Cod since I left you, and met many of my old friends of the craft; they think it a curious thing for me to turn preacher; and in fact I think so myself.

Religion here is rather at a low ebb, and infidelity prevails to a great extent: people used to believe the Bible; but now when I talk of proving doctrines and principles from the Bible, I am frequently told to prove the Bible true, to commence with. I don't know, however, that there is much difference between them and others who profess to believe it: professors believe it when shut, and disbelieve it open: they discredit the whole—well, I suppose we shall have to prove the good old chart is true. I think it shows many of the rocks, shoals and quicksands very clearly that are now manifest in the world, on which they are now foundering.

We have here a general mixture of all sorts of professions and theories; a regular conglomeration of Infidelity, Christianity, Spiritualism, Mesmerism, Know Nothingism, and every kind of craft, and I think many of them sailing under false colors.

I rejoice that the Lord has opened my eyes and delivered me from the folly and nonsense that everywhere abounds, and that he has given me a quiet resting-place in Zion. The joy and peace that I now experience and the certainity in regard to a safe anchorage in the future, I would not exchange for all the gaudy tinsel of this world, or all the honor associated with all the popular systems of the day.

I am anxious to see "The Mormon," and shall send you as many subscribers as I can. You shall hear from me soon.

Yours in the E. C.,

ALEXANDER ROBBINS.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: According to promise I take up my pen to write, and as I am not much of a scribbler, I do it with very much diffidence.

Since my appointment to this place I have been laboring according to the best of my ability to build up the interests of Zion, in this city and in the branches around. I have found that the Saints in this country are doing as well as could be expected under efisting circumstances. It is true they have not had the teaching that we enjoy in the Valley; but there is in general a good spirit prevailing, and a desire to fulfill the law of God in all things.

Elder Harrison of Philadelphia, and the other presiding elders, as well as the officers generally have been faithful in the discharge of their various duties, and we are now organizing, and putting things on a more efficient footing; we calculate to extend our preaching operations, as we have had numbers of invitations, both around and in the city, that will afford ample opportunities for our young elders to exercise their abilities on. You will be pleased to learn that we baptized seven the Tuesday after you were here, and a spirit of enquiry prevails. I find that people in general do not understand us, or our principles; they have from representation considered us to be very corrupt; but upon a comparison of our principles with theirs, they generally shrink from the investigation. I do not blame people for thinking we are corrupt; for having no other data to judge from but their own low debased standard of virtue, and being surrounded with lasciviousness, prostitution and infamy; they naturally think that any thing associated with plurality must partake of the above loathsome vices; and they of course have no correct idea of the nature and relationship of the marriage covenant, either as it regards time or eternity.

Your paper is anxiously looked for; we shall all hail it as a messenger of joy. I expect to write next week. Yours in the E. C.,

J. CLINTON.

FROM MADRAS IN THE EAST INDIES.

IT will be seen by the following, that our old friend Elder Richard Ballantyne is on his way from the East, and expected we were in the Valley. We anticipated the pleasure of a visit from him en route for the Valley; but learn by an enclosed note that he is leaving Liverpool in charge of a ship load of Saints for New Orleans en route for the Valley.

Bro. Ballantyne has labored faithfully and untiringly in the East Indies, and we have always read his correspondence with very much interest; and, deprived of his anticipated visit, we can only wish him a speedy and safe return to the bosom of his family, and to that Zion which he loves.

Success to the "Mormon." May it go boldly forth on its hallowed mission, removing the ignorant prejudices of the masses, reanimating the cold and lukewarm Saints, and giving an accelerated impetus to the massive wheels of Time. More anon.

If Bro. B. can find time we should be pleased to hear of some of his reminescences in the East.—[ED.

MOUTH OF THE THAMES,
ABOUT 50 MILES FROM LONDON,
December 3d, 1854.

MY WELL-BELOVED BROTHER,—It is with much pleasure that I now sit down to write a little for our mutual comfort. It is Sabbath morning, and while you are, no doubt, sitting under the teachings of God's servants in Zion, I may be excused in thus improving a few leisure moments.

I am well, and I hope through the blessings of our God and Father that yourself and family enjoy good health.

It is about nineteen weeks since I came on board this ship, at Madras, in the East Indies. Our voyage was excellent till we came near the Azores, or Western Islands, when we had to contend with head winds. My health began to improve shortly after I came out to sea. In Madras my constitution was completely shattered; but now, through the marvellous kindness and love of my God, I am as well as I ever felt since I have been in this estate. I have not words to express my joy and gratitude to God for bringing me, several times, from the very verge of the grave. But I feel to consecrate myself anew to His service who hath loved me, and gave himself for me.

I have experienced much since I entered upon this ministry that I trust has proven a great blessing to my soul, and has greatly improved my experience of the goodness and mercy of the Lord. He has ever been faithful. I would that all men knew this. I have been nearly round the globe in the service of my Maker, and I can bear this testimony, that I have never lacked for food, and raiment, and conveyance to carry me from nation to nation, and from one country to another people.

While I was in Madras the Lord was ever near to provide relief; and nearly all that was put into my heart I was able to accomplish. Why I say nearly all is, because on account of the peculiar circumstances of one or two friends, I was not enabled to complete the arrangements that I thought necessary to give an impetus to the work in that country. I was anxious to have ordained a Mr. Mills, formerly a Baptist preacher, to the holy priesthood, that he might have been an instrument in translating the truth into the Samil language, and of preaching to the Hindoos and Mahomedans in that language. He, however, was getting out of the employ of the Missionaries in a few days, and he pledged me his word that he would shortly be baptised by Brother Skelton. We had, previous to my leaving, ordained a Bro. McCarthy (formerly also a preacher) to the office of an Elder. He promised to translate, or write a proclamation of the gospel, to be published in the Selagoo tongue. He is a young man of excellent education, a good preacher, and I trust may be of some service in making manifest the gospel, to that benighted people.

My beloved Bro. Skelton, who had been exceedingly faithful, I left in charge of the work. He intended to visit Bangalore, and some other important stations, in the interior of the country.

The progress of the work in Madras, and other parts of India, had been so small while I was there, that President Jones said we might leave Madras, and go where we chose. We had the satisfaction of his testimony, and of a clear conscience, that we had been faithful, and had done our duty to that people; nevertheless, we still felt to made a further effort for the poor benighted nations of India. But I could not tarry, as my vital organs were so seriously impaired as to leave but little hope of my ever recruiting in that oppressive climate.

I am now near London, and hope in a few days to be in a country, where, with a more healthy constitution, and the blessings of the Holy Spirit, I may do something for the glory of God.

Though we are often repulsed from society, and have our names cast out as evil, and are accounted as the worst of men, and the most obnoxious of society, yet there is a joy and a glory in the testimony of Jesus, which the world knows nothing of. I do praise the name of our God, that I was ever accounted worthy of the gospel, and of bearing it to others. It is a sweet and a glorious calling.

Though a messenger of salvation to the nations has to forfeit the society of Zion—of teachers, Saints, and family—yet God is with us; and though we go down into hell He is there, and we can pass through the fire not only unscorched, but with praises in our hearts. True, Bro. Brigham says that in Zion the Saints can walk by sight, but it is an excellent thing, and most precious, to learn to walk by faith. Then the whirlwinds may howl: the tempests may blow: and all the elements may conspire for our destruction; but when God is near all is well. Those who learn to cherish the Holy Spirit, and know its voice, and walk by it, can never be deceived nor destroyed till God shall permit it.

Perhaps, my brother, you might be better satisfied with this letter were I to have given you a detail of circumstances and events, instead of thus expressing the feelings of my heart; but you know it is good to unbosom our feelings to a friend, and therefore I hope you will excuse me being thus general.

I would here say that I have written more minutely to others, and think it will be my duty to write a report to President Young when I arrive in London or Liverpool. So, all together, you may learn as much as may be necessary.

I would here say that I trust myself and brethren are not forgotten by you. We need your prayers, and I believe there is great efficacy in them. So long as we could meet in unison abroad, we found great comfort and certainty in all that we undertook; and shall we not, therefore, consider that the priesthood in Zion shall be heard in our behalf. I can assure you, my brother, that the darkness is such as may be felt, even by those who are not very sensitive, and I have thought that some of our brilliant lights in Zion might be apt to make an explosion in the world. At any rate, it seems to be the policy to keep the more experienced at home, that Zion may be polished, after the similitude of a palace.

The wars in Europe are trying the rulers to the very centre. All their ingenuity is taxed, and they hardly know what to do. Russia is prosecuting the war with an iron constitution. Her skill and resources far exceed what was calculated, upon by England and France. They are perplexed, and general disappointment fills the minds of the English people. The Navy in the Black Sea, and Baltic, have not done what was expected. A great slaughter of Turkish, French, English, and Russian troops, has taken place during the summer. There is no prospect of the war ending. Inextricable difficulties are presenting themselves to the European governments.

I could write much, but I must stop. Suffice it to say, that God is visiting the nations with a sore vexation. I think often of your quiet and peaceable resting place in the mountains. Love to all. Amen. May God bless you and family, and all saints in the name of Jesus. RICHARD BALLANTYNE.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

WARNING TO THE PUBLIC.

QUACKOLOGY.

THE following curious document was put into our hands, which we publish for the information of the public:

THE
THE PRODUCE OF A
Mineral Spring in the Mormon Country
NEAR THE VALLEY OF THE GREAT SALT LAKE.

TO THE BRETHREN AND THE PUBLIC.

This product of Nature has long been known among the roving tribes of Indians in Utah and New Mexico, and is believed to be the gift of the GREAT MANITOU to the Red men for the cure of all diseases to which flesh is heir.

It has lately been extensively used among the Saints as an external application, with most wonderful effects. When thus used it penetrates into the system, thoroughly cleansing the Fibres and Blood of all impurities, and imparting new vigor and life to the sick, the suffering, the lame and the afflicted.

For all forms of Rheumatic Diseases, for Lumbago and Diseases of the Kidneys, Throat and Neck, for Stiffness and diseases of the Joints and Bones, for Sprains, and Swellings and for all Pains and Internal Inflamations, it is found to be an infallible cure.

A desire that our land may be known and its blessings shared by all, has induced us at great expense to ourselves, to authorize some friends to export it into the States; and at the most trifling cost to the public we leave it to their trial and judgment, believing that a discerning people will discriminate between articles which are spurious or worthless, and one on which Nature's-self has fixed the signet of Truth.

Yours in love,
BRIGHAM YOUNG,
VINCENTE ARAGO, M.D.

UTAH, May 11th, 1854.

For Sale at the Drug Stores generally.
Orders Directed to WILLIS & Co., Agents,
No. 13 Bible House, Astor Place.

We have had all kinds of religious quacks and counterfeits, but this is the first that we have seen of a medical quack counterfeit under the head of Mormonism, and is one of the most barefaced impudent things that we have seen.

This universal panacea, we know nothing about, and although we only left Salt Lake last September, we never heard of its being used, either by Indians or Mormons. We don't believe that Brigham Young ever signed his name to such a document. We believe it all an imposition; but if Mr. Arago, M. D., will prove to the contrary, we will contradict this assertion.

N. B. The Utes have a "Shinob," but know no "Manitou."

Col. Steptoe.

"The Brigadier President has more shrewdness, in some matters, than he has credit for by the public generally. He was constantly importuned by the place hunters and their friends, and the traders of Illinois and Missouri, who pass over the plains between Missouri and California, to remove Brigham Young, the Governor of Utah Territory. He did not wish to comply with these importunities. He did not like to displace Brigham Young. Still he did not wish to get the ill-will and the opposition of those who were constantly importuning him to remove the bigamist. So, to seem willing and anxious to please and gratify them, and at the same time to so act in the matter as to give pleasure to Brigham Young and his friends, and to secure to Brigham a permanance in his office, the Brigadier President appoints Colonel Steptoe, of the army, Governor of Utah, knowing positively all the time that the gallant colonel will not accept the appointment, and that Brigham Young will hold on to his office until some other person shall be appointed to supersede him, who will accept the appointment and be qualified. However much this step may prove revolting to the moral sense of the American public, it has been deliberately taken by the President of the United States (with perhaps the advice of his friend Forney) with the view of continuing Brigham Young in his office, and of making good Brigham's boast, that 'let them appoint my successor and I will still be Governor of Utah.'

"Mr. Burnhisel, the delegate in Congress from Utah, if he will speak his true sentiments on the subject, will not deny that he was satisfied the President did not design the displacement of Brigham Young at the time he appointed Colonel Steptoe, of the army, to that post. Colonel Forney is yet a young man. We have all read his letter to Roberts on the subject of the Forrest divorce case. It may be that he will yet thrive in Utah when that Territory shall become a State of this Union. His principles, are expressed in the letter to Roberts, will be no bar to his advancement among the bigamist. But what becomes of the censures of the Brigadier and his partizans hurled against the late President Fillmore for appointing such a man as Brigham Young to the gubernatorial chair of Utah? What will Colonel Steptoe conclude when his appointment, which is now purposely lying over at Independence, Missouri, and cannot reach him for a month yet—what conclusion will he come to relative to the use which has been made of his name, and the motive therefor?"—[New York Herald.

The brains of the writer of this article, must have "gone wool hunting," so far as any sense, at all, can be discovered in it. Who, says that the traders of Missouri and Illinois to California want Brigham Young removed? I have passed over the plains several times, and I have yet to learn that Brigham Young has ever placed any impediment in the way of travellers, through Utah. But there has been abundance of evidence from emigrants in California written to friends in the East, to prove his gentlemanly courtesy, and readiness to advise to the best interest of the stranger passing through Salt Lake. We believe there are very many in the States, whole soul'd men, who have crossed the plains; who have independance enough to express their sentiments, and are not afraid of compromising their political or moral popularity; by expressing this tribute at least to the character of Gov. Young. But pray what interest has President Pierce, so much at heart, that he is so "willing and anxious to give pleasure to Brigham Young and friends?" Would our wool gatherer imply that President Pierce is favorable to the "peculiar institutions" of the Mormon's, as well as the gallant Col. referred to? Oh! pshaw! such suppositions in the pure atmosphere of Washington. No it can't be that. It must be in anticipation of the two future members of the Senate Chamber; but even this cannot be, for there it will be too late, for any log-rolling to serve in the next campaign. Well I am quite at a loss to guess what this writer could possibly have conjured up in his cranium. It seems more like the effervescence of Backsnalian fumes, than the clear sound sense of an inteligent letter-writer. And then to think that the President, "perhaps with the advice of his friend Forney," and of course in solemn conclave with his friend B, (the delegate from Utah) "of making good, Brigham's boast &c." Why, Brigham, congratulate yourself in the high attainments you have so unwittingly acquired, in swaying the power of so great a nation. And then "Col. Steptoe's appointment purposely laying over at Independence." Why really President Pierce, your power over the elements are remarkable; you should not have done this, for you have blocked up all our railroads out West, in which among other misfortunes while piled up in snow they, ate up all our supply of oysters for the Western market; and of course President Pierce you need not expect the oyster eaters out West, to vote for you.

"Oh consistency, thou art a jewel."

I beg my friends will not suggest me for the next Chief Magistracy.

THE new Mayor of this city, Mr. Wood, is making himself quite popular, and we think if promptness, energy, and diligence are recommendations for that office, he is truly deserving. We believe it is the only way in which order can be established in this great city.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tachez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

From Upper Canada.

We have received word from Wm. Copy, Shakespeare Post Office, U. C., with an order for books, and a long communication which we have not room to insert. The following is the substance:

Elder Waugh left there a few weeks ago and is now preaching in London, C. W. Elders Sly, and Gastin, are laboring in the neighborhood of Camboro and five have been baptized lately and others believing. Priests are very angry. (Nothing very strange in that Ed.) In regard to enquiry about Books, we shall publish a list to which we refer.

Concerning inquiries and statements in regard to Strangism, it is not Mormonism. The gentleman's statement that Mr. Strang was appointed by Joseph Smith, when he was in Carthage Jail, is false. We were with Joseph Smith, from the time that he entered Carthage Jail until he was killed, and received four balls in the body; we have reason to remember those times and know positively that no such appointment was made. Mr. Strang, professed to have a letter from Joseph Smith, whether he forged it or somebody else we don't know; but we know it was forged. It had a postage stamp of Nauvoo on, but it was a forgery, we examined the various P. O. stamps ourselves, and compared it with the letter which was shown to us, by one of Strang's followers. It was neither the same type, or ink as that used in Nauvoo.

Mr. Strang may be the dupe of others; we don't know; we never knew him; if not, he is a base impostor; we believe many of their followers are good men; but in error. We have no quarrel with them; but do not wish to be confounded with their system. We have noticed these things years ago and do not wish now to enter into details.

We shall be glad to receive communications from Elder Waugh, and request him, Elders Sly and Gustin, to act as Agents for THE MORMON.

☞ We shall attend to the request of John A. Jost, PRESIDENT OF THE NOVA SCOTIA MISSION. Send all the subscribers you can. The parties will get the information in THE MORMON.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

I'll Be A Saint.

BY LOUISA BRADFORD.

I'll be a Saint, in Israel's God believing,
Whose power and wisdom fram'd the universe;
From whom I'm life, and health, and strength receiving:
His matchless praises, Oh! my soul rehearse.

I'll be a Saint—His Son, my Savior loving,
He my affection's prime object shall be,
And Oh! what care I for the world's reproving,
He loves, and manifests His love to me.

I'll be a Saint—the Holy Ghost beseeching,
In this frail tabernacle to abide;
I thirst for his divine effectual teaching
Into all truth my willing soul to guide.

I'll be a Saint—the men of God obeying,
With heavenly wisdom, light, and knowledge fill'd;
No proud self-will, nor stubbornness displaying,
To them will I in meek submission yield.

I'll be a Saint—for that same faith contending,
Deliver'd once to Saints of early days;
The faith the holy martyrs died defending,
E'en in the lighted faggot's fearful blaze.

I'll be a Saint—in Jesus' knowledge growing,
Unto salvation, that can make me wise;
Not to the flesh, but to the Spirit sowing,
That I eternal life may realize.

I'll be a Saint—with pure and genuine feeling,
Loving the people of Jehovah's choice;
To whom He is His purposes revealing,
Who knowing, cheerfully obey His voice.

I'll be a Saint—the glorious Gospel spreading;
From house to house the "printed word" I'll bear,
With sisters dear, reproach or scorn not dreading,
And warn my neighbors; for the end is near.

I'll be a Saint—out of great Bab'lon fleeing,
To Zion's land, all other lands above;
The mighty God, my lorn condition seeing,
Will shortly open up my way in love.

I'll be a Saint—and go on to perfection;
And, should I sleep before the Lord appears,
May I have part in the first resurrection,
And live and reign with Him a thousand years.

THE WAY THINGS ARE DONE OUT WEST.

We extract the following from the "Council Bluff Bugle:" allowing a little for the ideal and hyperbol, which, by the by, is very much mixed up with our Western affairs, and a small spice of fitful imagery; we are persuaded that it is a pretty fair representation of their doings westward, at least as much so as many of our modern works, "founded upon facts." Who this Mr. Doesticks, Jr., is, we have not been informed, but should not be surprised if he was related as near as second cousin to our friend, J. E. Johnson, of the Bugle. It at least smacks strongly of his humor, and is not unlike some of his freaks delineating western scenery. He is an old and experienced pioneer, a close observer of Western customs and habits, and quite a popular writer.

Doesticks, Jr., Visits Nebraska.

Having noticed by the newspapers that my old dad, the veritable Doesticks, had arrived at Bellevue, in Nebraska, I determined, at all hazards, to visit my masculine parent, and attend the election, notwithstanding my friends were alarmed for my safety, considering my youth and inexperience. Started at sunrise in St. Mary's express train—(by the bye, I find that the sun rises an hour earlier here than in Narrow street,)—which consisted of an ox team and two hand-carts; arrived at St. Mary's in good time, found it to be a great place for a place (in a dry season.) Found at home two Frenchmen, one German, three women, five children, and one dog—no relation to Bull Dogge. Went down to ferry. The Nebraska, an excellent boat—good for nothing, though a great ornament to the river—steam down below zero, where it has been for six months, and no go. Went a mile below, took water in a "dug-out," with an Indian at the paddle and two Frenchmen pushing behind. Capsized three times, swallowed a quart of muddy water, lost my hat and umbrella, and waded the river without accident—concluded Jordan was a hard road to travel. Met two mountaineers and a half-breed, at landing; asked me if I came over to vote; said all the voters in Iowa had arrived, said there was plenty of fine Irish whiskey at the Agency—(took me for a bog-trotter just landed.) Half-breed gave wolf-skin cap on condition I voted his ticket, with promise of a poney as soon as he could steal one. Called for a hack, and was told I might have a wheelbarrow provided I would propel it. Got awful mad, and walked two miles across the bottom, (the water had all dried up,) to the city, (wonder if dad was ever in such a fix;) entered the city head of Main street, walked on, anxiously looking for houses, and the Sarpy House in particular. Concluded I had overlooked them, went back, looked close, and found Black Smith Barracks, dilapidated agency, trading house, (thought if not traded off soon owner wouldn't realize cost and repairs,) Mission House, Indian cabin, barrel of whiskey, and a dozen squaws with naked half white pappooses. Naked Indian, with breech clout on, and a quart of beads around his neck, grasped my hand with a "cuggy how," asked for money, said "whiskey good." Frenchman half drunk, said he had fine imported krout for dinner, asked me to dine with him, (took me for a Dutchman,) said Giddinfis was the man, was opposed to the Nebraska bill, and was down on Omaha and the Governor. Said the German women were nearly as pretty as the Omaha squaws, and much better than Americans. Pulled out a bottle of Riley liquor and offered to treat. Told him I had plenty of Missouri water already. Said I needn't get riled about it, for he had just paid a dollar for it.

Asked for Doesticks; said he had arrived and would be there directly. Small officious man with big gold chain asked me to vote. Told him I lived in Narrow street, New York. Said Doesticks had just arrived from same place, had voted, and I had a constitutional right to vote as I pleased and do as I pleased; said I was a freeman, and not a slave. Said it was a free country, where a Chinaman was as good as a white man—(took me for a Chinaman on account of the coon's tail queue on my cap.) Said it should be the glory of foreigners to come here to teach impudent Americans that they were knaves and fools. Beardless young man, with white pants, and pen above his ear, came up, began to talk rapidly, said he knew everything, and more too; that he had come a great way to regulate affairs in Nebraska, and he intended to do it. Said the Governor had refused him the "hush" required, and he would sink him in the "slough of despond." Said he could out-talk, out-write, out-look, and out-do generally, any man west of Big Muddy; that he could manufacture Mortons of gas per minute than the New York gas factory, and wound up his oratory by declaring himself the immortal, immaculate, true, the veritable and original, the feared and admired, the witty and genuine Doesticks. Horror of wonders!—this is my good young dad! What monstrous impossibility! I saw at a glance he was a vile cheat, a spurious article, a counterfeit presentment, a bogus coin, a false imitation of the reality. Oh! shades of Hamlet's ghost and Granny Stubbs, what impudence!

Concluded not to contradict him, but let him swell; thought he would burst soon; knew he would, "from a remark he made." Said he'd go it or bust.

Half-breed handed roun[illegible]key; said I must vote or give up my coat, concluded discretion was the better part of valor, and dropped a vote in the ballot box. Hired an Indian poney from a Frenchman, for a bottle of brandy for the trip south, without saddle or bridle; started—held on tight to the lariat and put 'im through, but got amazing uneasy before I reached the Platte. Found no ferry boats, swam the river, and pulled poney across; arrived at Plattsmouth, which consists of two houses a mile apart. Polls opened on a log centre of town—whiskey scarce and timber scarcer; tall young man said he was a brick, and candidate for Councilman, asked me to vote; told him I had voted once to-day. Said it made no difference, said he knew more than his father and grandfather too. Said it should be the pride of Frenchmen to control the destinies of the country, defended by the immortal Pulaski. Said this was an excellent country for frogs, (took me for a Frenchman.) Little man chalked F F V, crowded tall man from the stump; said objections were made to the election of tall man. Some thought him a non-resident. Said he was a resident of Nebraska; had been in the territory all night, and should not cross back over into Iowa until the election was closed. Said he knew he was old enough, "by a remark he made;" said he was a candidate himself, and if elected, should go in for everything generally—and should vote for every squatter having all the land he wanted, and for the Otoe Squaws to be devided out among the first class for servants. Spoke of the great battles in the East, of the dissolution of the Sandwich Islands, and the annexation of Guatemala—Spain and the Gulph of Mexico; got very eloquent, and in a pathetic and patriotic manner exclaimed, to the polls! to the polls!! Every body rushed up pel mell and put in another vote, myself among the number. Red headed man took the stump and said he was opposed to dogs generally, and if elected should put down sausage shops and doggeries: (thought he was hinging upon Bull Dogge. I clenched my fist for a fight) Indian came dashing up, shouting Sioux, every body run for a horse—little long man got my pony, and I was off and got a better one and started full gallop southward from Nebraska City. No road, so I followed a wolf trail, four Indians after me to steal my horse—rode like Jehu, (or Gilpin, I forget which;) came suddenly to a creek, some fool had dammed it up (not damphool) had to plunge in, went down twenty feet,—came up, found Indian hold of my scalp to take it off, lost his knife in the water—took a dive, carrying Redskin also down, lost him in river. Made for the shore and took after my horse—run seven miles, tired him out and caught him. Had to drag him in to Nebraska City; found about a hundred people collected, including Indians, Squaws, a keg of bad whiskey, and a wheelbarrow, who seemed to be having a tight time. Big burly fellow said he was one of the proprietors and claimed my vote, said he would go in for annexation of the Sandwhich Islands and for Sandwiches and whiskey for the Legislature, said rats and dogs made excellent pies, said he would go in for taking the north part of the Territory from the heathen and pirates who lived there, and give it to the Chinese, said he should go in for introducing the tea plant into Nebraska, and reducing the duties on Opium. Two men chalked Judge shouted "go'it," Punkin headed editor, said 'twas all as true as gospel. Load of Missourians just arrived and went to vote. Big man chalked Major said they had no right and shouldn't vote; Judge with pepper and salt pants said they should—was backed by half a dozen suspicious looking chaps, Missourians went up to vote, Squatters faced the music and knocked first man down, proprietor came to the rescue and got sidewinder in stomach—Judge took the ground and got left eye closed up. Major with brick in his hat didn't wait for to be, but fell in advance, and was dragged off the ground—friends on both sides closed in. Col. engaged Missourian, both got badly whipped. Big man knocked down little editor, brick in hat to heavy, got badly mashed up. Big Squatter clinched Judge—over they went rough and tumble—Judge lost cheek, and big man half an eye. Two small men clinched, one lost his nose and the other his scalp, fell into a celler. Man with cock'd eye hit me in breadbasket, clinched, and rolled down hill together; cockeye begged pardon, said 'twas a mistake, struck at another man, said 'twas "all in his eye," got up, shook myself, and counted the fallen—found ten dead-(drunk,) nine mortally wounded—nineteen slightly wounded, and eleven scratched, picked up eleven pistols, four scalping knives, three old coats, five breech clouts, and a quart of buttons—got my horse and put out satisfied with free fights—struck down for Boonville, found it consisted of two houses, and a camp of Missourians: big whining man said he was a judge. Told him he looked like it—said "yes, sir," found him to be same fellow that joined the Mormons three years ago, was in the "Land Warrant business," Missourian came hurrying in middling sized man, chalked on the hat "Judge," led them up to vote, judges of election refused to let them; swore awfully, pulled out their knives and revolvers, (wished I had brought Bull Dogge,) and went out on a stump and opened new polls, said they'd hang the jury and break things generally, judges of election got frightened, and give in. Burly judge "charged" his gun with beans, was in an awful rage, asked him if he felt uncomfortable—said "yes, sir." Shot at a hay-stack, hit an Indian boy, throwed his cane at a dog, and chased a "run" of water but could'nt catch it—and took vengence on a bottle of brand—reths bitters. Tother Judge said he was an editor and went in for the liberty of the Press, told Missourians to press me into service and make me vote, said I should vote for Bull Dogge; told them perhaps they took me for Damphool—if so they were mistaken. Put in my vote, and made for Levels, found tall man with one eye trying to speak, looked very sharp, man with store cloths said he shouldn't, big man said he should, cries of "one eye" carried the day, (for it had became most night;) tall man got the squatters on his side. Boat landed with voters and a new candidate for Councilman, said they felt an interest in the country and would vote for their man; squatters objected—got a muss raised generally, threatened to take the city. One eye giv'em fits and beat Missourians. Sharp looking fellow seemed much pleased. Started to Levels—found the town but couldn't see the houses. Big lot of Missourians in Camp, said they were hired to come over, and would vote anyhow, or raise a muss. Bluffed off Judges and every body voted, Missourians strongest and had it all their own way and elected their own men, who returned across the river same night—got to the end of the row and took back track for home; shall give you in my next journey back, visits to Omaha and parts above.

Yours from X. Y. Z. Doesticks.

New Wagon Route from San Francisco through Salt Lake.

We learn from the San Francisco Herald that there has been a public meeting, to take into consideration the practicability of constructing a new wagon route from California to the States. The meeting was held in the Music Hall, and was numerously attended. A Mr. Pixley states that committees have been formed, and have gathered a great amount of statistical information; that the Governor and the people throughout the State are warmly enlisted in the affair. We have not room for the whole, but give the following extract:

"Mr. Pixley also spoke of a new route which had been discovered. The committee were informed that there is at present, at Salt Lake City, a detachment of the army, under the command of Major or Col. Steptoe, who, with 180 dragoons, arrived there last year, with the intention of coming on to California, and exploring a route. As soon as he was able, he was to send back a party of workmen to prepare the route as much as he was able. The committee have also learned from Col. Reese, an intelligent traveler, that midway between the Carson river and the Great Salt Lake City there is a beautiful valley, beautifully adapted for the location of a route; and he also assured us that the whole route was well watered, well wooded, and an inexhaustible forage could also be obtained.

"The committee speak of this route because it is the only one they have inquired into, and no one has directed their attention to any other except that further north. Having made some remarks on the southern route, Mr. Pixley read the resolutions as follows:

"Resolved, That a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific is the grand enterprise of this age and of the American people; that it is not the work of a day, but of years, requiring unanimity of public sentiment, preliminary surveys, and the adoption of a particular route, as well as the appropriation of many millions of money, and its grand results cannot be realized to meet the urgent necessities of the times.

"Resolved, That an emigrant road from the valley of the Mississippi to California, so constructed as to admit of cheap and easy travel, and protected by military posts as to be safe, is the thing that the highest and best interests of California and the whole country require.

"Resolved, That inasmuch as a wagon road across the country, upon which emigrants can travel in safety, will be a work of great public utility, and cannot be considered as a local undertaking, we invite all members of Congress, members of Legislatures of the several States of this Union, and all other persons favorable to the enterprise, to give it their influence and support.

"Resolved, That we will use all proper means within our power for the accomplishment of this work, so necessary to the welfare of the State, and pledge ourselves to its support, firmly believing that we may rely upon important aid from our State Legislature, and that we shall receive the hearty co-operation of our fellow-citizens throughout the State of California.

"Mr. Doyle moved to continue the committee, with power to add to their numbers.

"Mr. Tingley—I would state that the committee of twenty-five are preparing a report based on statistical information, gathered together with a view of being published, not only for the people of California, but for our Atlantic friends, believing, as we do, that all the evils under which California labors can be expressed, as it were, in the words, "want of emigration;" and by giving correct information on the various subjects to our Atlantic friends, we can, perhaps, do something towards inducing emigration to California.

"Mr. Caserly moved to adjourn, subject to the call of the committee, which was carried, and the meeting accordingly adjourned.

Loss of an Elephant.—Capt. McKay, of ship Wm. Goddard, which arrived at this port this morning from Calcutta, had on board a noble elephant when he left port, but soon after getting to sea the animal became very sick, his sufferings being apparently proportioned to his size. He also experienced much inconvenience from cold weather, although he was well clothed in flannels, and finally he died. The value of the animal in this country would have been about $50,000.—[Boston Traveller, Feb. 15.

American Geographical and Statistical Society.

This Society held its usual weekly meeting last week, in its rooms in the New York University, Dr. Hawks in the chair. There was a full attendance of members. After the minutes of the last meeting was read, and some routine business transacted, the members adjourned to the lecture room, where guests were waiting to hear the paper of the evening, to be read by Dr. Hawks, on the aboriginal languages on this continent.

Before commencing his lecture, Dr. Hawks said that the injustice done American navigators by the British Admiralty in not presenting "Grinnell's Land" on their charts had been noticed by the society and duly represented. He was happy to say now, that, on the Admiralty court received by the last mail, Grinnell's Land and other places discovered by our navigators were laid down precisely as claimed by the people of this country.

Dr. Hawks then proceeded to read the paper of the evening, on the aboriginal languages of this country, of which the following is a brief analysis:

Our knowledge of the aboriginal languages is derived from the Spanish and Italian missionaries of the churches of Rome. These languages are exceedingly numerous, but the internal and grammatical structure is similar in all. The number of radical languages in North America are few, though the dialects are many. The former may be reduced to four, viz: the Esquimaux, the Iroquois, the Delaware, and the Floridian. Few things are more remarkable than the similarity of the grammatical structure of the languages of both North and South America. We find that they are all rich in words, and their structure tells of more reflective habits than the rude idioms of most other languages. They would seem to indicate a fall from a higher civilization. Dr. Hawks then proceeded to show that the American languages were related to the Asiatic, quoting Humboldt in support of this position, who discovered that out of eighty-three American languages the roots of one hundred and seventy-three words were the same as those of some of the Asiatic tongues. Examining the peculiar features of these languages, he noticed the vast amount of compound words which they contained, instancing, among others, one with twenty syllables, which it would take a bold man to pronounce and a bolder one still to spell. The next peculiar feature in their grammatical construction was the scarcity of generic terms. In parts of speech, as, for example, in the noun, there is one singular and two plurals, called a plural, with a singular and a double plural, as in "Father," "our father," and "our fathers"—the last being a double plural. Some languages have a dual precisely like the Greek; this is the case in the Cherokee. These languages have not the masculine, feminine, and neuter genders; their distinction is the "animate" and the "inanimate." To the animate belong animals, trees, stars and other objects personfied among the Indians, while the inanimate were herbs and smaller shrubs, so that size may have something to do with it. The adjectives are not numerous, but the verb, curious enough, is taken to supply its place. The verb presents the most striking feature in all the languages, for there is scarcely any word which cannot be changed into a verb. Verbs, too, like nouns, are animate or inanimate. The verb is positive, negative, reflective or reciprocal, so that, most emphatically, the principal feature in the Indian languages is the verb. The Doctor then proceeded to show the usefulness of studying these languages; as from them the student could find out the stock from whence the Indians sprung. He noticed, in conclusion, the similarity of the Algonquin (the Indian language of North America) to the Magyar (the language of Kossuth) and accounted for it in the hypothesis that the Magyars and the Indians of America were of common origin, coming in remote ages from Northern Asia. This, he said, illustrated the utility of learning something of the languages of this country. From the testimony of language it could be clearly shown that a large portion of the Indian races, though not all, came from Northern and Eastern Asia to America.

At the conclusion of the lecture, the usual thanks of the meeting were unanimously voted to Dr. Hawks for his able and instructive paper.

We would respectfully refer the learned Doctor to the "Book of Mormon," to fully elucidate the mystery of the origin of the Indian race and their languages.—Ed.

Kansas, Delaware, and Wyandott Indians.

The frauds upon the Delaware Indians, by certain officers of the United States Army, now stationed on the Western frontier, have received the attention of the President himself, and it is believed he will visit them with summary punishment for their crimes, in spite of the protests and protecting sympathy of Secretary Davis. This would be an act of manly independence, on the part of the executive, as astonishing as it would be right and proper. It is time he should come to the rescue of his own reputation, as those who surround him exhibit for it a reckless disregard. In a message to the House of Representatives, yesterday, he recommended such a modification of the existing laws as would enable him to do full and ample justice to the Kansas Indians, including the Delawares, and to carry out the treaty with them in good faith.

By the by, there is now in this city a delegation of chiefs from the Wyandott tribe of Indians, who inhabit a portion of the Nebraska Territory—the peninsula formed by the confluence of the Kansas and Missouri rivers. The principal chief, Tau-roo-mee, happening in the Senate gallery on Monday, heard Sam Houston's speech in defence of the red man. It delighted him so much that he solicited a "talk" with the General, which took place last evening at the room of the latter, in presence of a number of gentlemen. The Wyandott tribe are the most civilized and the best informed of all the North American Indians, and Tau-roo-mee spoke in dignified and eloquent terms of his white brethren. He said he recognized them as brothers, and beheld in each a friend. His visit to Washington was prompted by a desire to learn more of them, and, to become better acquainted with their manners and habits of life—this and nothing else brought him to this city, many miles distant from his Western home. General Houston replied in a manner peculiarly appropriate and effective. He told them that whenever his red brethren would consent to wear coats, pants, shoes and hats, they could become as white men, differing only in complexion. Whenever they would consent to live in comfortable houses, with their women and children around them, they would be as happy as their white brethren. Whenever they are permitted to remain in one locality, with their little fields and improvements about them, instead of being shoved constantly into woods, the Indians will be like other people. He wished to see the time when we could say to the red man—"Here is good land, come in and cultivate it—build your villages, your school houses and your temples to the Great Spirit—do this, become instructed, educated," and then they would be as the whites, having every motive to prompt to good action—no motive for evil. The Indians were delighted with their interview with the man who has ever stood forward as their true and best friend.

On yesterday morning Deputy Sheriff F. T. Bulkley arrested a man calling himself Nelson D. Riggs, but whose real name turns out to be Nelson Driggs, and whose capture may safely be considered the most brilliant and important haul of the season. The circumstances attending it are as follows:

Sheriff Bulkley has had intelligence of the existence and movements of this Mr. Driggs for some time past, and was well aware of his intention to visit Chicago, and of the time when he would be likely to put in operation that intention. He also knew that Mr. Driggs would send by express to this city a package of considerable importance at the same time that he came himself, and that he would probably bring with him property of a description which is contraband and illegal. The Sheriff then was not at all surprised when, on going to the express office yesterday morning, he found a valise addressed to Mr. Driggs, of the expected description. Seating himself quietly behind a newspaper, Sheriff Bulkley awaited the arrival of that gentleman. He came, inquired for his valise, was shown it, and started with it up Dearborn street, towards the Tremont House, the Sheriff walking at a safe distance behind him. He proceeded slowly and with some hesitation up Dearborn street to Randolph, and down Randolph to the corner of Clark, at which point Sheriff Bulkley arrested him and conveyed him to jail. Upon searching him, two gold watches were found upon him, and a small quantity of money, mostly counterfeit, in his vest pocket, with a larger quantity in his overcoat pocket. His valise was then examined, and in it was found a large quantity of counterfeit and altered notes. But the great haul was yet to come. Locking his prisoner up, Sheriff Bulkley proceeded to the hotel near the Rock Island passenger depot, where the prisoner had put up the night before. Going to the room occupied by the prisoner the previous night, no baggage of any kind was found, and the landlord for some time had no recollection of the stranger having brought any. At length, however, Mr. Bulkley discovered under the counter a carpet-bag and a cloak, which the landlord finally confessed might belong to Mr. Driggs. Taking the articles, Mr. Bulkley brought them to the Sheriff's office, and there examined the carpet-bag. In it were found two piles of bills, counterfeit and altered, of the amount of not less than $30,000. The bills were of all denominations, and on banks of the South and East, as well as of this State. Some of them were in an unfinished state, the alteration being incomplete, while the others were all ready for issue. The work on them is generally done very well.

The prisoner is a man of about 45 years of age, of gentlemanly appearance and demeanor, and of highly polished address. He came from Rock Island to this place, and from Cairo to Rock Island.—Chicago Tribune, Feb. 16.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 24, 1855.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad throughout the East.

DEAR BRETHEREN,—I did think at the commencement of this publication that I would address you a few words, but on account of a press of matter I was prevented. I now improve the opportunity.

You have been scattered abroad in the world, exposed to the powers of darkness and the gainsayings, falsehood and ridicule of a corrupt generation, without teaching, and dependant, in many instances, upon your own resources and your God, with very little opportunities of receiving teaching, either from his servants or by the written word. You have had very little opportunities of becoming acquainted with the progress of Zion, the position of the saints, or the revelations given for their guidance. I therefore wish to call your attention to a few things.

The gospel that you have received, many of you, years ago, in all simplicity and faith, is still the same eternal, unchangeable truth. We may have progressed and have received other principles of truths, which is the very nature and genius of the gospel; but those principles committed to you are still as pure, true and unchanging, as the day you first heard the sound of the everlasting gospel. Every principle of truth is eternal, and hence our gospel is called the everlasting gospel, and the Holy Melchizidec Priesthood is also without beginning of days or end of years. New principles may be unfolded, fresh truths developed, and great and important manifestations made, as the manifestations of God continue to unfold the great events that transpire in the last days, associated with the development of the Church, Kingdom and Government of God; but there is no revelation or communication given to the children of men that will contradict those already given. But we also live in a day of revelation. The light of eternal truth has burst forth from the heavens, revelation has been given for the guidance of His saints; and it is for us to walk by that light, and to "live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

The atmosphere of the moral, social and political world is becoming tainted. The feeble ties that used to bind men are snapped asunder, fresh efforts are constantly being made to concentrate, to bind, and to fuse every grade of society; but their cords are snapped asunder, their bands are broken, their attempts are futile; and whether spiritual, temporal, moral, or social, they are only a rope of sand, and give way before the fell swooping influence of anarchy, infidelity, apostacy and crime; honesty is becoming a proverb, truth a historical antiquity, and righteousness one of the things that has been. There is nothing but one universal cry, gold! gold!! gold!!! give me gold; honestly if I can; but I must have gold. And I fear sometimes that there has been too much attention paid to this thing among the saints; mixed up with the world, we partake more or less of their spirit, we continually inhale their atmosphere, and it becomes more or less incorporated with our system. Commingled as we are, our vision becomes beclouded, and it is difficult for us to comprehend our true position; we neither understand aright our duty towards God, to each other, or to his church, our views of things are modelled to a certain extent after the world. We obtain glimpses of the light of truth, of our position and relationship to God, and to each other; of the beauty and order of the Kingdom of God; of our responsibilities to our families, our progenitors and posterity, of the glory, beauty, order, and progression, and eternal exaltation of the Kingdom of God. But the effort is too much for us, we shrink from the conflict, and content ourselves too often with a nice pleasant theory, with recommending it to others, while we find difficulty in rousing our dormant energies for that action, and faithful determinate perseverance necessary at all times, for a saint of God; and while we recommend our religion to others, they can plainly perceive, either that we have not faith, or if we have, we have not the energy to put it in practice. Living Mormonism leads men to fulfill the commands of God, not in one thing only, but in all things. Jesus in his day said, "If a man love father, or mother, or house, or wife, or land more than me, he is not worthy of me." Mormonism says the same thing now. It is no milk-and-water thing.

"It demands,
The life, the soul, the all."

If it is leave all and go to the valley, it means it. If there, and the command is to go to the ends of the earth without purse or scrip, just the same. Where the command of God comes, we kick the golden god out of the way, and tell him to stand by, we have higher orders. Life, eternal life, is our object, and to spread salvation to the ends of the earth. We go in for salvation for ourselves, our wives, our children, our friends, our progenitors, and posterity. Not built upon any vague fantasy, but living, substantial, eternal principles. We go in for fulfilling the measure of our creation here, and for thrones, principalities, powers and dominions, in the eternal worlds hereafter. We count the cost, and dare the conflict. And the same gospel that applies to us, applies to you. Awake from your slumbers, then, and live your religion. Fear God, keep his commandments, work the works of righteousness, and live what you profess. The Kingdom of God is a personal matter, and effects you as well as us, and if you will possess the glory, you must bear the cross. We are engaged here in an arduous undertaking, and request the co-operation of all faithful Saints. You will hear from us from time to time.

Utah and California Mails.

IN another column will be found the Postal Bill, now pending before Congress, to which we referred last week.

Some arrangements similar to those provided in the amendment of Mr. McDougal are certainly needed; as we are at the present actually cut off from all intercourse with Utah. We have had no mail communications for the last two months, and when we shall hear from there again is at present a matter of uncertainty, probably not before April or May; for any communications that we can have now, we might as well be in the mountains of Thibet, or the deserts of Arabia. In fact, such is the position of our mail operations at present, that we could hear from the latter place quicker than from Utah. We believe this is in part owing to the inexperience of mail contractors. The lowest bid, of course, receives the contract, and men not acquainted with the difficulties of the routes are induced to take the contract for less than they can afford, not previously taking into the account the heavy snows; loss of mules, Indian and other difficulties; the result is that they come out losers, and as Mr. McGraw & Co. not only fail to fulfil their contract and carry out the mail, but solicit Congress to make up their losses. Why not think of this before? Why is Utah to be left at the mercy of all such speculation? and why don't the Postmaster General, knowing they have failed, make other arrangements? We speak thus because we know that there were responsible parties who knew the route, and would have fulfilled their agreement providing they could have had it at a living price; but they knew as well before as Messrs. McGraw & Co. did after, that it could not be taken for the sum stipulated by the last named party.

Furthermore, we would wish to turn the attention of Congress to the fact, that those mountains are an extremely difficult road to travel in winter. That it requires the greatest energy and the most unflinching fortitude and perseverance, to combat the terrible storms that frequently occur in those hight altitudes; that the snow drifts excessively, rendering it almost impossible to traverse the route. That Messrs. Little & Decker, residents of Salt Lake, who took the contract from Fort Laramie to Salt Lake, often in the winter had to leave their mules, and drag the letter bags on hand sleighs on foot, over snow from ten to twenty feet deep, at the imminent risk of their lives; that we do not believe that the mail can ever be taken in sixteen or eighteen days, in winter; if it was at the lowest, eighteen in summer, and twenty-six or thirty in winter, we think it would be quite little enough, and be more likely to succeed. When the storm god mounts his car in those upper regions, he pays very little attention to the nice calculations of Congressional committees, or the letter of the law that regulates mail contracts. He is king of the mountains, and when he rules all mortals have to obey. We want to see this thing carried out, but we would like to see it done permanently; let arrangements be made that can be carried out, and then enforce their fulfillment, and do not put things in that position that they cannot be accomplished. We are as much in favor of quick transit as any one, but we don't believe in impossibilities.

Since writing the above we are glad to learn from the St. Louis Luminary that the mail has commenced again to run from Independence to Salt Lake.

Mormonism.

IT is now twenty-five years that Mormonism (so called) has withstood the torrent of ridicule and abuse heaped upon it by Pulpit and Press, with their auxiliaries of mobocracy, fire and sword, and its very existence to-day is a powerful demonstration to every reflecting mind that there must be some redeeming qualities, and that Mormonism is not altogether what they would have them believe it is; for example, let us refer to some of the terms used by these suple caterers to prejudice, who at the bare mention of Mormonism, turn up their eyes in holy horror, and with sage looks, and would-be wise forebodings, predict of the future. At times they stigmatise all who join the Mormons as fools and bigots; at others as all knaves and rascals. At one time they will assure you the Mormons are deluded enthusiasts, ready to endure every suffering for their religion; at another, that they have neither morals nor religion. Sometimes their leaders are designated as ignorant blockheads, and no sensible people would join them; at others, as a keen, sharp-witted set of knaves, and gathering none but men of like stamp around them; that their designs are all treasonable; their characters licentious, immoral, and depraved, and their abodes but nests of robbers and banditts, and finally the calendar of Newgate would scarce supply their vocabulary with terms so prodigaly bestowed; yet notwithstanding all these epithets, virulence, and contradictions, Mormonism still stands boldly out, a living fact, to the mortification and chagrin of these base panderers to popular prejudice, and for the investigation of the wide world. If Joseph Smith was a fool it could be easily demonstrated; it is certainly not so difficult a matter to show up a fool. If Brigham Young is a fool his acts will proclaim it and his folly become manifest. If they are all fools, where is the wisdom that keeps them together. It is known by every school-boy that the Mormons have been despised and abused from their commencement—perfectly deluged with slander and misrepresentation; yet, in the face of this immense weight of opposition, people join them. Are they all bigots who join them? They do not fail of being informed that the Mormons are irreligious and immoral. Are they deceived, and induced by pure and religious motives to join them, in the face of all that the world call respectable? and then afraid to renounce it when found corrupt, knowing the premium offered for Mormon expose? Will men so readily risk the loss of friends, reputation, and even life, in the pursuit of truth, and then knowingly remain the passive instrument of fools or knaves?

Yet, it is strenuously urged that none but knaves, fools, and foreigners join the Mormons. Unfortunately for such assertions, if knaves, they certainly must be fools; for knavery pays so much better outside of Mormanism than in. If fools, then they have stemmed, most nobly, the torrent of popular opposition, and as to foreigners, no place in the world is better represented than Utah, by every State and County, and almost every town and village of this vast Union, as well as thousands of native born Americans now advocating Mormonism in almost every country in the known world.

If Mormonism is a humbug, why has it not exploded long before this? If treasonable, why the leaders so quiet in their expatriation, and so ready to assist in swelling our country's forces in time of war? If licentious, immoral, and depraved, why the system and order of its instituiions, the zeal of its followers in traversing the earth amid its most bitter opposers, with naught to trust in but their God? And if corruption be the object of their belief in polygamy, the same would as readily apply to its conscientious believers in all ages. And we would here ask if it is common for crime so zealously to seek the light, or its tainted followers face every danger to sound abroad his shame. And again, how is it that the signs so apparent, and so inevitably following debauchery, among Monagomists, fail to appear among the Mormons. But why prolong this subject? The repeated and contradictory stories, the uncalled for vituperations, and the extreme rancor of these "penny-a-liners" will naturally lead every candid mind to pause, and in giving in their judgment admit there, must be some invigorating power; some life-giving principles, some pure and Eternal Truths but little understood by these malicious scribblers, which sustain and unite the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

THE RUSSIAN WAR.

THIS is a subject about which there has been so much said and written, that it would almost seem superfluous for us to give an opinion; but as it is one in which four powerful nations are engaged, and a fifth about entering, and one that threatens to involve all Europe in the struggle, a few remarks may not be inopportune.

As it regards the immediate causus belli, each nation has its own peculiar ideas, and assigns its own reasons, real or pretended, for if they all thought alike there could be no difference of opinion, and consequently no war. The origin seems to be between Russia and Turkey—Russia claiming certain rights to dictate, teach, and control her subjects spiritual, or members of her church (Greek) in the Turkish Territories, and Turkey the right to govern their bodies as citizens of her government: but as Nicholas is not sufficiently versed in Trancendentalism nor immaterialism to instruct his spiritual subjects without touching their bodily estate; so neither can l' Grand Sultan, being no metaphysician, allow a material interference with the subjects of his realm. His infidel majesty of the sublime Porte feels determined to govern the bodies of his subjects, and his most christian majesty, the Czar, being as determined to administer spiritual consolation, so they say; but as the Czar has not shown himself an adept in spiritual instruction, and grasps at bodies and lands, as well as at spiritual essences, we are afraid that he is somewhat carnal in his ideas. But nations are not generally more conscientious nor more remarkable for their honesty than individuals are.—The great world conquerors, from Nimrod, Sesostris, Cyrus, Alexander, Julius Cæsar, and Napoleon, down to the Czar, or would be Cæsar of the present age, had good cause, or said they had, for their various belligerent enterprises. And Alexander, the predecessor of the present Czar, in his negotiations with Napoleon the I., at Tilsit, was more anxious to possess Constantinople than the provinces now in dispute. England sometime ago, under pretence of rights, civilization, &c., sent out armies to India, took possession of a vast country, and made the people raise opium (poison) instead of bread, they then took it to China to trade for tea; but as the Chinese did not wish to be poisoned they passed a prohibitory law, and declared it contraband. The English smugglers still introduced it in violation of law, and his Celestial majesty ordered it destroyed; upon which her Christian majesty of Great Britain sent out an army to chastise the Celestials, because they were not willing quietly to be poisoned; killed great numbers of them, and then made them pay the British for killing them, what they called, the expenses of the war. Nor are we much better. Some time ago Gen. Taylor was sent to Texas; was told to occupy disputed territory, which everybody knew would provoke the Mexicans to war; they could not as honorable men do otherwise. The war came—we of course conquered. What then? We very politely, hat in hand, say, gentlemen, we want California, since the land of gold. We are of course now good friends. Nations in this particular are very much alike. England would not have treated France or Russia as she did China, nor would the United States have pursued the same course toward England as Mexico, and we very much doubt whether the Czar is more sincere towards Turkey than John Bull was towards China, or Brother Jonathan towards Mexico. Might is right.

The above is the view that England and France take of it. They believe, or say they do, that the Czar has designs upon Turkey, and wish to preserve a balance of power in Europe. They have no more confidence in the honesty of the Czar than he has in theirs. Nations look upon one another as encroaching, grasping, or in plain English dishonest.—As he won't listen to their ideas of polite, peaceable diplomacy, they wish to try what virtue there is in powder and ball, swords and bayonets.

It may do very well to talk about christian privileges obtained in Turkey, the importance of the war for christianity, civilization, freedom, &c. These are a sham. All that England can have in view is a European balance of power, perhaps some advantages in the Crimea, another Gibralter, and some protection against Russian invasion in the Eastern possessions. To rebuke the growing power of Nicholas France may go in for a slice, as well as to put a hook into the nose of the Czar. Napoleon III. does not like the Russian Bear since he was treated so cavalierly by him on his accession to l'Empire. The Moscow affair too, has left an old grudge which would be honorable to obliterate. But as the French are brave and fond of glory. This war may cover a multitude of Napoleon's sins, if successful; if not, it may cost him his empire and be the means of his retiring to private life or the grave, for Frenchmen are not very particular about these matters.

The Austrians or Prussians want nothiug to do with the war if they can avoid it; if not, they will make the best bargain they can.

In regard to the cause of the war, our opinion, is that there is an invisible power behind the scenes, that none of these emperors or kings know much, and care as little about; who "sets up one king and puts down another according to the desire of his own will," who rules in the heavens and controls on the earth at pleasure, who has decreed to vex the nations of the earth, and turn and overturn till his purposes in relation to them will be accomplished; and that civilization, christianity, freedom, balance of power, or any or all of the peculiar subjects about which politicians are wrangling, have very little to do with the affair: and any one reading P. P. Pratt's "Voice of Warning," published about fifteen years ago in this city, will find a more satisfactory solution in regard to the present European troubles, than can be learned from the productions of any of our present scribblers. It is certain that the taking of Sebastopol is more than child's play, and the Russian Bear may be yet found more difficult to cage than some of his hunters have counted on.

THE communication of President F. D. Richards will be read with interest, as well as that of President G. A. Smith, from Salt Lake to him. We are glad always to hear from our brethren, and hail such correspondence with joy; for although scattered in different parts of the earth, we are one in faith, spirit and purpose. It will be seen by an extract which we publish from the St. Louis Luminary, that President P. P. Pratt is wide awake in California; at least so says the editor of the Alta California. We shall be pleased to hear from him; a letter would be very acceptable here, as this is one of his old stamping grounds.

We have not heard from our old friend, Professor Spencer, of Cincinnati. A communication from his able pen would always be acceptable to us, and do pleasure to the readers of THE MORMON. Come, Bro. Spencer, send in your quota.

New Fire Annihilator.

On Saturday there was a trial between a steam fire engine and one worked by men. The trial came off in the Park. A great crowd of people were assembled to witness the compartive adaptations of steam and muscle as applied to fire engines. There could not have been less than eight or ten thousand present on the occasion. Excellent police arrangements were made, in order that the two competitors, steam vs. man might be unobstructed in the exercise of their power. The engines lay alongside the City Hall, and obtained their supply of water from the public cistern. It was thought by many that it would take too long a time for the steam engine to raise steam, but in about six or seven minutes after the wood was lighted quite a stream of water was thrown.

Various interesting experiments were made, and several amusing occurrences took place, in the shape of shower-baths, sundry waterfalls and sprinkling, among the lookers on, who seemed to enter heartily into the amusement. In some of the trials the application of muscle seemed more powerful, at one time the steam from the hand engine shot as much as twenty or thirty feet ahead of the steam, which caused great enthusiasm and excitement among the by-standers, whose sympathies seemed to be in favor of the New Yorkers, and in opposition to this innovator. However the old iron horse, although not at first so impetuous, was longer winded and more powerful; thus proving that iron is stronger than muscle, and that fire and water is a more powerful element than bread and beef. Man's power must give way before the power of steam. And what indeed is more reasonable than to use the power of fire to destroy its own element!

Arrivals.

We had a very pleasant visit a day or two ago with Mr. Howard Livingston and Charles Kinkade, of the firm of Livingston & Kinkade, in Salt Lake. It does us good to see our friends from the mountains; it makes us think of our limpid streams, the pure mountain air, and all the endearing associations of home. These gentlemen are brothers to the old firm of Livingston & Kinkade, who have carried on a very extensive business in Salt Lake from the second year of our settlement, and who are respected by all who know them. The present parties are now doing business in their old stand at Salt Lake.

Mr. Charles Kinkade is the gentleman who was shot so severely in the neighborhood of Fort Laramie, at the time when Messieurs Jamison, Wheeler and Hackett were killed. Mr. Kinkade ran the gauntlet pretty close; he was wounded in eleven places, but is now well and hearty. He was robbed of $10,000 in specie, but is in hopes to recover it through government agency, as they have discovered that it was a party of Sioux who committed the depredation, and it is anticipated that it will be stopped from their supplies. We sincerely hope they may succeed; it is just and right. We don't believe in being shot, as we have tried it. It is at least too bad to be shot and robbed both at a time.

Lecture by Gen. Sam. Houston.

ON Tuesday evening last Gen. Sam. Houston delivered a lecture on the American Indians, to the New England Young Men's Association. The lecture was highly interesting, and was listened to with attention by a numerous and select audience.

He spoke of the New World as being the heritage of the Indian, and traced out their position on the forest and prairies, when the white man first appeared among them; he mentioned the various frauds to which they had been subject, and of the efforts made for their civilization—spoke of Pocahontas, Red Jacket, and others as being men of intellectual ability and genius; of Tecumsah's generalship rivalling that of the British allies, and of the Cherokees, Chippewas and Choctaws as being a striking illustration of Indian intelligence, and their readiness to receive learning and civilization.

He then referred to the frauds practised upon them by agents and government emmissaries, and stated that the entire amount appropriated to them up to the present time was one hundred millions of dollars; but that of this amount they had not actually received over twenty millions for their own proper benefit. That agents and other persons had appropriated the balance. He mentioned instances of mismanagement in Minesota and Nebraska, shewing the extent of misappropriations and their effect. And that the Indian has no redress against such abuses; that if he resisted he was kicked like a dog; and if he snapped he was kicked for snapping.

He suggested the appointment of suitable agents who had a character to lose, and not broken down gentlemen and sharpers, who had spent their fortunes in dissipations, and were regardless of the manner they recruited it. That such characters, through monetary and other influences, obtained licenses in Washington which they applied to rob and cheat the Indian.

He spoke in high terms of Mr. Manypenny, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and stated that if sustained by the Government, and his mild pacific course carried out, a state of kindly feelings could be induced, that the whole of the United States army could not coerce. He concluded with certain anecdotes showing the good faith of the Indians in the observance of treaties, and their sacred regard of an obligation; and concluded with some specimens of frontier life, and the curiosity and imbecility of negotiations and treaties made by some of our American officers.

When he concluded three cheers were proposed and responded to for the first President of Texas. A voice from the gallery—Three cheers for Sam for the next President, which were unceremoniously given.

We think that Gen. Houston takes a very correct view of the Indians, the which his personal observation in Texas, and other frontier countries, has given him ample opportunity of observing, which, together with his position in Congress and evident knowledge of Indian transactions there, make him a competent judge of their treatment.

His lecture certainly reveals a terrible prostitution of the public funds, and an unparralleled recklessness in the distribution of appropriations for the Red Man. Is it possible that out of "one hundred millions appropriated, the Indians have only received twenty?" and that agents and other officials receive four dollars out of every five that is appropriated to the Indian? It seems almost incredible. We have long been aware of great frauds having been practised upon them, but did not think they extended so far. We have seen Indians paying two and three prices for horses, guns, whiskey, &c., owing to certain manœuvering, but thought this was rather the exception than the common rule; however, according to Mr. Houston, it does not reach the rule.

Why are these things not attended to? Why did not the Hon. gentleman, with a knowledge of these things, lift his voice in Congress and expose such wholesale robbery and fraud upon the poor untutored savage? Why has not Congress noticed these things? Why have not the Indian Bureau made other arrangements and guarded the funds placed at its disposal? It is time something should be done in relation to this matter, and if men will rob turn them out on the highway, but don't give them license to plunder in the name of the United States.

Correspondence.

15 WILTON ST., LIVERPOOL, Feb. 9, 1855.

Elder John Taylor:

DEAR BROTHER—Your favor of January 4th came duly to hand by the Baltic, containing some items which I was very anxious to have received a month ago—but better late than never. I regret you had not received my former letters, as they contained inquiries of importance, some of which are partially answered in your last.

I have sent out between fourteen and fifteen hundred saints to New Orleans—a part much later than I desired, through one of my ships getting stranded, and being obliged to tranship her passengers.

I am proud to hail you again in the field as a herald of truth and a defender of Mormonism. Although I am not much of a popular writer, I still manage, as well as I can, to sustain the character of the "Star;" and if I may judge by the increase of subscribers, I may be encouraged. [The circulation of the Star is about 30,000.—ED.] It is forwarded regularly to the "Mormon," with a request to exchange; perhaps you may find an item occasionally worth extracting, though we do not make much pretension to politics, being more religiously inclined over here.

The mail from Utah, December 1st, came to hand on the 30th ult., and brings cheering news of the good cause in the mountains, and of the general health and welfare of our friends.

Here the war has been the universal topic of conversation, affects all kinds of business, and has been the vital question with Parliament for a length of time.

It affords me great pleasure to learn that President Pierce is not our enemy, and that the general prospects concerning the affairs in Utah are not so bad as I anticipated. I was apprehensive from certain indications in the papers, that Mr. Pierce, for want of better cause in which to render himself popular with certain parties, might be slyly heading, or at least conniving at, a crusade against our young Territory, and am pleased to find it is not the case. * * * *

How truly pleasing it is to see that since Joseph established the Priesthood, all the efforts of the world to oppress, tend so directly to develop its power! I anticipate with delight the happy effect which the MORMON, the Luminary, and the Cincinnati papers are about to exert upon the American public; which, connected with the actual residence of large branches of the Saints, in their leading towns and cities, and the public lectures that will be given, all must tend to soften the asperity of public feeling, and give the Saints favor in the eyes of the nations. I have the means on foot to render you the aid which you desire, viz: extending the circulation of the MORMON into all the branches of the Church, as far as practicable, in the conferences and missions under my charge in Europe, and have pleasure in thereby strengthening your hands to the utmost of my ability.

After delaying as long as I felt safe, I chartered the Siddons, which is to take out a load of about four hundred Saints, on the 19th, for Philadelphia; some of whom can go no farther than that port; others will stop at Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Utah. Elder John S. Fulmer is appointed my general agent and conductor, and will have presiding charge of the company on shipboard. After their departure, I will furnish you, by the first steamer, a list of names and statement of their circumstances as nearly as I can, that you may the better counsel their disposition. Unless otherwise advised in the interim, I will forward your bill of books by the Siddons.

Since the last steamer, Earl Derby and Lord John Russell have both failed to construct a new ministry, and Lord Palmerston now stands at the head of the new government, which is the same as the old, with but three exceptions, viz: himself, Lord Panmure, and Mr. Sidney Herbert—Lord Aberdeen, Lord John Russell, and the Duke of Newcastle having resigned.

I thank you for your offer to become an agent for the Star, and will be happy to learn from you the number that will be required, and by what conveyance you wish them forwarded.

The brethren in the office—to whose number I have added Elder Thomas Williams, formerly of Newport—all wish an affectionate remembrance to Elder Taylor. I desire a kind regard to the brethren who labor with you in the East, and may blessings, rejoicing and power, be continually multiplied upon you and they, and that the whole nation may feel your influence, and honestly acknowledge the power of truth.

Wishing you every prosperity in your undertaking, to bring before the people all the great good which you have in your heart for them; and that just and honorable men may come to your aid with their means and influence,

I subscribe myself your fellow-laborer in the great work of the last days.

F. D. RICHARDS.

WALLINFORD, Jan. 10th, 1855.

To the Editor of The Mormon:

SIR: Thinking it might be interesting to you to receive a short account of my travels since I saw you at Bluff City, Iowa, I forward you the following.

On the 28th of October, I left Bluff City, in the stage at four o'clock A. M., for Iowa City, and travelling about twelve hours through a very pleasant prairie country, the soil of which is rich and undulating, interspersed with occasional small streams of water, and strips of timber, we arrived at a small village called Indian Town; this consists of a small church, a store, and about fifteen or twenty frame houses, lying near forty miles east of Bluff City. After exchange of horses and a few minutes rest, we pursued our journey through a rich country, that is to be, for some twenty miles, when we stopped for the night at Mr. Martins, who has the honor of keeping the only mail station within many miles, and whose care of horses is unexceptionable; but who it would seem has a decided aversion to the entertainment of man, as on inquiry I found that neither board or bed, was to be had, so I turned into the stage, and after tossing, and tumbling about over the mail bags all night, I arose in the morning not very much refreshed, and starting before day we traveled on long enough to get an appetite for breakfast, when we stopped to change horses and here I laid in a good stock of johnny-cake, and molasses, which, by the by, seems to be the staple commodity of this part of the country. The people around here are not much troubled with their neighbors, for sometimes on the main road, we traveled nearly twenty miles without seeing a single house, or individual except ourselves. The country for more than one hundred miles east of the Bluffs, is much the same, long ranges of prairie, broken here and there by small streams and little patches of timber, and although the land is rich yet the scarcity of timber will never allow it to be as thickly populated as some of our eastern States, until more is raised, or different arrangements made, but notwitstanding its disadvantages, it would make a very good farming country, and there is a good market for the sale of produce, at Bluff City, and Marysville, and in fact any where on the Missouri River, as this is a point of debarkation for Oregon, Calfornia, and Utah. I must not forget to mention Wintersett, the first appearance of civilization, as there are several stores and two or three public houses, and the lands within several miles of this place, are nearly all entered, and improvements are going on rapidly. The country from here to the Mississippi, was more thickly settled, and there was more timber, the villages and farm houses were not so far apart, which together with the cultivated fields, lend a pleasing variety to the surrounding scenery.

I here found that good work cattle, suitable for emigrants, could be obtained at prices varying, from sixty to one hundred dollars per yoke, and I should think a large company could, in this State, be fitted out for the plains. Leaving New-York, or Boston, early in the season by railway, to Chicago, which is destined to be one of the greatest cities of the United States; the interlacing of so many railroads, at that point, together with the extensive Lake Trade is bound to make it a place of no inconsiderable importance.

I am informed that a railway will soon be completed from Chicago, direct to Burlington—the latter would be a good setting-out place for the plains although heavy articles could be obtained at Council Bluffs, or some of the Western Cities, which would save land carriage; I think Chicago would be the best place to obtain wagons; but am not sufficiently informed on this point. I had conversations with several forwarding commission merchants, who were quite anxious to secure our patronage, but as to the extent of their business or responsibilities I am unable to inform you, I suppose those who wish to obtain the patronage of our people will let you know where they are, their business, connexions, terms &c., so that our people going westward will have something to rely upon. I told them your intention of publishing a paper in New York, and suggested the propriety of putting advertisements in your paper, as it would be extensively circulated not only among our own, but other emigrants to the West. I hope to see the paper out on its mission soon.

Yours with respect,
ELIJAH K. FULLER.

[Why do not these forwarding houses, wagon makers, &c., send on their advertisements? It certainly would be to their interest, we can't direct men where they can get wagons made, forwarding done &c. unless we know something about them and their terms.—ED.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 25, 1854.

To the Editor of the Mormon.

SIR:—I was shown the following letter, by the writer, and thinking that it might be interesting to the readers of "THE MORMON," I solicited a copy, which I send for your disposal.

N. H. F.

MY DEAR MRS. ——.

I am now safe in this great city, where I have often wandered before. I have visited some of the theatres, and other places of amusement. They all seem quite natural, and so do my friends, to a certain extent. But to be candid, as I told you I would, I am afraid my valley residence has spoiled me for the enjoyment of society here. There is so much stiffness and empty formality, and so little of that genuine frankness and open straightforwardness to which we have been accustomed, that I often feel very much out of sorts. There is a great deal of glitter and show, but little sincere friendship. The dollar—THE DOLLAR—THE DOLLAR—is everything here. If you want respectability, it is measured by the dollar. Honor and position are bought and sold like your negroes—by the dollar. Friends are sacrificed, and the holiest ties of brotherhood and fraternity bartered for the dollar. And need I say, that in thousands of instances beauty and virtue are bought and sold for the accursed dollar. I find that our social position is very little understood, and a strong prejudice exists in the minds of many in relation to these things, through the misrepresentation of the press. They judge of us by themselves; and as they are generally corrupt, they can form no idea of the purity associated with our family relations. If they could draw aside the curtain, and see the nature design, and practical results of this, the most objectionable (to them) of our institutions, they would arrive at very different conclusions. They think we must have lost the feeling of women—the natural dignity and self-respect of our sex. How little they understand it! They, of course, are Christians, enlightened, and we "poor, benighted Mormons." They profess to believe in Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, &c. They are held up as examples of faith, virtue, wisdom, and "men after God's own heart," and yet these pious Christians and ministers turn up their eyes in holy horror at polygamy—but what was Solomon, David, Abraham, &c.? Polygamists. They of course do not understand the matter, and would not, upon reflection, want a place with Lazarus in Abraham's bosom. Well, I suppose they must have their own way, and we ours. I certainly am not envious of their religious morality, conjugal felicity, (!) or happiness, but could join heartily in the Church of England prayer—"From such evils, corruptions, covetousness, and broils, good Lord, deliver us." With all their exclamations about the valley, you might take a winnowing machine, and you would have to labor hard and long before you could sift from these dense masses of corruptian the amount of virtue, purity, integrity, truthfulness, and social happiness, that we have in the Valley. But apropos to this. Now, my dear Mrs. ——, let me ask you to be as faithful with me about your country as I have been about mine—although (do not mistake me) there is much good here mixed with the evil; but the evil greatly predominates. Now, how is it with you? Are your Southern people better than our Northern? The editor of the Charleston Courier, and others of your southern gentry, have passed some rather severe strictures upon us. Are they so much better than our Eastern friends, or is it popular to say one thing and practice another? Are the characters in "Uncle Tom" faithfully delineated? Is it true that your colored demoiselles have to share the affections of their white Lords? If so, they are worse than our Northern gents, for they do confine themselves to their white establishments. By the bye, where do your mulattoes, creoles, quadroons, &c., come from? Is it a freak of nature, or nature's law? Do men, after breaking their marriage vows, and dishonoring their wives, acknowledge their posterity? or have they the meanness to try to cover their infamy by selling their posterity? Or further, do they keep their own children for their slaves? You will say I am very curious. Why, I may turn authoress one of these times, and may need an answer to these from a Southern lady, as so many statistics. Is the dollar as potent with you as with our Eastern friends? Are friends true to their trusts, or are the dead robbed, and orphans and widows left destitute, or are these things creatures of the imagination? Will brothers-in-law declare their widowed sisters-in-law insane, and seek to to put them in a mad-house, to possess themselves of their property, or are these things only European imported fictions? Are your people honest and high strung, of noble bearing and sterling truth?—or are they weak and vacillating, like other mortals? Is there a manliness of conduct, open, ingenuous, frank, or are their actions dark, sinister and deceitful? Is their religion honest, truthful, and sincere, or are they hypocrites, and do they fear a day of reckoning? Excuse me, my dear, for the above remarks; for if you are a fair specimen, I should form a fair opinion of Southern society; but you know there are always exceptions to general rules. I need not tell you that I enjoyed your society very much; and if it was not for many pressing engagements among my friends, I should avail myself of your invitation, and spend some time with you in the sunny South. I am sorry it is not in my power to return it; but though my friends treat me well, and have manifested the greatest kindness, I fear the introduction of a friend would be too much Mormonism for them. But you did talk of going to Virginia. Now, if you could make it convenient to come this way, I certainly would do my best towards helping you to spend a little while agreeably; and I must here say that notwithstanding the evils above alluded to, we have many sources of enjoyment and pleasure—artistic, scientific, philosophic, and amusing.

Please write on the receipt of this, and let me know how you fare; for I need not here state that anything pertaining to your welfare and happiness will always be acceptable to your friend,

Western Improvement.

It is astonishing with what rapidity settlements and improvements are progressing Westward. The addition of Kankas and Nebraska Territories affords a great field for enterprise to the energetic pioneers of the West. Towns, cities and villages are springing up on the frontiers of that country in rapid succession; and they are already vieing with each other in stores, mills, hotels, and other improvements. Farms are also being made, and settlements extending far into the interior; and where a short time since the Buffalo roamed, and the Indian followed the chase, you are now greeted with lowing herds and the merry voice of the husbandman, as and where the wild whoop of the savage rung through the hills and valleys you now hear the hammer and plane and the busy hum of active industry and improvement; and instead of the bow and arrow of the red man, you see the plough and the axe forwarding the work of civilization. These improvements, too, while they form a great outlet to our redundant population, at the same time bring distant neighborhoods to a nearer proximity, and very much enhance the facilities for traveling.

Some eight years ago we left Nauvoo to proceed to the Salt Lake. After leaving the Desmoines river, in Iowa, with the exception of here and there a straggling house, the country was a wilderness. For several hundred miles between there and the Missouri river, we had to make our own road and build bridges; now towns and villages have sprung up on what is termed "The Mormon Road," "Kanesville," that was; "Bluff City," that now is, was one of our encampments; and where we had our winter quarters, a town is laid out. We made the first road on the north side of the Platt. Then Upper California was a part of the Territory of Mexico, inhabited only by a few herdsmen and rancheros—improvements were few and far between. There was then nothing but a howling wilderness, from the Missouri river to the Pacific Ocean; now we have two States on the Pacific—Utah in the mountains and Kansas and Nebraska on the west side of the Missouri. And while Utah is pushing her settlements east, Nebraska and Kansas, with equal zeal, are driving their stakes westward, thus shortening the distance of wilderness travel. The Mormons have come as far as Green river on one side, and the settlements are extending as far as the Big Blue on the other side. Green river is about 160 miles from Salt Lake this way, and the Big Blue about 185 miles from Fort Leavenworth, and 137 from St. Joseph, the other way, thus shortening the distance between the two extremes nearly 300 miles. A correspondent describes the latter place as being well located in a commercial and agricultural point of view. He says:

"Agriculturally, the valley of the Big Blue and tributaries is over one hundred miles long, rich in soil unsurpassed in any country, capable of producing in abundance, corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley and hemp, and all classes of vegetables. Already large and dense settlements are being made contiguous, and approximating Marysville, the river and tributaries; and from its central position, fertility of soil, its abundant supplies of the choicest of wood and free running water, must and will populate this portion of Kansas earlier than any other of a nearer proximity."

From the above, this is an eligible place for settlement. There are also many openings in the West, the resources of which Eastern people seem to be ignorant. We are in possession of statistics in regard to roads, distances, facilities of wood, water, locations, &c., with which we shall keep our emigrating friends well posted up.

In the meantime, we say to the denizens of garrets and cellars, in these crowded cities, leave your holes and burrows, and go where there is room.

Congressional.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir,—In my last I omitted to mention to you that a bill had passed both Houses extending the setting of the Utah Legislature from 40 to 60 days. I think they will now have time enough to arrange their territorial laws in, as they have not so much debating to do, nor so slow in their movements as we are out here.

You will, of course, have seen the President's veto on the spoilation bill, it created quite a sensation in Congress, and an attempt was made to pass it by a two-thirds vote, which failed.

A resolution from the Legislature of Rhode Island was presented by Mr. Allen, asking twenty-one years for naturalization, and definite arrangements to prevent the influx of foreign paupers and criminals. I suppose it originates with Know Nothingism.

As the Congressional time shortens, a great deal of activity prevails, not only among the members of Congress, but among outsiders, who seem to be very zealous in the prosecution of their various objects. Here are all kinds of men in Washington, from the high-toned, magnanimous politician, to the low, obsequious sycophant, who would cringe to men in power, and black their boots for office; from the free-hearted patriot, who loves his country for herself, to the man who would sell his country and soul for a drink of whiskey, or a corporal's staff.

If a bill introduced by Mr. Douglas should become a law, it professes to grant alternate, sections of land on the whole line of three different routes. The one is the Southern, or Texas route, another the Central or Benton route, and a third the Northen, or Stephens route. The bill passed the Senate on the 19th, by a vote of 24 against 20. It waits now the sanction of the House. Should it pass, it will necessarily throw a great amount of capital into Utah, as two of the routes must necessarily pass through our territory. It will certainly bring us into a prominent position, and mix us up, whether we will or not, with the rest of the world; my favorite camel expedition will be exploded, and we shall have to travel as common mortals. Success to the Railroad, say I; we soon may expect a quick, jolly time in crossing the plains.

You will see by the papers that the Californians are awake in projecting a wagon route as a precursor to the Railroad.

A Mormon in Washington.

The Pacific Railroad.

It would seem from the following that we are not only to have one, but three railroads to the Pacific, providing the House of Representatives is as liberal as the Senate, and our worthy President does not veto it. We shall publish the particulars next week.

The following we clip from the Evening Mirror:—

At Washington, yesterday, the Senate had up the Pacific Railroad Bill—the bill providing for three roads. Mr. Butler thought the scheme too expensive. Mr. Geyer stated the cost at $400,000,000. Mr. Pearce opposed the bill. Mr. Seward supported it, saying that the country would never be in better condition to commence. Mr. Mason was also in its favor. The bill finally passed—24 to 21. In Executive Session, John Appleton was confirmed as Secretary of Legation at London; Mr. Coe, of Ohio, Secretary to Peru, and Mr. Atkinson as Third Auditor, in place of Mr. Burt.

In the House, the Veto Message was first in order, and was settled by the application of the previous question; when the attempt to pass the Spoliation Bill in spite of the veto, failed by twenty votes, the Yeas being 113, and the Nays 86—133 being required in the affirmative by the two-thirds rule. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation bill came up immediately after the vote, and an attempt was made to attach the French Spoliation bill as an amendment. The motion was ruled out of order.

No little indignation is felt, far beyond the immediately interested parties, at the President's defeat of the Spoliation bill, which was further killed for this session by the House vote yesterday.

Touching the Emigrant passenger act, Senator Benjamin, who represents the views and wishes of Mr. Fish, with respect to this bill—about which our shippers are much excited—is willing to adopt the bill favored by the merchants, in place of the one drawn by Mr. Fish, provided the 14th section of Mr. Fish's bill be added. We have examined this section, and find that it is a risk upon ship owners, not at all, to our mind, called for or warranted by justice to any party.

It is anticipated that an amendment will be offered in the House to the general appropriation bill, proposing to make railroad iron, dyestuffs, and wool, free of duty. It ought to pass.

The alleged resignation of Mr. Mason, and others of our European ambassadors, is said to be a fiction.

The store-ship supply has lately arrived from Japan, having a large amount of Japanese curiosities and lacquer work, the results of Commander Ringgold's expedition in the Chinese seas.

It is expected that the President will veto the mail steamer appropriation bill if it contains the amendment in favor of the Collins line.

The Pacific Railroad Bill.

Mr. Douglas has introduced in the Senate a Pacific Railroad bill. This scheme evidently has many friends, and may unite different sections of the country heartily in its favor. It will be seen that, to aid in constructing railroads and telegraphs to the Pacific, it purposes to grant alternate sections of land in aid of three different routes,—the Northern, Steven's route—the Central, or Benton's route, and the Southern, or Texas route. The chief element of success claimed for this bill is, that it leaves open to competition routes, and that the friend of each, therefore, is inclined to vote for it, because perfectly satisfied that the road by his route will be first built as it is clear that the successful route will be the one which combines the greatest natural advantages with the greatest amount of capital, and each man is satisfied that the route he is in favor of is the one which best answers this description. With a new leadership in the House, I am not sure that some such bill as this may not pass; but I have not had sufficient opportunity to examine it to be entirely satisfied as to what are its merits or demerits.

The Judiciary Reform bill now under discussion in the Senate is destined to defeat, unless I greatly miscalculate. The proposition to make ten new United States Circuit Judges is looked upon with a good deal of distrust; nor are there many who who like the idea of releiving the Supreme Court Judges from Circuit duties. A Judge of the Supreme Court for the California Circuit will probably be provided, but nothing more.—[Washington, Corespondent N. Y. Times.

UTAH.

We are indebted to the Millennial Star published and edited by F. D. Richards, Liverpool, Eng., for the following. We have not received any later mails, and the following will be interesting:

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Deseret.—The December mail arrived from Great Salt Lake City, on the 31st January, bringing a goodly number of letters, and files of the Deseret News for November 9, 16, 23, and 30, from which we glean the following items.

The erection of the large new Bowery was rapidly progressing. The last train of the season, belonging to J. M. Horner and Co., and consisting of 18 wagons, loaded with goods, arrived on the 7th inst.

Brother Dimick B. Huntington, Indian Interpreter for Colonel Steptoe, in a late trip to Fillmore, talked with the Indians in the neighborhood of Nephi, Manti, and Fillmore, and gave them much good instruction. They appeared friendly and well disposed, and it is probable they will all be peaceable, at least during the winter. Captain Walker, with a part of his band, passed through Iron County, on their way South.

The crops throughout the Territory, notwithstanding some loss from hail and grasshoppers, were amply abundant, and generally believed to be stored in a safe and proper manner, much of the wheat being thrashed. On the 23rd November, wheat was rating from $1,30 to $1,50 per bushel; potatoes, 75 cents: oats, $1,75; and other produce in proportion.

The Mayor and Council of Great Salt Lake City had repealed all licenses for selling beer and intoxicating drinks, and both the Church authorities and the great body of the people were determined to sustain the city authorities in putting down this traffic altogether.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Dear Brother Franklin—Amid the noise and confusion incident upon the Tithing Clerks moving the books out of their office, and the arranging of our own in their place, we would inform you, or at least try to, of the changes that surround us.

Mr. A. W. Babbit, Secretary of State, is the functionary intrusted with the control of the Council House; we accordingly have been cast out of it, not into outer darkness, but into the room in the north end of the Tithing Store House, which has been heretofore occupied by the Tithing Clerks. It will answer us a very good purpose through the winter; but for a man as deficient of eyesight as myself, it would be more comfortable if a couple more windows could shed the light of heaven within its dark walls. The new Tithing Office is completed, and is a nice building.

The weather has been remarkably fine since our last, which was dated Oct. 30th. There have been a number of cases of sickness, and some deaths from dysentery and the mountain fever.

The people of Parowan have got their city wall 7 1-2 feet high, and a great portion of it twelve feet, six feet thick at the bottom, and two and a half at the top. It is expected that the new furnace is in operation by this time. Nephi City is inclosed with a wall nine feet high. Brothers Dame and Harrison, Representatives from Iron County, are in the city.

Mr. Babbit has fitted up and carpeted the Representatives' Room in the Council House in grand style; in the upper room the ceiling overhead has fallen down, and its place is supplied with cotton cloth. The sugar factory is inclosed, and they are now engaged putting on the roof of the new Council House.

I have recently visited nine towns in Utah County. Good health and plenty abound. Union Fort, on South Cottonwood, has become quite a town, many good two-story dwelling houses having been erected this season; the wall being about completed. They have a good two-story school-house, forty feet by twenty. Bishop Silas Richards has succeeded in gathering all the people of his ward inside the fort wall.

Our city authorities have abolished all the grog shops as nuisances; it may make some soldiers, and others who indulge, feel rather uneasy, that is, dry, like a fish may be supposed to be out of water. The Regency of the University met last night, and passed some resolutions to extend the teaching of the new Alphabet, and directed the regents to lecture in different parts of the country to encourage the getting up of schools.

Elder Benson has just visited all the settlements north of this county, preaching in nine towns, and has this day started on a visit to Utah County. The brethren who went to Iron County with Bishops Lewis and Klinging Smith, have been baptized since their arrival, and are doing well.

There were six hundred bushels of Tithing Wheat brought to the office in this city from Springville, yesterday. The Social Hall will be re-opened on Saturday evening, December 2nd, with the play—"All is not Gold that Glitters." About sixty adobie houses have been erected in Farmington this season; also a court house, thirty-five by forty-five, two stories high, is now receiving the roof. Elders Charles C. Rich and George Q. Cannon arrived in this city on Tuesday, November 28th, in good health. The Eastern mail has not yet arrived; we apprehend we may be again all winter without much news. The California mail was ten days behind its usual time, which is said to be in consequence of an alteration of the time of starting. Presidents Young, Kimball, and Grant are enjoying good health, as also the members of the Quorum of the Twelve at home.

I remain, as ever,
Your brother,
George A. Smith.

Elder F. D. Richards.

From the Deseret News.—It is rumored that Adams & Co. are about to start a regular express from San Francisco to St. Louis, by way of Great Salt Lake City. They expect to transmit news from New York to San Francisco in from 15 to 20 days, thus making the time from 5 to 10 days less than by the Panama route.

Colonel Steptoe, Lieutenants Mowry, Allston, and Tyler, U. S. A., Chief Justice Kinney, U. S. District Attorney Holman, with a part of Lieutenant Allston's company of Dragoons, and part of Lieutenant Mowry's company of Rifles, left this city, October 12th, on a tour south. They went by way of Manti to Fillmore City, and returned by the usual travelled route to this city, on the 3d instant. During this trip, Judge Kinney held the regular sessions of court in the 2nd Judicial District, and we hear his charges to the Jury much commended, as evincing a high order of official intelligence, marked by a gentlemanly bearing, and a pacific spirit entirely opposed to litigation. We have been informed by one of the party that several of them purchased lots in Fillmore City, very highly appreciating its material advantages for the seat of Government; that all were pleased with the condition and appearance of the different settlements, remarking that they were never more kindly received and courteously treated, nor did they wish to be.

Australia.—We have received the Zion's Watchman, for Oct. 14, and also a letter from Elder William Cooke, dated Oct. 13, from which we learn that Elder Robert Owens had arrived at Sidney, from Calcutta, in good health. President A. Farnham was about to open a mission in New Zealand, for which place he purposed sailing on the 20th of the same month.

The truth was gradually spreading and obtaining a firmer footing on every hand, but as usual, under such prosperous circumstances, there was much bitter opposition to the work.

Opinions of the Press Concerning "The Mormon."

From the New York Tribune we clip the following:

The Mormon is the name of a new weekly journal just commenced in this city by John Taylor. It is a large and handsomely-printed sheet, (excepting the frightfully large heading on the first page,) and its articles are vigorously and plainly written. It will undoubtedly serve to throw considerable much-needed light upon the movements and purposes of the professors of the Mormon faith.

We are much obliged to friend Greeley for his frank and candid statements.

The following are the opinions of a gentleman who has not seen the workings of Mormonism, and is consequently ignorant of the position of the society in Utah:

From the New York Herald, Feb. 20.

Rapid Spread of Mormonism—Future Destinies of the Sect.—The rapid increase of Mormonism, not only in this country, but throughout Europe, is a fact, which, however much it may be deplored, cannot now be disputed. It is attributable at once to its active and admirably organized system of propagandism, and to the simplicity and accommodating character of its tenets. Throughout most European countries agencies are established for the purpose of supplying the Church of the Saints with converts and emigrants, and the men chosen as its local instruments are eminently qualified for the task. They are, generally speaking, men of talent and education, with vicious tendencies, but at the same time a decent respect for public opinion. To such men the cardinal doctrine of Mormonism—polygamy—holds out irrisistible attractions. Held in restraint by the notions of conventional and religious propriety, by which they may happen to be surrounded, they are glad to embrace a creed which protects their vices by a convenient religious cloak. Perverted themselves, they actively seek to make perverts of others, and as their doctrines are agreeable and sit pleasantly upon the conscience, it is not surprising that they outstrip, in their efforts, the missionaries of creeds which aim at a thorny and almost unattainable perfectability.

Formerly, most of the converts to the new creed were sent out West by way of the Mississippi and the Gila route, or Panama, but the losses in their numbers, occasioned by the yellow fever and other local epidemics, have led to a change in this mode of transmission. They are now dispatched overland to their Arabia Felix by way of Ohio, St. Louis and the South Pass. An agency is established in New York for the reception, advisement and guidance of the newly arrived emigrants; and, in order to give greater publicity to its operations, and at the same time disseminate more widely the doctrines of the sect, a local organ, called The Mormon, edited by Elder John Taylor, has recently been established here. The vignette of this publication, as well as the opening address of its editor, make a flaming display of loyalty to the constitution of the United States, of the sincerity of which some recent indications in Utah are calculated to inspire reasonable doubts. In its broad and well printed pages are discussed all subjects, and items of news interesting to the Saints, under their various religious, social, political, financial and commercial aspects. For the edification of our readers, particularly our female ones, we have transferred to our pages a chapter on polygamy, which is presented to us in all the force of theological positiveness as an ordinance from God himself, and inductively as a most agreeable and convenient relation for man. Of the soundness of all these conclusions there will, of course, be a great variety of opinions founded, we are afraid, more or less on the results of individual experience within the narrow limits to which Christianity has reduced the institution of matrimony.

The gentleman who writes the following is in possession of more accurate information than Mr. Bennett; he has been in the valley, conversed with Governor Young, and seen the people. We give it entire, together with his quotations from us. See the contrast:

From the New York Evening Mirror, Feb. 20

The Mormon.—This is the title of a weekly journal, just started in this city, to advocate the religion of the "Latter Day Saints," to correct the false reports with which the "secular" press is teeming—and, more especially, to watch over the interests of the European Emigration, which Brigham Young has ordered to come by way of Boston, Philadelphia and New York, instead of New Orleans, as heretofore. The paper has a flaming pictorial vignette, with this inscription, "Mormon Creed"—"Mind your own business"—to which portion of their belief we subscribe a hearty Amen. It is edited with decided ability by John Taylor, "one of the Twelve," who has edited a Mormon journal in Nauvoo, in Paris, France, and in Hamburg, Germany.

The paper is filled with matter of interest to outsiders as well as "Saints;" from Utah, California, Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, and elsewhere, at all of which points the Mormon elders are laboring "without scrip or purse," and sending thousands, annually, to their fertile valleys in Deseret. The editor takes Polygamy by the horns, admits it as a part of his faith, and defends it with much ingenuity, quoting the Bible for authority, and David, Solomon, and others, for example. He asks the question, "Did people ever think that there might be something socially, morally, religiously and politically wrong, which leads to the amount of corruption that now exists?"

We quote a little in answer:

To check this, legal enactments have been made; sometimes, as in England, licensing brothel houses; at other times, putting up before such places a lantern at the door, with "burning shame" written on it; sometimes, by the most stringent laws, with various penal enactments appended. Various legislative enactments have been made in Prussia, Austria, France, and other continental nations. But what has it all resulted in? Nothing. Go to England now, and you see thousands of poor, miserable, homeless outcasts, wandering about the streets, and seeking to drag out the remnants of a miserable existence by bartering their—was I going to say virtue? Oh! name it not! It is too humiliating, loathsome and degrading. In some of the leading cities of France these poor outcasts have their own beats on the sidewalk allotted to them; and in the sale of their dishonor (who are the purchasers in all these cases?) will show their tickets like cabmen, or porters. In some of the cities in Germany—take Hamburg, for instance—they are prohibited from going abroad professionally, by law; but are located in certain districts of the city; and there they swarm by hundreds. Whole streets full may be seen, bedecked and bedizened, at windows, inviting passers by, and offering themselves for market.

Need I mention the boarding houses and hotel accommodations here in our own land, and trace matters of this kind from our splendid saloons and parlors—through the streets—down to the Five Points? Are not these all known? I might here ask, whose are those unfortunate children that our ladies have been seeking out, and feeding and clothing lately with such laudable benevolence? And further, where do our mulattoes come from?

But we must stop; we have gone far enough; the picture would be too dark. It was necessary to lift the curtain a little; but prudence, propriety and decency say, let it fall. We would just remark that philosophy, morality, law, and Christianity, as now taught, have signally failed to stop this monstrous social and moral evil. The present state of the world proves their incompetency. The Lord's way, as practiced by ancient men of God; the "Restitution"—as lately revealed—we think will stop it among us.

The paper has a long letter from the lynx-eyed Mormon delegate in Congress, Dr. Bernhisel, complaining, very justly, of the refusal of Congress to grant public lands to actual settlers, and of the deposition of Gov. Young, whom he declares to be loyal to the Government, quoting in proof of this fact, Capt. Stansbury, Gen. John Wilson, and other high and disinterested authorities. As polygamy is a "local institution," we do not see how Southerners and Union-savers can consistently interfere with it. For the rest, if Bro. John Taylor values the testimony of a "Gentile," he can have ours, that Brigham Young is a perfect gentleman, kind and courteous to emigrants, even when dressed, as we were, in fustian, and calling upon him, as we did, an entire stranger, without introduction from Mormon or Gentile. During a three weeks' sojourn at the city of the Great Salt Lake, we saw more order, industry and decorum than we ever observed elsewhere in the world, and the writer of this has seen a little of the spheriod. We venture the assertion, and challenge contradiction, that a more peaceful, orderly, industrious and law-abiding community than the dwellers in Deseret cannot be found, and we wish it distinctly understood that we know not a soul among them, and have not a particle of sympathy with their religion or polygamic institution.

We cannot but admire the honest, frank, straightforward testimony of the gentlemanly writer of the above. We are unacquainted with him, as he is with us. We have nothing to do with his religious tendencies or sympathies; but, Mormon, Jew, or Gentile, we always admire an honest man, who, when he knows a thing, dare express his sentiments. Success to the Mirror.

Parley P. Pratt.

"Mr. Parley P. Pratt, for whom we have considerable respect as a man and as a teacher, coupled with as much admiration of his talent as the doctrines which he employs it to defend will admit of—Mr. Parley P. Pratt appears to have walked into the temples of our money changers in this city, and fairly put to flight all reason and philosophy by the boldness of his attack upon the Christian Church. Our readers will remember Mr. Pratt as the self-composed apostle of Polygamic Mormonism in California, and his last exploit was to draw upon him the fire of a room full of debaters in the S. F. Mercantile Library Association, and then with words that would have shocked Mr. Walker, and grammar that would have forever destroyed Mr. Lindley Murray's peace of mind, commenced a bombardment of the citadel of their reason, and silenced or rendered useless every gun! For several weeks Mr. Pratt has been wheeling and charging his squadron of Polygamic arguments in full sight of all our church doors and lecture rooms, and even advanced in person to the foot of our pulpits to proclaim himself the defender of a new faith, flinging the glove even into the minister's desk. Up to the present time, we believe, no David has gone forth against this Philistine to meet him on either point of law, morality or religion, which he declares himself ready to engage an enemy upon.—[St. Louis Luminary.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

"We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais les anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

WHY does President Pierce appoint a military officer to Step-toe the civil government of Utah? Because he thinks they are all too Young to take care of themselves.

For arrivals so far behind time as to break connection with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one-fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained by certificates of postmasters, or the affidavits of other creditable persons, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office, for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster General may alter the schedule. He may also order an increase of service on a route by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay. ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker hnd Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Our Home is in the West.

AIR—"The Irish Emigrant."

Far o'er yon bounding ocean, yea, beyond its billows' roar,
Where vast Pacific's surging waves lave free Columbia's shore,
Lies that fair land, belov'd by all the Saints of Latter Days;
Where Zion's children join as one to chant their songs of praise.
Oh haste we then from Babylon, our holy rest's not here;
"Away! away!" It is the voice of Heaven's chosen Seer,—
"Away! ye Saints of Latter Days! your home is in the West,

Away! ye Saints, &c.

Let those who will revile the name to Saints and Angels dear;
The lov'd of Heaven may well sustain the sinner's scornful sneer.
He shrank not, nor will good men shrink, to tread the path He trod—
That path the Saviour journey'd once—the path that leads to God.
Oh! if the King of Glory met but suff'ring, scorn, and shame,
Well may His faithful Prophets, too, while in their Master's name
They cry—"Away! ye righteous ones! your home is in the West,
The Zion of the Pure and Free, the City of the Blest!"

Away! ye Saints, &c.

Oh Babylon! proud Babylon! our souls would weep for thee;
Did'st thou but know, in this thy day, the truths which Saints can see,
Thou had'st not scorn'd, nor hated one who only sought to save;
Nor wrought that fearful deed on him who fills a martyr's grave.
Father in Heaven! we bless Thee for our Prophet and our Seer,
While in our Saviour's name we pray—"Father of mercies! hear!
Oh! speed us far from Babylon! our home is in the West,
The Zion of the Pure and Free, the City of the Blest!"

Away! ye Saints, &c.

Monarch of Heaven! God of love! our earnest prayer shall be:
May we be found obedient to Thy Gospel and to Thee;
Let men deride—let devils tempt—oh keep us ever true;
True to the mock'd, the world despis'd, the Heavenly-minded few;
True to the glorious cause we serve; true to the King we love;
Ready to do Thy will below, as Angels are above—
Then will we sing—"Away! away! our home is in the West,
The Zion of the Pure and Free, the City of the Blest!"

Away! ye Saints, &c.

Miscellaneous.

The Proposed New Railroad to the Pacific.

We clip the following from the National Intelligencer; it gives the outlines of the bill to which we referred last week. It is certainly a great project, important to the future of this great nation; interesting alike to the States washed by the mighty Atlantic and Pacific, and embracing the whole Union. It takes from Congress the vexed question of fixing its locale, and leaves it to the enterprize of private individuals.

"The Senate yesterday passed a bill (which is yet to to be considered in the House of Representatives) authorizing the construction of three railroads to the Pacific through the Territories of the United States. Being unable to reconcile conflicting interests as to the location of the road, this bill proposes to construct a Northern, a Southern, and a Central Railroad, and to erect upon each a line of Magnetic Telegraph. We give a summary of the bill:

"The first section provides that, with the view of aiding in the construction of suitable railroads and telegraphic communications between the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific ocean, there shall be and is hereby appropriated and set apart a quantity of public land equal to the alternate sections for the space of twelve miles on each side of said roads from their eastern to their western termini, as follows:

"One road and telegraph to commence on the western border of the State of Texas, and to pursue the most eligible route to the navigable waters of the Pacific, in the State of California; which line shall be known as the Southern Pacific Railroad.

"One road and telegraph to commence on the western border of the States of Missouri or Iowa, and to pursue the most eligible route to the bay of San Francisco; which line shall be known as the Central Pacific Railroad.

"And one road and telegraph to commence on the western border of the State of Wisconsin, in the Territory of Minnesota, and pursue the most eligible route to the navigable waters of the Pacific in Oregon or Washington Territories; which line shall be known as the Northern Pacific Railroad.

"Such lands to be selected from the sections which shall be designated in the public surveys of said land (when made) by odd numbers, and to be held and conveyed as herein provided; and in all cases when the United States may have disposed of said lands, or any part thereof, or shall from any cause be unable to convey a title thereto, the deficiency may be made up by the party or parties who may become entitled thereto from any unoccupied and unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within the distance of thirty miles of said road: provided, however, that for such deficiency within the State of California, and also in lieu of all mineral lands in said State, (which are hereby excepted from the appropriation herein made,) such selection may be made from any unoccupied and unappropriated lands of the United States within fifty miles of said road in the said State.

"The second section requires the Secretaries of the Interior, War, and Navy, and the Postmaster General to advertise and invite proposals for the construction of each or either of said lines, stating the time in which the road, &c., are to be completed. The sum of $300 per mile is to be paid for carrying the mails daily both ways on these routes; and the contractors to state the rate per mile, while the road is in course of construction, at which troops, naval supplies, and munitions of war are to be transported for fifteen years. After that period rates are to be fixed not exceeding those on other roads.

"The third section provides that the several Secretaries before named, in conjunction with the Postmaster General, shall make contracts for each road, and also for a telegraph line thereon; and that the party or parties whose proposal may be accepted shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, or the value thereof in bonds or certificates of stock of the United States, or State bonds, whose market value shall be at or above par at the time of making the said deposit, which may be subsequently drawn out by them in sums of five thousand dollars, as the work proceeds, on the production of vouchers showing satisfactorily that an amount equal thereto has been applied in good faith to the construction of said road.

"The fourth section provides that the roads shall be divided into sections of one hundred miles each; and three-fourths of the land pertaining to the contract to be conveyed to the contractors, reserving the other fourth as security for the completion of the next hundred miles; and so on until the whole shall have been completed. The service in carrying the mails, &c., to be under the proper department. No money to be paid except in the proportion of the service rendered.

"The fifth section relates to the mode in which forfeitures are to accrue if the contractors fail to perform. The Secretaries and Postmaster General to relet the work in such contingency, but no higher terms to be offered.

"The ninth section requires the routes to be located and the eastern and western termini to be fixed as soon as practicable, but the time not to exceed two years from the date of the contracts. The President to cause the public lands to be surveyed on each side of the routes to the extent of forty miles, and the Indian title to be extinguished. Preemption rights provided for, and the reserved sections not to be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold. No lands to be sold until all have been surveyed and the alternate sections selected by the contractors.

"The seventh section requires the party or parties receiving grants under the act to sell one-half of the same within five years after being patented. All lands held at the expiration of ten years to be forfeited to the United States.

"The eighth section requires the lands of the United States for two hundred feet wide along the line of said roads to be set apart as a highway for railroad and telegraph purposes, materials therefrom to be used by the contractors. All contracts to provide and require the roads, &c., to be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner. A telegraph line to be constructed along each road, and the Government not to be charged higher rates than individuals.

"The ninth section allows one or more additional tracks along said routes. Connections with the roads to be made under the directions of the States or Territories through which the roads pass.

"The tenth section provides that when the road or roads have been surrendered to the United States, so much as passes through any of the States to be conveyed to them as their property, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, and other Government service, subject to such regulations as Congress may prescribe, &c.

"Section eleventh provides for new advertisements, if the first should fail to secure proposals, once in each year until each of said roads, &c., shall be put under contract, unless Congress shall otherwise order."

The Storeship Lexington—Plants from Japan.

The storeship Lexington, which sailed from this port on the 18th of June, 1853, with the presents for the Emperor of Japan, consisting of a locomotive, tender, car and circular railroad, and agricultural implements, has been absent about twenty months, and during this time has sailed 43,000 miles. She is now in the Navy Yard, and brings home a list of seventeen cases of plants, collected in China and consigned to this Government. These plants are as follows:

"Four each of yellow or tea roses, light red roses, pink roses, Lan Fan or flower, blue Magnolia, Qui Fas, China grafted black roses, Koco or small Magnolia flower, China yellow aram, Hymonnicalis, Logan, Guavas, fruit; Loquat fruit; Custard apple, fruit; Sweet Whampee, fruit; Sweet Carambola, or China gooseberry; Acid Carambola, or China gooseberry; Acid Whampee, Pumbalos, fruit; Mangres, fruit; large Mandarin oranges, lace skins; small Mandarin oranges, lace skins; China Mandarin oranges, hard skins; Cumquats, fruit; large yellow persimmon, large round rose apples, large round red persimmon, small round red persimmon small myrtle, large rose apple, small long rose apple. Lyches, fruit and flower; Papayas, fruit; very fine lace skin Mandarin oranges, Nondescript, blue lily; red double head star lily, China red lily, many heads; China yellow lily, many heads; China single head white lily, Cymbidium; 15 of black tea, two varieties.

The following plants are enclosed in boxes; 12 plants Nondescript, white small flower; 20 plants Lemon grass, 12 plants Peruvian crynam, 20 plants small hymonnicalus, 20 plants yellow day lilies, 20 plants Benjamin flower, 3 plants blue magnolia, 1 plant round rose apple, large, 2 plants China dates.

One case containing a variety of plants collected in Japan and in the island of the Great Loo Choo; also, one large Loo Choo plants not in case, and four tubs of water lily.

"Two cases, one of sugar cane from Java, and the other of exotic plants from St. Helena, collected by Dr. James Morrow, agriculturist to the Japan expedition."

The plants were gathered under the direction of Commodore Perry. They are in pretty good condition. A few of them withered and died on the passage. Capt. Glasson also brought home with him a real live Chinese from Hong Kong. He is a florist and gardener, and goes to Washington to attend to the plants. He is about twenty years of age, and named Oqui. He speaks English a little, which he learned on the voyage, and says he is now an American. He was born at Canton, and is tolerably good looking.—N. Y. Daily Times.

Mind and Money.

Give a man brains and no money. "and he is a slave" says a country paper.—We quote the paragraph because it expresses boldly, at least, what so many men are constantly acting out in their lives. Yet there is no truth whatever in the dogma. It is not brains that makes a poor man a slave. On the contrary, talent is the quality, which, more than all things else, assist to elevate the penniless boy into a capitalist. No matter what profession we select for examples, we shall find that those who have succeeded best in it have a larger share of brains than their rivals generally, and that it is in consequence of this superiority that they have succeeded. John Jacob Astor was a man of decided ability. So was Stephen Girard. It is true that the kind of talent required in commerce, manufactures or mechanics is not always that which would make a great lawyer, legislator or author. But it is also true that there can be no more fatal absurdity than to restrict the name of talent to the qualities demanded in what are popularly considered the more intellectual pursuits. It is not brains, therefore, that makes a man a slave, by keeping poor, which is what our contemporary means by slavery.

A week vanity, leading to a love of show; a sensual desire to gratify the palate with luxurious dishes, and a reckless indifference to the cost, provided the object desired can be obtained temporarily are among the causes which keep so many talented men poor, and make them consequently slaves; for just in proportion to the mastery which a man's appetites or weakness obtain over him, is the degree in which he is ready to sacrifice his independence and become virtually the tool and slave of others. An extravagant lawyer, who is ahead of his income, may generally be relied on as ready to do what is called "dirty work." A spendthrift writer mostly ends in becoming a mere literary hack. Men never sink to be the slaves of others until after they have long been slaves to themselves. That which causes this state of degradation, we repeat, is not want of brain, but want of those moral qualities which ought to direct and control it. Prudence, economy, thrift and perseverance fructify into wealth far sooner, when combined with talent, than when left to struggle on with but ordinary ability to aid them.

There is, we know, a wide spread notion, that extravagance, and the other weakness we have alluded to, are the natural heritage of talent. If that is so, it only teaches that greater care should be taken in the moral education of gifted persons, and they themselves, aware of their proclivities, should guard the more carefully against temptation. No general would dare to excuse himself for the loss of a town, by pleading a breach in the walls which he ought to have built up, or at least barricaded; and so men have no right to urge in extenuation of misconduct, weakness which were quite capable of being fortified against evil. Individual character grows strong in proportion as it is called on to overcome difficulty. Life is a struggle, a race, a school for constant discipline. In this great contest, brains fill the place that muscles did at the Olympic games; but training is also necessary moral training as that was physical. But we incline to think that the popular notion in reference to the natural tendency of talent to extravagance, is an error. If men have brains and no money, but a proper self control, they will become masters of others.—[Phila. Ledger.

Warming and Ventilating Railroad Cars—A New Invention.

On Saturday last, while making a flying trip a few miles east, on the Central Railroad, we witnessed a new invention for warming and ventilating railroad cars, which for simplicity, practicability and economy, struck us as being the best thing of the kind yet invented. The object of the invention is to obtain an equal temperature through the body of the coach, and to supply fresh and pure air. The air is taken in from the outside, and passes around a small furnace, and is thence forced through tin pipes along the bottom of the car, and distributed where most required. The car used for trying this invention was one of the company's new large cars, 45 feet long by 9 feet 6 inches wide—one of the most difficult to warm, as cars are ordinarily warmed, on account of the number of windows and the large amount of surface exposed to the air.

At the first trial, which took place on the 6th and 7th instant, when the thermometer ranged at from five to twenty-three degrees below zero, out of doors; there was no trouble in getting the inside of the car heated to a temperature of 75 to 80 degrees, while at the ends of the car, say four feet from the doors, the air was from three to four degrees warmer than in the centre, near the furnace. A second trial was made on Thursday last, in a car that left Albany at 11 1-4 P. M. for Buffalo, arriving here on Friday at 5 1-4 P. M., having been eighteen hours on the road, on account of an accident to the engine. One hundred and eighteen pounds of anthracite coal were used during the passage. On Friday night the experiment was repeated, on the return trip, and with an equally satisfactory result—the temperature being seventy degrees in every part of the car.

We regard this as the most simple, least expensive and best contrivance for warming and ventilating cars that Yankee ingenuity has yet brought forth. It can without difficulty and with trifling expense, be used in cars of all sorts, and unless superseded by something better, must soon come into general use.

The inventor of this apparatus is Mr. T. W. Stockton, formerly Assistant Superintendent of the Central Railroad, in this city, and Superintendent of the Buffalo and Brantford Railroad.—[Buffalo Courier, Feb. 7.

☞ A German writer gives this description of the Crimea.—"The Crimea is one of the finest and most picturesque countries of the world. Its soil, particularly in the southern parts of the peninsula, where vegetation is truly tropical, is of an extraordinary fertility. The valleys, watered by numberless brooks and small rivers, are excellently cultivated, abounding in productive corn-fields and vineyards. Of the latter, those near Sudak and Koos give the best grapes. Apricots, peaches, cherries, plums, almonds, pomegrantes, figs, pears, apples and melons are grown in gardens whilst the open land yields considerable quantities of cereals, millet, tobacco, honey, wax and silk. The breeding of horned cattle horses, and sheep, is of some importance, the latter yield the favorite small, gray, curly skins known as Crimean lambskins. In the northern parts of the peninsula, on the other hand, both wood and water are scarce, and the soil is generally poor, brackish, and unfit for cultivation."

The Good Mayor.

Mayor Wood of New York has shown how quickly and how certainly an enviable reputation may be gained by the honest, impartial and persevering discharge of high public duties. The instance is a striking one, and whilst it reflects the most exalted honor upon the individual, we also recognise in it the sure evidence that the people of our great cities are, in the main, and by an overwhelming majority, in favor of the strictest, the most unfaltering enforcement of the laws. It is in this aspect that the great social revolution that has characterized New York, for so it deserves to be esteemed, is most worthy of notice. Mayor Wood has demonstrated not only for New York, but for the people of every American city, that it is possible for them to be well governed, that the causes of disorder, of riot, and of crimes that have grown and strengthened among them, have not their foundation in any inevitable necessity from which they cannot escape—that the people are well disposed to rally in defence of law, order and justice, and willing to protect with countenance and approbation those who stand forward as their defenders against the social disturbers of a well-disposed, law-obeying community.

Among the victories of which peace can boast there is none more worthy of high appreciation than that effort of moral authority which conquers the turbulent, awes into peaceful obedience the passions of those that have heretofore set the law at naught, and exercizes over secret as well as open crime the wholesome fear of detection and punishment. The man who, clothing himself in the trust confided to him by his fellow citizens, accomplishes these results, is a victor of the proudest merit—he is, indeed, the "conqueror of a city" in an eminent sense, and deserves the civic crown of a good name and a revered memory.

It is to bring prominently forward these results that we dwell upon the example of Mayor Wood, and not from the mere desire of adding to the general cry of approval which has made his name familiar in all parts of the land. He has been the first to encounter, upon the field of its greatest power, the evils which, as all good citizens have seen, were becoming more and more fastened upon the large cities of our land. The attack was boldly, successfully and resolutely made, and the cause of law and order rejoices in the result. But the victory will be comparatively barren of benefit if its influence does not extend beyond New York. We would have the example contagious, until each of our cities can boast of a Mayor who has the desire to understand, and the will to discharge all the duties of a post, which to those immediately concerned, is the most important that can be conferred.—[Baltimore American.

Sending Unemployed to the Country.

The following is certainly a laudable object, and ought to be encouraged. It is decidedly better to send industrious men to where they can get employment, than to make paupers of them here. It accords better with the feelings of independence that vibrate in the bosom of every honest man, to obtain his own livelihood, rather than to be dependent upon others. A penny earned, by such, is better than fifty given by charity; besides it is working off the redundant population, and placing them in a more natural and legitimate position:

"Yesterday fifty men were sent to Schuylkill county, Pa., by the American and Foreign Emigrant Protective and Employment Society, besides a number of others within the past few days to other sections. Orders for large numbers are on hand, and pressing applications are made by persons out of employ, but the want of funds limits the Society's usefulness in this way. We are requested to say that those citizens who have expressed their approbation of the Society's objects and plans, and intimated their intention to contribute, are earnestly solicited to send in their contributions without delay to any of the following gentlemen:—Peter Cooper, Esq., President, No. 13 Burling slip; Francis A. Palmer, Treasurer, Broadway Bank; Mortimer De Motte, Corresponding Secretary, No. 837 Broadway; Rev. D. R. Thomason, General Agent, Society Offices, No. 27 Greenwich street, or Nos. 13 and 14 Bible House, Astor Place."

By the arrival of the clipper clam-boat "Specific," from Coney Island, we are enabled to contradict the report that the sand bank there had failed. There has been some panic among the clams, but it has passed away, and they are as "happy" as usual at "high water."

A Huge Pile of Serpents.

Humboldt says: "In the savannahs of Izacubo, Guiana, I saw the most wonderful and terrible spectacle that can be seen; and although it be not uncommon to the natives, no traveller has ever mentioned it. We were ten men on horseback, two of whom took the lead, in order to sound the passages, while I preferred to skirt the great forests. One of the blacks who formed the vanguard returned at full gallop, and called to me, 'Here, sir, come and see the serpents in a pile.' He pointed to something elevated in the middle of the savannah or swamp, which appeared like a bundle of arms. One of my company said, 'This is certainly one of the assemblages of serpents which heap themselves on each other after a violent tempest. I have heard of these, but never saw any; let us proceed cautiously, and not too near them. When we were within twenty paces of it, the terror of our horses prevented our approaching nearer, to which none of us were inclined. On a sudden, the pyramid mass became agitated; a horrid hissing issued from it, thousands of serpents rolled spirally on each other, and shot forth out of the circle their hideous heads, presenting their envenomed darts and fiery eyes to us. I own I was the first to draw back, but when I saw this formidable phalanx remain at its post and appear to be more disposed to defend itself than to attack us, I rode round, in order to view its order of battle, which faced the enemy on every side. I then thought what could be the design of this numerous assemblage; and I concluded that this species of serpent dreaded some colossean enemy, which might be the great serpent or Cayman, and they reunite themselves after seeing the enemy, so as to resist this enemy in a mass."

☞ At the recent disturbance in Peru, one hundred and fifty Americans, disappointed gold-seekers on the Amazon, joined Castilla, and through their exertions he succeeded in obtaining a victory over the government. One of their number, it is said, by the name of Johnson, got possession of a regimental chest belonging to Echenique's force, with $70,000 in gold in it, which he divided with his comrades. Mr. John Butts, of Charlestown, Mass., who left that city for Peru, some time since, for the purpose of putting up some machinery for the Peruvian government, was a Colonel in the conquering army of Castilla.

Mrs. Swisshelm on Polygamy.

A new question is likely to arise in politics.—"Shall the Mormons, with their polygamy, be admitted into the Union?" We wish to commit ourselves in advance, and say yes, certainly, to be sure, why not? We have thirteen states now, in which polygamy is practised and provided for by law. We have an administration whose chief business it is to defend, spread, and perpetuate the institution. Now, we like variety; and as these thirteen States have all one kind of polygamy, and the Mormons another, we want the Salt Lake folks to make up a collection. We have long been in national communion with a set of men who keep concubines, and sell their children. We should like a specimen of those who educate and support all their offspring.

To our minds a plurality of wives is decent and proper, compared to purchasing mistresses like sheep, as do our brethren of the South, or yet to licensing brothels and gaming and drinking houses, as do the "fathers" of our eastern cities.

While men are sole legislators they will always provide for their own vices; and we think the Mormons have taken by far the most decent course.—The present members of this confederacy have not been and are not so very circumspect in their own morals that they need be very prudish about their company.—[American Saturday Visitor.

Horrible State of Affairs in Utah.

Oh no! The above is a mistake. We have read so much about the corruption of Utah, that one could hardly think of putting it anywhere else; and as some of our cotemporaries have been up in the mountains so long, that they never can find time to look about home, we publish the following for their especial information; for it is but neighborly for us to attend some little to their affairs when they manifest such special interest in the affairs in Utah.

The following took place in the chaste city of Gotham, where so many of our editors are shocked with polygamy:

Dealers in Human Flesh.

A woman applied to the worthy Mayor of this city for the arrest of a man named Reinhart, charged with the attempting to entice her into a den of prostitution. The scoundrel has escaped arrest, but we learn from the reports in the papers that Christian Herman, the keeper of the house of prostitution, was brought before the Mayor, and made his affidavit, the material parts of which are as follows:—He acknowledges that he is the keeper of a house of ill-fame at No. 100 Church street; that the girl Mary Windur was brought there by Charles Reinhart for the purpose of prostitution. He paid Reinhart $2, and says that shortly afterwards the girl left the house, and that he has not seen her since. It is stated on good authority, that the gangs of vulture runners who supply houses of prostitution with victims, make from $2 to $5 on each girl they succeed in ruining. The price is graded by the beauty of the girl. If good looking, $2; fine looking, $3; handsome, $4; very handsome, $5. Thus these poor girls are forced into lives of misery, and there remain until disease damns their constitutions—when some of them are fortunate enough to get a home in Ward's Island Hospital.—[N. Y. Alien Passengers.

Mr. A. G. Goodwin, the Alien Passenger Superintendent for the Port of Boston, has made his annual report, by which it appears that there were landed at Boston during the year past, 1,035 vessels, bringing 31,000 passengers. Of these, about 7,000 were American citizens; 17,167 were from Ireland; 5,083 were from the British Provinces; 2,276 from England; 1,539 from Sweden; 811 from Germany; 787 from Scotland—chiefly Scotch girls to be employed in our factories; and lesser numbers from nearly all other European countries. The general condition of the immigrants is said to be better than on any previous year. There have been sent to their respective countries, 239 paupers and destitute persons. The whole amount received for commutation fees, fines, &c., was $30,344,47.

Money and Its Influence.

A very curious paragraph has been going the rounds lately, in relation to the Legislature of California, which has created no little amusement. It would seem that in that far-off land of gold, where they have been digging up the precious metal by buckets full, and picking up nuggets by the hundred weight; where the streams have been ransacked and turned out of their course, the earth turned over, the rocks smashed to pieces, and the whole face of nature changed with the convulsive throes of the yellow fever; where immense fortunes have been made, and even gamblers could afford to put down fifty and one hundred weight of gold at a throw; that the representatives, the Legislature of that body, could not afford to pay a minister to pray for them. They must have been believers in two parts of John Wesley's principles of economy, without subscribing to the third. He taught, "get all you can, keep all you can, give all you can." They believe, it would seem, in the two first, but repudiate the last. Some of them were ungodly souls, and did not want to be prayed for; and others, perhaps a little more pious, wished to be prayed for, but would not pay for it. The ministers, on their part, did not believe in praying for nothing. In the reports one had one excuse, and another another; one had not piety enough to pray for nothing, and another too much religion to associate with a Mormon; and thus, with all their gold, they were near going without the bénédiction du ciel, until a Mormon offered himself, and they were dependent upon this heretic to do their religious services. Now, we think it hardly fair when ministers, religious and political, are both working for money, for the one, because he has the power, to vote largely for his own pay, and vote the other nothing. If we were one of the craft, we certainly would complain.

The following reflections were elicited by a reference to the above.

Money seems to be the great moving power: it was money that took such a host of people to that land; money that placed the legislators in their seats, and sustains them there; and not only in California, but elsewhere, it is money for which the people preach and pray. It regulates earthly things, and opens the way to heaven; and without it you can't get either beef, bread, potatoes, or prayers; without it you must go without either the blessings of earth or heaven. It is the great moving power. Archimedes said, "Give me a place whereon to put a fulcrum, and I will raise the world." Did he ever reflect that money was the base and fulcrum that both moves this world and opens the portals of heaven? It regulates morals, controls politics, governs philanthropy, gains victories, makes and breaks matrimonial engagements, has a very saving influence in religious matters, and enters into all the ramifications of life; it literally

The finer and more noble sentiments of the human soul seem to be tarnished and blunted by the influence of the golden god. Men seek office generally because it is profitable; they will calumniate and slander their opponents, because the other dog is fighting for the same bone. Statesmen will want their votes recorded, in order that they can cut and come again. Ministers can receive calls according to their value, and are bought and sold like any other commodity; and hence, in State Legislatures and in Congress, the legislators must be paid for doing the State business; and persons must be paid for praying to God to help them to do it. Then, after they are well paid, the one is very patriotic and the other very pious; but take away the glittering bait, and in very many instances the patriot would vanish, and the minister find another call. The old prophet seemed to understand things pretty correctly when he said, "The priests preach for hire, and the prophets divine for money; and yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us?"

Why can't we have a change? Why must we go on at this miserable jog-trot rate forever? Why must the finest and most noble feelings of the human soul be trodden under foot eternally? Why must patriotism, virtue, religion, philanthropy, genius, talent and worth be sacrificed at the shrine of the god of Mammon? We go in for a change; a change in priesthood, and a change in the order of financials, in government matters. We believe that the seats of our Congress, and the halls of the State Legislatures, could be filled with men of talent, who would feel a pride in being the representatives of this nation, without purse or scrip, and that many offices of trust could be ably represented without emolument; men of worth would certainly be more likely to hold responsible offices, and this miserable scramble for loaves and fishes be abolished. We need not talk about our cheap government, in comparison with Europe, that we know; but that is old fogyism. We are living in an age of improvement; we have improved a little upon the old system; let us progress, throw off our cumbrous machinery, leave the bones for the dogs to fight about, and act as statesmen and philanthropists. We believe this can be done, but have less faith in ministers of religion; we are afraid that our pulpits would be empty, and our legislators unprayed for and unshriven, if they had to operate without purse or scrip. Jesus, when he sent forth his disciples, said, "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor yet brass, in your purses, nor scrip for your journey; for the workman is worthy of his meat." We are afraid if the same call was made now, there would not be many to respond; however, we leave this matter with them and their God; religion is much easier now than then. We have made great improvements, and understand things much better than Jesus and his disciples did; it was a barbarous age in which they lived; besides, how was it possible that the carpenter's son, and a few fishermen, could know as much about God and religion as our modern divines? To do without purse or scrip might do for the common herd; but men of refinement, education and talent know better. Well, we shall have to let them, with Dives, have and enjoy the good things of this world; but if we cannot reform them, let us have a political reform; let us do away with our large political stipends, emoluments and salaries, and act upon the principles of patriotism and fraternity, free and untrammeled by the golden god. Let us cast him out of our capitol, out of our Legislatures, Executive and Judiciary. If officials, worthy men, have means, let them be satisfied with the fame that their disinterested patriotism would impart; if poor, let their constituents, who choose them on account of their worth, provide for their board, and let them be a living example for all other departments of economy and disinterestedness; take off the burthens from the people, and leave the nation free.

AS CUBA and the Sandwich Islands are both places with which we are getting considerably mixed up, and towards which one of our pictorial cotemporaries has very graphically represented Brother Jonathan as having a decided squint, we have no doubt but that the articles under those heads will be read with interest.

We are glad to learn that Mr. McGraw has obtained an appropriation, as per our Congressional reports, of 36,000 dollars. It certainly is liberal, and we now have a right to expect the faithful transmission of the mail to Utah, which at the present is so deplorably neglected.

In the absence of all late news from Utah, we publish a private letter that was handed to us by a friend to whom it was sent to read. It contains much good sound sense, and useful instructions to emigrants.

The Conference minutes of Philadelphia, and Union Branch, Quincy, Penn., have been inadvertently omitted; they will appear in our next.

There have been eighteen baptized at Tom's River, and a good work progressing.

WESTERN NEWS.

Territorial Governors.

It would seem from the Western papers that there is some little trouble among the Governors of the Territories; party feeling, and individual interests, of course, have a leading influence in relation to these matters. The seats of Government cannot be on every new town site, nor can every body be accommodated in their peculiar plans and interests, and Governors and Presidents are generally bad that can't make every body rich. If the above Governors have not so many wives they certainly are a thousand times worse spoken of than Gov. Young, among their own constituents. Acting Governor Cuming has had his share and the Governor of Kansas has not been behind. We are not prepared to enter into the merits of the case; but under the circumstances should make great allowances. The Governor of Minnesota however is in a pickle. We find that gentile Governors are subject to like passions as other men. We clip the following from the Council Bluffs Bugle:

From our exchanges we learn that Governors, other than that of Nebraska, are having a time of it. Governor Reeder, of Kansas, is denounced by the people of that Territory as a base, dishonest officer, and probably quite as unjustly as is acting Governor Cuming. The following, from an exchange, shows how they are getting along in Minnesota:

"While we write, the halls of the court house of Ramsey county are ringing with the 'eloquence' of counsel in a case of assault and battery, wherein the United States is plaintiff, and one Willis A. Gorman, Governor of Minnesota, defendant.

"The prosecuting witness appears in court with a very black eye; and the defendant is reducing himself to the level of a common street bully by allowing the question of his criminality to be tested in the Police Court of the city of St. Paul."

In regard to many inquiries that we have had about the soil, climate, productions, &c., of the Western country, we shall next week give some information which we have not room for this.

More Indian Outrages.

We clip the following from the Bugle published in Council Bluff city. It is a report whether true or not, we of course can't say; we give it as we find it.

"Yesterday a report reached town that a small hunting party of Omaha Indians have just reached their village from the Buffalo grounds. An interpreter who was in the company is said to state that this side and near the Loupe Fork, they came upon some wagons and carriages apparently recently deserted or left. He reports one heavy carriage, one light carriage or buggy, two 2 horse wagons, all with harness, two ox wagons and chains and other impliments and camp articles, and on the ground near by was found the leg of a man still encased in a boot, and partly devoured by wolves. He says that various papers were strewed about on the ground.

We rather fear that there is something in the above report, and we hope that there will be a company immediately fitted out to inquire into this matter.

It should most certainly be attended to at once and some means be employed to stop this wholesale murdering."

Letter from Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 1854.

BROTHER NED,—I have just received a letter from J. McCurdy, the first since he went to Iron county. He is about two hundred and eighty miles south of us, and he likes the country and is satisfied, according to his letter, which we were rejoiced to hear, for Jake is a good boy, and so is his wife. I have answered his letter, but did not say I would go down there to live, as this place is good enough for me until I am sent to some other by authority, and then I am on hand to go. We are still living in the little cabin seven by nine or more, enjoying ourselves as usual, as you will see by Authony's letter to Retby. Write and let us know who are coming out in the Spring, and what time they will start, &c. I do not want one good Mormon left behind, but bad ones we have no use for.

I want to give them a little advice, that is, to those who are helped out, for all cannot help themselves certainly. Let them come with the least expense possible, and to do that, they should take a deck passage on the boats. It is not so pleasant, but never mind that, it is a short trip and then when they come on the Plains, they will have many little nick-nacks that could not be expected, if all the money was spent for cabin passages, &c. Some of the folks that came out with us found that out, to their satisfaction or dissatisfaction. I told them it would be so at the start, I guess they found it true. Brother Billy Reamer had the best idea of these things before I left, and I guess his senses have not left him yet, if he has had the rheumatics.

Brother Sammy and Theodore can give all needful information, but perhaps they may forget some things. They should buy their Larlets by the coil as it comes much cheaper. Size one-half or three-quarter inch, and of the best quality. Wooden picket pins are as good as any, and will save expense, as they can make them without trouble, and a supply should be made before they get beyond the timber. Tell them to get a "screw-jack," to grease their wagons, and secure plenty of grease before they start on the road.

The English Saints are allowed one hundred pounds of flour to each person, but we did not have as much, we were short before we arrived here, at least some were, but we had enough by dividing round. They must send us word how they are getting along on the road, but I expect they can get along first-rate, and we shall yet see you all here. George Woodward has called in to see us, and is talking to the ladies while I write. We had a great Rail Road meeting at two o'clock in the Tabernacle. Won't you come over and help us, for you must be a great man now, seeing you are Sheriff of Ocean, but you will be greater when you obey the Gospel and come to Salt Lake, bringing with you your better half. Ned if you was only coming out this year, and Retby also, how nice it would be, but we will wait, but don't you wait but come along and be happy, for this is the place, we find it so, and can't help telling it; I wish the folks knew just what kind of people there are here, then I think they would shut their heads, and say no more about the Mormons. But they are troubled about us, and well they may be, for we intend to overrun the world, with righteousness we do. Poor devils, let them blow, it is no more than their fathers have done before them, and when they get their blast out, they can stop, if they want to, if not they can blow till they "bust;" send me some of them old Spanish bridle bits if you have any.

I hunt but little now, but shall try it shortly, I have some good dogs, Roger is prime; and I have another half grey-hound, they make a team.

Mormonism is true, and you must obey it. Our love to all. Your brother, J. L.

The Crimea and Cuba—the one the arena of active, and the other of projected hostilities—may be said to absorb the world's attention. The filibustero is talked of in Washington, London, Paris, Berlin, Madrid, Vienna and St. Petersburg. His existence is a fixed fact; his characteristics, as the pioneer of inevitable destiny, everywhere known. He is "the coming man," and French Commodores, British Commandants, Spanish Port-Masters, people of every degree and of all colors, must needs be on the look-out for him. Though Falstaff would certainly have hesitated to march through Coventry with such troops as are being collected, we think of them as not without a certain cavalier bearing, and in their accoutrements not remotely resembling the personnel of those interesting gentlemen one is apt to meet in the unguarded passes of the Pyrenees.

Before the flower of the Gulf is

"—— Plucked from the jaws

whilst the 43,500 square miles in question are only an object of ravenous desire, it may be as well to take a historical retrospect of Cuba, which after its discovery by Columbus would seem never to have had a quiet time, or at the most fitful slumbers—serving as a sort of thermometer to the agitations of the old continent, just as a lake in the interior of Switzerland that never fails of being agitated when the waters of the distant ocean are stirred by storms. The last appanage of Spain in the Western Hemisphere, Cuba has always been looked on by the great maritime powers as a prize some day, by arms or diplomacy, to be won. Again and again invaded, and sorely tried by the arbitrary enactments of the mother country, it has remained "loyal and faithful." Virtually held in mortgage by England, this country was just re-trying to buy it out, when lo! a foreign banking house offers, on very acceptable conditions, to liquidate Spanish debts: thus removing all temptation to its sale.

Cuba, termed successively Iuana, Ferdinand, Isabella, Fernandigo, Saintiago, Ave Maria, has properly returned to its Indian appellation. The early pastoral life of Asia scarcely furnishes a scene of such pleasing rural simplicity, security and peace as existed there amid the Indians, when it was first discovered by Columbus. Divided into nine principalities, under as many caciques, each principality was distinct, and each cacique was sovereign, yet without dissension, jealousy or fear. A singular intelligence must have presided over their separate councils. Though expert hunters and fishermen, and not wanting in physical vigor, they proved gentle in disposition; and though it is affirmed they had a love of ease, and engaged in extreme personal indulgence, there is no evidence they did not live previously to the arrival of the Spaniards in consonance with their state, their character, and the requirements of the circumstances surrounding them. Their docility was taken advantage of; they were enslaved, a cacique was burnt—his noble defence one of the proudest mementoes of that consciousness which pertains to man of his right to liberty and the pursuit of peaceful industry. Thenceforth, with the Indians of Cuba as of this Continent, it may be said, in the words of Everett—"Their heraldry is but a broken bow, their history a tale of shameless wrong and infinite misery."

The year 1514 witnessed the founding of Santiago and Assumpcion, of Barocoa in the interior, and soon after, at the north of the island, San Cristobal de la Habana. In 1519 the name was transferred, the possession of Jamaica inclining the population to the southern shores. Barocoa was the first bishopric and capitol, then Santiago. In founding these cities, the territories of the Indians were, of course, given away to Spanish settlers. The year 1530 witnessed their liberation; they were congregated for purposes of husbandry in specified districts; but at this time comparatively few remained, they had been exported to the mines of Mexico, and there had perished.

Eight years later we find Habana was laid in ashes by the guns of a French privateer. It had no Moro then, but Hernando de Soto, the Governor, lost no time in planning and building the castles of La Fuerza. The wonder is that the port had no more hostile visiters. The ships from Mexico to Spain made it their stopping place, and there were golden prizes to be had.

In 1589 came the first Captain General, Juan de Teyeda, under the title of El Maestre de Campo, indicative of the military character of his rule, for Spain, which had made of the glorious ports of her South American possessions so many prison portals, understood no rule but that which was arbitrary and exacting. Before that period we have a goodly array of officials, headed off by the wife of the Adelentado of the Floridas, who was also Governor of Cuba, but who chose to remain but a few days on the island, and thought he could not do better than entrust the actual Governorship to Dona Isabel de Bobadilla. The interior was yet unexplored, and the chief residents of the cities were merely large breeders of cattle. The lady Bobadilla had long gone home, when Havana was again attacked by the French. This was in 1554; thence for twenty-five years the religious communities flourished without check, and, though the mines were neglected, timber was being extensively shipped.

Cuba had now to deal with a piratical war, an incursion tax, or "tax of pirates," was levied by the government. A further levy was laid on New Spain, for contributions to erect the Moro and Punta, two fortresses, of which the pirates, who usually sailed under French or English colors, took advantage of by anchoring within them. These pirates were the occasion of other troubles. The civil and military power came into collision. That naval officers were put in possession of the fortresses, gave immense umbrage to the shore men. The coat-of-arms of Philip II bears on a blue field three castles argent, the Fuerza, the Moro and the Punta, and a golden key to indicate the key of the Indies, which is surmounted by a crown. At the commencement of the seventeenth century, the pirates were still at their profitable vocation, and a bishop is carried off to sea for eighty days, and only redeemed with the befitting ransom of five arrobas of beef and 200 ducats.

In 1626 a Captain-General is sent home for selling a cargo of negroes without a license. Whilst he was off, a civil and military jurisdiction were combined, in a conclave of two, whose united wisdom resulted in drawing a chain across the harbor of Havana, and admitting no vessel whatever, till a new Governor-General arrived—an arrangement that was laughed at over Europe.

In 1650, the date of the Commonwealth in England, there was no limit to apprehensions of invasion, and five years later, a fleet that had sailed by order of the Protector, ostensibly on a conciliatory errand amid the West India islands, but really to take Jamaica, landed a force near Havana, which utterly failed, the men being terrified—so Spanish chroniclers allege—by the noise of the land crabs and the sight of fire flies, which were supposed to be the enemy in ambuscade. An attempt by the French, twenty years later, fared no better, and, if we are to believe historians, from a still less cause—the cry of al arma! to arms! having sufficed to drive back into their ships a force of 800 men, who had landed on the eastern part of the island. The year 1761 witnessed the capture of Havana by the English. The first rendezvous of the fleet was Martinique, the second Jamaica; the old Bahama channel, for which it was necessary to double the Western Cape, was chosen; a land force was put ashore six miles from the Moro, the whole British force numbering more than 4,000 men. The Governor would not believe his eyes when he saw the fleet of 250 sail in view, and before doing anything, even to the calling in of the militia and military, spent his time in organizing a junta, and preparing a proclamation of war against England. Everything in those old times was to be done by rule; they were such times as those when a European sovereign was roasted to death, because there was no dignitary in his chamber whom the office of drawing back the monarch's chair from the fire befitted. The story is told by telling that the Moro surrendered, and two weeks after the city; that the spoils reached nearly three million dollars, equally divided between the naval and military services, of which the commanders got the lion's share; the men some twenty dollars each.

In 1763, England delivered up the Island, according to a treaty of peace, and from that time it dates its chief aggrandizement. Ten years had not gone over before the Jesuits were expelled. Indigo and other exotic plants were introduced, commerce was extended, immigration encouraged, and a career of uninterrupted prosperity was promised, when the French revolution broke out, and simultaneously conspiracies in the island, which resulted in the expulsion not only of the negroes of St. Domingo, but of a large and wealthy French population.

In 1807, Cuba was threatened by English troops, and in the same year, with an alliance at least in object, the French effected a landing at Batabano, after the fashion of Col. Kinney's proposed expedition "to colonize and cultivate," but the Spanish authorities, without coming to blows, were wary, and offered to transport them gratis to St. Domingo or France, and were as true as their word.

The dynasty of Napoleon, and revolutions and changes in Spain, gave these precious authorities a vast deal of trouble; they were afraid of proclaiming a new monarchy, lest the old should suddenly come into power. One Captain-General made a terrible mistake. For particulars, are they not written in the chronicles of Cuba? We will pass the insurrectionary efforts of the English Vice-Consul Turnbull. The greatest military despot Cuba ever had was Gen. Leopold O'Donnell, who came in 1843, and who has figured since so largely at home. Dreadful stories are told of his exactions, and funny ones of how his wife turned everything from stale bread to street mud to account. He was the successor of a man who left office as poor as he had entered it. Later Governors are sufficiently familiar with us as to character and policy.

The progress of British and American shipping, which, even more than the loss of her American possessions, has driven Spain from the high seas, has necessarily changed the character of her foreign policy, and from absolute restriction in respect to all other than her own flag, she has sought to establish a commercial reciprocity in its strictest sense. The restraints and trammels complained of in intercourse with Cuba, result as much from difference of disposition between the Spanish and other nations, as in arbitrary and shifting laws; though it is not to be forgotten that since 1825 the island has been virtually under martial law, the Captain General having been then invested "with the whole extent of power granted to the Governors of besieguered towns."

Whilst at the first Cuba retained traces of the independence and liberality of spirit which characterized the Moors, she has latterly been reduced to a servitude complete as it is deplorable. She has been deprived of that delegate and representative authority which she enjoyed, and which new Constitutions in Spain have successively guaranteed. A difference has been made between Cubans and Spaniards; spies have been introduced into all departments, and suspicion made the proof of crime. Neither Spaniards nor Cubans complain, so much of absolute rule as the want of a liberal policy. The history and fate of the Lopez invasion is known to all; but the alarm that invasion excited, so disproportionate to the means of aggression as confined to the invaders themselves, indicated a well founded apprehension that there existed on the island every element for successful insurrection—the timely fruit of all this absolutism.

The Sandwich Islands.

Social Condition—Social Changes and Existing Influences—Qualities of Natives—Effects of "Civilization"—Value of Missionary Labors—Island Wants and Benefits—Religious Despotism—Decrease of Native Population and its Cause—Intolerance towards Women—Physical Scenery—Material Resources and Prospects.

The interest now attaching to the Sandwich Islands, officially termed the Hawaiian, whether as respects their geographical, political, commercial, social or religious position, probably constitute a sufficient apology for any space which the facts, views and opinions herewith submitted may chance to occupy. The social condition of the islanders, native and foreigners, opens a vast field for investigation, for a wise and judicious analysis of the elements composing it. In respect to religion all that is required is to examine the character of the field, and ascertain what influences are there at work, and what are the advantages presented for the inculcation and spread of the true faith. In order to do this, it may be desirable to glance at the changes to which the islands have been subjected, and the agencies to which those changes are, separately or together, to be attributed. So far as the natives are concerned, it is certain that they have passed from being warlike, treacherous, and cruel, to mildness of temper, tractability of disposition, and to be desirous of knowledge. Gifted with the vivid imagination and the strong passions of the Indian races of this continent, from whom, as is generally held, they originally sprung, they have been easily rendered susceptible to all foreign impressions; and possessing a certain degree of that intelligence which characterises the Asiatic, they have proved themselves to have the power of appreciating what is excellent, morally, intellectually, and materially, and have especially excelled in the art and in the practice of imitation. There are writers who would have us believe that they were the guileless beings whom Rousseau has chosen to impersonate as in a savage state; but there is little need of any such high wrought sketches, although there is a simplicity in the Hawaiian character which is truly charming, and which, being an inherent trait, must have existed even when the islands were visited by LA PEROUSE, who declared the natives the most rascally set he had ever seen. Nowhere throughout the world has what is termed civilization come into such direct contact with what is termed semi-barbarism, for the twilight of a superior intelligence, and a certain adaptability to civilization existed there when that civilization came; and in place of the triumph of the latter in the utter extinguishment of its opposing element, the two have strangely coalesced.

As a result, so far as the natives are concerned, we find them both degraded and impoverished, their numbers weakened by disease and thinned by death, misery where there was peace, discontent where formerly was only satisfaction, and vices for virtues,—a result which some missionaries seem to regard as amply compensated by the erection of buildings called churches, and the collection of floating masses called congregations, the establishment of a moral code under penal laws, and the exaction, or attempted exaction of a complete uniformity to European modes of life, said missionaries themselves never having the best moral reputation, and grasping at political power whenever the chance has been presented. Witness Mr. JUDD, who at last was so ignominiously expelled from office by pressure of public sentiment. And as for the natives being influenced by their teachings, Catholic or Protestant, the little hold they have secured on the natives is shown by the readiness with which large bodies of men have passed from one faith to another at the dictation of chiefs, or as political policy prompted.

Some other and more effective cause is in the introduction of the many arts of life, for the acquisition and practice of which the natives have so remarkable an adaptability, and in the progress of which are to be found as yet almost the sole evidences of "improvement." Not learned scholars, but "learned blacksmiths" were what they wanted, men who could handle not the pen but the plough; men who had read the history of the early life of nations, and not despising small things could teach them how to thatch their dwellings, change a home of reeds and grass into one of stone; how to hoe, and sow, and reap. Any benefit thus conferred has been more than counterbalanced by a certain religious despotism, which intertwines itself with all their relations. Owing to the penal code imposing fine and imprisonment for illegitimate offspring, infanticide and abortion abound; often mother and offspring together perish—itself a main cause of the rapid decrease of population. When the prophetic poets of these islands sang the doom of their race, they surely saw the day when a foreign aggression, and the spirit of foreign intolerance, should compel the women of their nation to prevent their offspring from seeing the light, or cause them to strangle these at their birth, rather than submit to personal degradation. There was a day when it was death to a Hawaiian woman to eat certain food reserved for men and the gods—when she eat ever at a distance as an inferior; but the former prohibition was one easily avoided, and as to the latter she can scarcely be said to be elevated when the choice left to her is between maternal love and personal suffering and degradation. Besides, if she marries a foreigner she can thenceforth have no redress in law for any injuries he may choose to impose on her from feelings of jealousy, or from some other motive.

Notice the extent and rapidity of depopulation. When Capt. Cook visited the islands, they contained 400,000 inhabitants; the census of 1832 reduces these to 130,313; that of 1836, notwithstanding the vast increase of foreigners, to 108,519, whilst the census of 1848 declares the whole population of the eight islands to be only 80,641; the deaths for that period 7,943, and the births only 1,478. The salubrity of the climate of the Sandwich Islands, so favorable to pulmonary complaints, and inviting to mental tranquility, would seem to pledge health and long life, were the laws of nature not counteracted by the machinations, bigotry and prejudices of men, who here illustrate the profound remark that intellectual rule—a rule founded on mere mental dogmas, quite irrespective of surrounding circumstances, is of all others the most tyrannical. Let men revolutionize, if they choose, commerce and politics, but let them have regard to the natural character of men, and not by arbitrary impositions countervail divine regulations.

These islands, with their magnificent scenery and glorious groves, their ocean views, their inland streams and cataracts, their delicious valleys, their magnificent ranges of mountains girded with flowing forests, and crowned by lava cones of which Time makes his grandest monument, telling not alone of age, but power—this ocean Eden, which laughs from shore to shore, ready to nestle in its bosom the commerce of the world—offers a noble sphere for that highest philanthropy which concerns itself with the physical and material welfare of a people. Like the mists continually rise around its inland mountains, changing with each moment the distant scenery, and then, lost in heaven, leaving what they had shrouded, more clear, and fresh and beautiful, so after the many phases which the social and religious life of the Hawaiians has undergone, we may yet have hope that human error which has begirt them will disappear in the sunlight of truth, developing the better elements of their character, a character which amid all the injustice to which it has been subjected, has "not yet lost all its original brightness."

Congressional.

DEAR SIR,—I send you some of the proceedings in Congress yesterday. In the Senate the sword of General Jackson, which was worn by him during his military career, was presented to the Government by Mr. Cass and Mr. Bell. It was a gift from the heirs of the late General Armstrong, to whom it was willed by the original owner at his death. A great crowd of ladies and gentlemen had gathered in the capitol to witness the presentation.

The South concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill to promote the efficiency of the navy. The Post Office bill occupied the remainder of the day, which was passed. One clause in this bill allows to Mr. McGraw, contractor for the mail from Independence to Salt Lake, the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars, to enable him to continue the mails. The losses Mr. Mc. has sustained by the Indians, and the prospect of future difficulties was the principal cause in inducing the Senate to grant this liberal allowance. Mr. Mc. says, if the bill with this clause passes the House our friends in Utah in future shall have their mails. This, no doubt, will make the citizens of the Mormon Territory rejoice when they see the mails.

The House passed a bill granting the right of way to railroads and plank roads through the Government lands in the territories.

M. W.

Mr. Jones offered a resolution giving the sole power to the several States to make laws regulating the admission or exclusion of foreigners.

This, we think, is putting the thing in a legitimate shape.

Mr. Seward defended the character of Mr. Gwin, which had been previously attacked by Messieurs Grinnell, Tillotson, Livingston, and others, whom he speaks of as being highly respectable, but thinks a misunderstanding exists between them and his colleague. Mr. Seward made a statement of the origin of the two bills, and the course he had pursued in relation to the matter.

Mr. Fish's bill states that no passage money shall be received or retained for passengers who die on the passage; and further, that passengers shall not provide nor cook their own food, but that their supplies shall be furnished and cooked for them.

Mr. Seward's bill is opposed to both these provisions.

In the House, the Texas Creditors' bill was reported by the Committee of Conference. Mr. Breckenridge reported that the Committee recommended an agreement to seven millions seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The bill passed.

"The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the State Department, showing that during the year 1854 there arrived in this country by sea 460,474 persons; 27,765 in Massachusetts, 327,976 in New York, 150,325 in Pennsylvania, 18,154 in Maryland, 51,169 in Louisiana, 14,487 in California. Of the entire number, nearly 49,000 were born in England, 101,606 in Ireland, 13,317 in France, 206,654 in Germany, and from China, 13,100. Occupations not stated, 234,396; merchants, 15,173; mechanics, 31,470; mariners, 1,260, miners, 2,185; farmers, 87,188; laborers, 82,420; lawyers, 35; physicians, 237; clergymen, 139; servants, 33,010; other occupations, 2,591. From September 30, 1843, to December 30, 1854, 3,174,396 arrived by sea."

"Mr. Cobb, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting lands to Alabama to aid in the construction of railroads.

"Pending its consideration the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill.

"Among the amendments adopted was one appropriating $10,000 for the protection of life on the coast of Massachusetts, to be expended by the Boston Humane Society. The Committee rose."

The Pacific Railroad bill was reported to the House, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.—[New York Sun.

Correspondence.

FOR THE MORMON.

To Elder John Taylor:

DEAR BROTHER—Unused as I am in communicating my thoughts publicly, it is with diffidence I take my pen to write for your perusal. You are at liberty to make such disposal of the following as you deem best.

I was born in the State of New York, Cayuga county, township of Genoa, August 3, 1801. My parents, grand and great grand parents, were born in the State of New Jersey. My father was one of the early converts to Methodism, having experienced religion and united with that body of religionists at the age of sixteen years. He has been a very exemplary man, and a pattern of piety ever since, (I can speak from personal knowledge for forty years.) He is now living, retaining his mental faculties, although in his 87th year. He says the "glory of Methodism has departed."

In the winter of 1832 and '33, I first heard about "the Gold Bible," or the Book of Mormon and its doctrines, advocated by the Rev. Brigham Young, now President of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints. I had formerly been acquainted with him and his brother Joseph, as "Reformed Methodist Preachers." Through the persuasion of my friends, I had my name put down as a member on trial among the Methodists. I remained as a probationer until "Mormonism" was introduced into the neighborhood. I attended their meetings, and was gravely informed by the class leader, if I intended to become a member of their Church, I must not attend the Mormon meetings. I gave him to to understand that I was anxious to investigate this "new-fangled doctrine," as he called it, and they might blot my name out of their books.

I soon became convinced that there was a satisfaction in believing the Gospel, and was resolved to obey its requirements; accordingly, on the 15th of April, 1833, I was baptised for the remission of my sins. There were six added to the Church on that day by baptism and confirmation, including myself and wife. I soon found that I had not counted the cost—my former friends and associates were shy of me—I had become a Mormon. At the next election, my political friends could not vote for me—I was a "Mormon;" that word had then a harsher sound than at present. In the the spring of 1834, our little branch numbered fifteen members. We were favored with a call from Br. P. P. Pratt, who was making calls on the different branches for volunteers to go to the "Far West," to protect our brethren and sisters from violence, who had been driven from their homes in Jackson county, Missouri. The Governor had issued a proclamation, saying he would restore them to their lands if they would protect themselves. Without conferring with flesh and blood, I resolved to go.

I left an aged father and mother, who depended on me to cherish and support them in their declining years; a wife and two small children, whom I tenderly loved, and a lucrative business that I was engaged in, to go to that then distant country; not knowing that I ever should return, as I was going to the enemy's country, among a set of as lawless vagabonds as ever disgraced any civilized country in the known world; their subsequent acts have proved the assertion, and for what? What induced me to make the sacrifice, even to the risk of losing my life? It was because my brethren and sisters (strangers indeed to me in the flesh, but united in the same covenant,) had been robbed; their houses burnt, their crops destroyed, and they driven, in the inclement season of the year, across "Missouri's swelling flood," to seek shelter in, and claim the hospitality of Clay county. It was to protect them in those rights that had been wrested from them. Accordingly, on the 18th of April, 1834, I, with two of my brethren, James Foster and True Glidden, bid our friends farewell, and started on our first mission. We arrived in Kirtland on the 29th of the same month, was introduced to the Prophet Joseph Smith, Jr., and although he was called a "greenhorn" by outsiders, to me he manifested an intelligent mind. I discovered something noble stamped on his brow, and my further acquaintance with him (which continued until his martyrdom in 1844) strengthened first impressions; he was nobility personified.

On the 5th of May "the army of Zion" left Kirtland, and took up their line of march for the scene of violence and bloodshed. Our little army numbered about eighty—

"All valiant-hearted men,
And not afraid to die."

On the 7th we were organized into companies of 13 men to each baggage wagon.

Each company had a captain and clerk; every member had his particular duty assigned. Everything pertaining to our journeying was conducted in order. It created a deal of excitement in the country through which we passed.

Bro. Joseph Smith was captain of company No. 1; H. C. Kimball, No. 2; Brigham Young, No. 3. I was a member of the last mentioned company. My duty was to keep a journal of our campaign. The Hon. Z. Snow, of Utah, was our Commissary General.

On our arrival at Salt river, Missouri, our army consisted of two hundred rank and file. We re-organized; general officers were appointed; two companies, of 13 men each, were selected as rangers, or flanking parties. Bro. Hazen Aldridge was chosen captain of the first, and Thomas Colborn of the second.

It is with feelings of joy and gratitude to my Heavenly Father that I call to mind my associations with such men as Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball, and a host of others of that band of brothers, who are now "burning and shining lights in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I could relate many incidents concerning that campaign, which would be interesting, but time and space will not permit. Suffice it to say, we were honorably discharged, and the word of the Lord concerning us was, our sacrifice was accepted. On the 2d day of July a company of seven started for the East, a journey of 1,200 miles. We arrived at Kirtland August 1st; on the 4th I was ordained an Elder, under the hands of Brothers Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery, and Sydney Rigdon.

I left Kirtland on the 5th day of August, and arrived at my home after an absence of sixteen weeks, much to the surprise and joy of my friends, as it had been rumored abroad that the "Mormon" camp had lost many of their number by cholera; that a battle had been fought, and "Joe Smith, the Mormon Prophet," had been mortally wounded. All were anxious to know my opinion concerning the Prophet; my report being favorable, our branch, with the exception of myself and family, removed to Kirtland. Unavoidable circumstances prevented me from gathering with the Saints until the summer of 1843. In the summer of 1835 a conference was held at my house in Ross, Wayne county, N. Y. Eleven of the Twelve Apostles were there. From that time until the winter of 1842-3, we had to stem the torrent of opposition alone—not a Mormon, that we knew of, within three hundred miles. The papers were teeming with news concerning the "Mormons," and their Prophet, "Mormon" difficulties in Missouri, &c., &c. Our friends would act the part of Job's comforters, but still we retained our integrity. "Mormonism" was our theme, salvation was our object and aim.

In the winter of 1842-3 we were visited by an Elder; he labored faithfully in that vicinity. In the following spring we numbered thirty-six members. Six families gathered with the Saints in Nauvoo in 1843. In 1846 the Saints were driven out of Nauvoo. I wintered in the Mormon Winter Quarters in 1846-7, crossed the plains in 1848, was ordained a High Priest and joined the Quorum in 1851; was appointed to take a mission to the nations of the earth at the April conference in Great Salt Lake City, April 8th, 1853. I have traveled thousands of miles in Europe and the United States. My Heavenly Father has blessed me with health and strength, of body and mind, and has given me many sheaves for my hire.

To conclude, I will say I am a Mormon inside and out, at home and abroad, and am willing to make any and every sacrifice for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God.

Yours truly, THOMAS COLBORN.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR,—Your paper has made its appearance here among us in flying colors. I greet it with pleasure as the face of a familiar friend; it will be hailed with delight by the Saints in every land, and carry joy to their hearts wherever they dwell upon the four quarters of the globe. The friends of truth and all those who love to see correct principles abound among men, no doubt will rejoice; and if there are any who are honest hearted who do not participate in this feeling when they behold "The Mormon," it will be because they do not understand its objects and designs; whenever they shall become acquainted with the motives and characters of these great men who have put forth the rich principles of eternal truth which are calculated to enoble and exalt man, both in this world and that which is to come, of which "The Mormon" is to be the peculiar advocate, they will know how to appreciate things differently. I rejoice to think, that fair Utah, that has afforded an asylum and home, to me and my friends, who are endeared to me by years of mutual toils and sufferings, caused by misrule, oppression and mobocracy, is to have so able a defender and advocate. I rejoice to think that the honorable among this great nation will now have an opportunity to be correctly informed if they desire it, in regard to Mormonism; politically, socially morally and religiously, and need no longer be imposed upon as they have been by misrepresentation and falsehood.

There is one thing in regard to "The Mormon" which greatly pleases me, it is the bold and fearless manner in which its articles are put forth, and the reverence and acknowledgment of "the hand of God in all things," this feature contrasts strongly with all the papers I have met with, which are published; their object being popularity.

The appearance of "The Mormon" is very fine, its type and paper being excellent. Its dashing frontispiece, at first sight, seemed rather to savor a little of the style with which the publishers of the trashy literature of the day put forth their periodicals, in order to attract the attention of the vulgar; but upon closer inspection, every thing of the sort gives way to serious reflection and admiration, of the beauty and design intended to be conveyed. The flag of our Union with its stars and stripes unfurled; with Utah occupying a conspicuous corner, and the wings of the great American Eagle overshadowing the whole. Then the All Seeing Eye overlooking the whole and taking cognizance of all that is going on in our mighty nation, is calculated to instruct, as well as please. Upon the whole, Mr. Editor, I think you can hardly fail of success in your undertaking. Your numerous friends both in Europe and America, and then all the Mormon Missionaries scattered throughout almost every nation on the globe, with all of whom you have long been associated, will no doubt lend their aid in helping to give "The Mormon" circulation.

The whole of last Thursday was spent by the Senate in discussing the foreign relations of the United States. General Cass made a long speech in reply to Lord Clarendon in the British House of Peers, viewing his declaration in regard to the allied Western Powers of Europe, that "when they had settled the great Eastern question, they would turn their attention to the Western," in order to adjust matters upon this Continent. Mr. Cass was followed by Senator Mason, of Virginia, who is the Chairman of the Committee in the Senate on Foreign Relations. He reviewed the course taken by the British authorities in interfering in the matter of negotiations with the King of the Sandwich Islands, in regard to their annexation to the United States. He also noticed the interference of the British and French authorities in preventing the United States from obtaining a coal depot on the Island of St. Daringo, which was thought important to obtain for the use of American steamers that are in the Isthmus and Mexican Gulf trade. Mr. Mason asserted that this interference by European powers with questions that were purely American, could not and would not be allowed by our Government, nor would the American people ever submit to be dictated to by foreign powers in matters that did not belong to them.

There was a sharp discussion in the Senate on Friday upon a bill to protect the officers of the United States in the discharge of their duties. The debate took a wide range upon Slavary and the political events of last year. The discussion lasted till midnight, when the bill was passed by a large majority.

A bill has passed the Senate to grant to railroad companies a credit of three years upon the duties on railroad iron, imported by them into the United States. This bill has been before the Senate ever since I have been here; has been called up frequently; and has met a more determined opposition, and a warmer support, by its friends than any measure that I have noticed.

There has been an amendment to the Tariff bills, reducing the duties 20 per cent. on all articles imported into the United States.

On Saturday many small bills passed the Senate, which are of minor importance.

For some time the House has been groaning under the Civil and Diplomatic Bill, which at last passed on Saturday. This bill contains a claim making an appropriation of some thirty-five thousand dollars, to defray the expenses of the Territorial Government of Utah, and also one appropriating twelve thousand dollars for finishing the Penitentiary in that Territory. The bill also makes several other small appropriations for objects in the same territory. The bill has gone to the Senate to pass that body.

There is a vast amount of licentiousness practiced here, and even members of Congress indulge in it to a great extent. There are a very large number of prostitutes in Washington in proportion to its number of inhabitants. Men from all quarters gather here during the sittings of Congress, and while they are lounging around the Departments, hotels and boarding houses, they have little else to do but to plunge into vice and debauchery. During the whole of every night the everlasting rattle of cabs and hacks may be heard conveying these hordes to and fro as they visit these sinks of iniquity, where they hold their midnight revels and celebrate their bacchanalian orgies. Their carousals are kept up the whole night long, and then they sleep a good part of the day, thus turning night into day and day into night, and then, with eyes red and faces bloated, you will hear them along the streets, at the hotels and in the halls of Congress, harping about "Mormon Polygamy," "Licentiousness of the Mormons." "Congress," they will say, "ought to rise up, and with its whole power crush them at once;" and if, peradventure, a clause in a Utah land bill proposes to donate a pittance of land for a homestead to the poor Mormons who fought for the country under General Kearney, whilst our Government was contending with Mexico, some of these Right Honorable members will rise up, and with a grave and dignified air, ask, "Does not the bill go to encourage polygamy?" "Let the Mormons enact a good code of morals before they ask Congress to give away the public domain to them." Now, Mr. Editor, it is a notorious fact here, that the bitterest enemies of Utah, and the vilest denunciators of polygamy are the most notorious knaves and scamps, and so I have found it, not only here but in my extensive travels and years of experience and intercourse among men, and women too; that the most unvirtuous are the greatest denunciators of the Mormons. True virtue is unsuspecting, and is not afraid to talk of and investigate these matters, nor are they afraid that their morals will be corrupted thereby. They are at least willing to view the principle in the abstract, and learn what would be its bearings and effects upon society if it were introduced generally. Mr. Editor, it seems to me that Congress and the whole country are wofully ignorant as to the contents of that book called the Bible, to which they all look as the word of God, and as containing a revelation of his will to man, and the plan of salvation: why it gives a history of a mighty nation through a great many hundred years, who were a nation of polygamists, and made so by God himself, and he gave law to them in regard to it through Moses; the founders of this great nation were polygamists; why, we trace the lineage of the Saviour himself through a long line of polygamists. David, "a man after God's own heart," was a polygamist, and God, himself, took all the wives of King Saul when he transgressed, and gave them to David; and this too after David had already married a number of wives. How different God acts from men, now-a-days. Here in this nation, an honorable Congress refuses to give the Mormons a small pittance of land in some desolate region, away yonder in the Rocky Mountains, more than a thousand miles from any other settlements, simply because they are polygamists, when God gave that old polygamist, Abraham, the whole of the land of Canaan, the best portion of country there was in all the East. I suppose if old Father Abraham had lived in our day, and here in our own country, an enlightened Congress, instead of giving him a whole territory of the richest land in the nation, would have sent him to the States prison. Dr. Bernhisel, the Delegate from Utah, was about right; he was only councilling after the pattern of the Almighty, when he said in his place in the hall of the House of Representatives when this matter of giving the Mormons a homestead was under consideration, "that the more wives a man had the more land he needed."

Mr. Editor, I must beg leave here to relate an anecdote. As I was coming on here from the South about a month ago, ascending the Alabama river on a steamboat, we had a great crowd of passengers, and it being found out that I was a Mormon, nothing would do but I must deliver a lecture. I did so again and again, for two or three days successively. I mingled very freely among the passengers, and many became warmly attached to me, and we had for the most part quite a pleasant time. One day a gentleman, (knowing my relations in Carolina, and that I was a Carolinian) said, "I am surprised that you should be satisfied to live among those degraded Mormons and acknowledge that notorious polygamist Brigham Young as your teacher." I replied, my dear sir, I trust when I leave this world I shall go to heaven, and asked him if he did not expect to, likewise. He replied, "certainly he did." Well sir, I replied, we read in the Bible that Jesus said, "they shall come from the East and from the West, from the North and from the South, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven." Now, sir, if we are so fortunate as to ever get to heaven we shall have to associate with those old polygamists, and for my part I see no difference in associating here in this world with Brigham Young, a polygamist, whom I, from a long acquaintance, know to be a good man, than going to heaven and associating with polygamists there. To this not one of the crowd said a word. They never had thought of it before. Respects, &c.,

A MORMON IN WASHINGTON.

BOSTON, Feb. 26, 1855.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR—Dear Sir—I again take up my pen to communicate some of the sayings and doings of the people of this grand Imperial City of Yankeedom. On Wednesday last, 21st inst., I visited the State House to witness a contest between the Higher and Constitutional law parties. Probate Judge Loring, of Suffolk county, nearly a year ago holding the office of United States Commissioner, was under the necessity, according to his oath of office, to deliver up the identified, and proven to be, slave Burns to his master, which has rendered him obnoxious to the Free Soil, and particularly the radical Anti-Slavery party of the North. (They say he should have evaded the execution of the law because public opinion was against it, &c.) Hence there has come up before the Legislature, during the present session, numerous petitions by men, women and children, from various parts of the State, praying that the said Judge Loring be removed from the office of Judge of Probate for the County of Suffolk. The object of the gathering was to hear the addresses of the presentees and advocates of the above petition before the committee to which they were referred. The Representative hall and galleries were well filled, and much interest manifest.

Able addresses were delivered by Messrs. Webb, Philips and Ellis, for the removal, but more for the remonstrance. The subject was adjourned over to Wednesday next. The question at issue is virtually this, shall the constitutional law of the United States be maintained, or shall the peculiar institutions of different sections of the confederacy have the precedence in their several localities? "let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Gen. Sam Houston is here lecturing the people of Boston upon different subjects. His discourse on the history of Texas was well received, and highly applauded, though in giving a truthful history he necessarily becomes the hero of his own story; yet he does it with that modesty that is characteristic of a great mind. He is talked of favorably by many for the next President, and, but for his slavery predilections, would probably obtain a greater number of votes from the North than any other man. His lecture on Slavery, given at the Tremont Temple, on the evening of the 22d inst., will be reviewed on the evening of the first of March, at the same place, by Wm. Loyd Garrison, the great abolition advocate.

The long delayed, anxiously expected Mormon expose, by the heroine of the Boston Times, Mrs. Sarah Young, upon the usual subject, polygamy, conspiracy, disloyalty, treason, and abominations generally, all of which so convinced us of some telegraphic communication with S. L., (of which we up in the mountains were so woefully ignorant) has not yet appeared, we begin to think that the editor or their readers down here in Boston have been sold—humbug pays the best. What next, Mr. Times? we're anxiously waiting.

The Times has also published a lecture given in Salt Lake city, by Orson Hyde, on the plurality of wives, and calls upon the Bostonians to take the other side of the subject, and show its scriptural inconsistancy. "We pause for a reply." More anon.

Your's respectfully,
ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

California News.

Per steamer Daniel Webster, we have dates from California up to the 9th ult.

The California Legislature has made another failure in their forty-fourth ballot for United States Senator.

A meeting of old settlers was held at San Francisco on the 7th ult. to consider the subject of emigrating to Sonora, to escape the heavy taxes imposed upon them by the State.

There is a good demand for provisions—other merchandize still dull—but little rain, and but little done among the miners for want of it, and a great many were leaving for the Kerr river mines.

By the politeness of our Delegate, the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, we are furnished with an Act to establish the office of Surveyor General of Utah, and an Act for the construction of a line of Telegraph from the Missouri to the Pacific. We are obliged for the courtesy, and shall publish next week.

Statement of Gershom Wiborn, of Victor, Ontario County, New York.

GRAFTING.—In grafting, the first thing to be considered is the proper time for cutting scions, which may be done at any time after the leaves have fallen in autumn, until the buds begin to expand in the Spring. If it is necessary to cut them any length of time before you wish to set them, they should be buried in damp sand, saw-dust, or something of the kind, to keep them moist. When the trees are in the neighborhood, I do not cut the scions until the day that I am ready to set them. The next thing to be considered is the proper scions to cut, which should be fine, thrifty, straight-grown shoots of last year's growth. The buds upon the last year's growth will grow young shoots, while those upon the second year's growth are blossom buds, and will not make twigs. The proper size of the scions will depend very much upon the size of the stocks to be grafted. If they are small seedlings—say half an inch in diameter, or less—you should cut the scions that are from one-eighth to one-fourth of an inch in diameter. For stocks that are from five-eighths up to one and a half inches in diameter, you should cut scions that are from one-fourth to three-eighths of an inch. The ends of the scions, where they get below these sizes, it is best not to use, for they are unsuitable to take the sap from the stocks, and seldom, if ever, live. March is the proper time to graft plums and cherries, and April for all other fruits. They may live, indeed, if they are grafted as late as May, but they will not make so fine a growth the first year, and, consequently, will be less able to withstand the scorching suns of midsummer. When you are ready to set your grafts, cut your scions up into grafts about three and a half inches in length. For cutting and preparing grafts, use a keen-edged knife. To prepare a graft for setting, hold the scion in your left hand, and your knife in your right; place the blade upon the scion about one and a half inches from its lower end, which should be held towards you; then draw it in a straight line, smooth and level, to the centre of the lower end. Then turn up the other side of the scion in your hand, and cut it in precisely the same manner. One and a half inches of the lower end of the scion will then present the form of a flat wedge. Its upper part should have upon it two or three good buds.

The stocks to be grafted are next to be considered. In grafting young trees from three to four feet high, they may as will be inserted about a foot above the ground. Trees that are five or six feet in height are generally grafted about three feet from the ground. In grafting large bearing trees, select from twenty-five to thirty of the most thrifty, straight, smooth-barked limbs from different parts of the top. Those which are about one or one and a half inches in diameter are to be preferred. At the point where you wish to insert the scion find a clear place, free from limbs, bruises, or curls; then, with a fine, sharp saw, cut it off, leaving it square and level on the top; next, with your knife, dress off the edge of the bark, which will be a little rough from the saw. Then take your splitting-knife, which should be very sharp, (a common butcher's knife is a tolerable substitute,) and split the stock carefully down the centre. In doing this, be careful to divide the bark even and clean as you go, so that the edge of the bark on the wedge-like end of your scion will dove-tail into it and make a nice, close joint. It will be necessary to split in this way the stock one and a half inches, to correspond with the length you have of the end of the scion. After making the split in the stock, and withdrawing the knife, you will need a little wedge made of hard wood, to crowd down the centre of the split and hold it open. Then put your scion into the split, and let the wood on the outer edge of the scion set even with the wood on the split edge of the stock; or, in other words, set the wood of the scion just within the wood of the stock, for then the bark on the scion will meet the edge of the bark on the stock. Next press the scion down firmly into the stock, and be very careful in the whole operation not to bruise the edges of the bark that meet between the scion and the stock. Then withdraw the wedge, and apply the grafting-salve, spreading a coat of it about one-eighth of an inch in thickness over the end of the stock where it was sawed off. Fit it down nice and tight over the edges of the bark and around the scions; then spread a strip down each side, over the split in the stock, so that the whole operation will be closed air-tight. This is necessary to prevent the sap from drying out and killing the scions. After the grafts are set, they should be looked to occasionally, as crevices will sometimes open between the bark and the salve and let in the air. The best salve is made by melting one pound of beeswax with six pounds of rosin in a pint of linseed oil.

Statement of H. Beyerele, of Sugar Valley, Clinton County, Pennsylvania.

Our valley is subject to early frosts, which often prove injurious to the fruit culture. Some few fruit-growers have practised a mode of preventing frost which I never saw in print, and which I look upon as being quite effective: they smoke their orchards by building fires among the trees. The reader will bear in mind that low valleys or plains suffer more from frost than high ones; and, further, that frosts never occur where wind is blowing, nor where the atmosphere is cloudy, but only on mornings when the air is calm and the sky clear. On such mornings smoke always moves sluggishly, and frequently settles at a height but little above orchard trees. By making fires in different parts of the orchard a short time before daylight, the smoke, in a measure, will cover the trees, and thus prevent frost upon the same principle as fog or cloud.—[Report of the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. DE LEON, of South Carolina, United States Consul in Egypt, has addressed a letter to Dr. Gibbes, of Columbia, S. C., covering a proposal of an Italian, named Lattis, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Egypt, to reveal to the people of the United States a discovery he has made, by which two crops of rice can be grown in a single season, and with a great saving in the expense of irrigation. The method is said to be very simple, and he thinks it may apply with equal advantage to other grains besides rice.

A WOMAN FROZEN TO DEATH.—Coroner O Donnell held an inquest at 520 Pearl street upon the body of a colored woman—Eliza Shappier—who came to her death from exposure to the inclement weather. The deceased, it appears, lived in a dilapidated house, and without any fire in the room. She went to bed on Sunday night, and in the morning she was found dead—frozen to death. The jury in this case rendered the following verdict:—"We find that the deceased came to her death from destitution and exposure; further, the jury calls the attention of the proper authorities to the dilapidated condition of the building No. 520 Pearl street as an unfit residence for human beings."

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN.—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé de deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Why is Congress so unwilling to grant land to Utah? Because they don't like to make men responsible for their own children.

NOTES.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained, three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connection with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one-fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained by certificates of postmasters, or the affidavits of other creditable persons, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office, for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract; for disobeying the Post Office laws or instructions of the Department, or for assigning the contract without the assent of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General may alter the schedule. He may also order an increase of service on a route by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay. He may also curtail or discontinue the service, at pro rata decrease of pay, if he allow one month's extra compensation on the amount dispensed with. No extra pay will be allowed for excess of actual over advertised distance, if the points to be supplied are herein correctly stated. The bids should be addressed to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, superscribed "Mail proposals in the Territory of Utah." The contracts are to be executed and returned to the Department by or before the 1st day of September, 1855. For further particulars as to conditions to be incorporated in the contracts, see advertisement for California, Oregon, Utah, &c., dated 13th October, 1853.

TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Poetry.

True Fame.

BY R. H. FRENCH.

Too long has this world, like a harp of sad sound,
Been allowed to breath forth a false strain:
Too long have the worthless their praise in it found,
And danced in a glittering train.
The truth and the virtue now born,
The words of the living great, spoke clear and bold,
Are passed by with silence or scorn.

But the pages of hist'ry will never more tell,
Nor the poet record in his strains,
That true glory proceeds from great warriors who fell,
And true wisdom from mad sophists' brains.
No! the annals to come will be thoroughly changed,
When the earth shall begin a new youth;
And the heroes whose portraits will on it be ranged,
Are the heroes of virtue and truth.

All the wisdom that ages have left us behind,
Will be stored in this bright coming world;
All the heart loves of worth in the lords of the mind,
Will be in it with beauty unfurled:
And a calm living glory for ever will bloom
On the heads of the faithful and brave,
Who while struggling for truth met the martyr's fell doom,
And were slain in their mission to save.

The names of great sages are wont to inspire,
And to dazzle the mind with their light;
There are beautiful words, too, our hearts at times fire—
They are Liberty, Justice, and Right.
But the name that in future will carry the charm,
And to nations and people be dear,
Is one now dishonored, and heard with alarm—
Never hail'd with a smile or a tear.

When the riots and follies of ages shall die,
And the calm lights of reason succeed,
Shall the sweet name of Saint be rung loud through the sky,
And the joy of the nations then freed;
And wise men shall point to this standard of ours,
And the faith of the Saints be their boast,
While they tell how they stood 'gainst the wrong of all powers—
A few firmly opposed to a host.

The world has no vision nor angel's sweet voice;
O'er their phophets the sun has gone down.
In the light of the Truth we shall live and rejoice,
When great Babylon's splendors are flown;
And before many years shall it proudly be told,
How mighty the true Saints can be;
Their deeds for salvation will then be unrolled,
And as holy ones they will be free.

Iowa and Nebraska.

Western Iowa and Nebraska.

Detailed Answers to the Numerous Questions in regard to the Soil, Productions, Climate, Water, Health, Advantages and Improvements in this Region of Iowa and in Nebraska.

GEOGRAPHY.

That portion of Western Iowa lying west of the Des Moines River, is the most rolling, uneven, and picturesque, of the choice lands, in the United States. Although this region is almost entirely composed of hills, swells, ridges, valleys and bottom lands, thrown together in the most grand and poetic manner, there is scarcely an acre of waste land in the whole region—even the highest points and peaks abound with luxurious grass and vegetation, or timber and copsewood; whilst the slopes, valleys and bottom lands, together with the upland prairies, are the most rich and fertile ever inhabited.

The soil is a rich, black, light, sandy loam, extremely easy of cultivation, and of a depth of from one to ten feet. Although the soil is naturally extremely light and loose, it resists to a wonderful degree the evil effects of drouth upon vegetation. The last season, when the countries East and South were parched, and crops destroyed for want of rain, ours were remarkably heavy and seemed uninjured, although we had little or no more rain than did our neighbors.

TIMBER.

There are heavy bodies of hard wood timber on the margin of, and adjacent to the Des Moines River, and a reasonable quantity interspersed through the counties Northwest, but upon the route directly west of this place, timber is extremely scarce for one hundred miles, being found only in detached groves upon streams; but as one approaches the slope of the Missouri River the groves and clusters of timber become more frequent, and in this immediate vicinity there is sufficient for all reasonable demands. In several of the counties north timber is still more abundant, and in Shelby county there is one grove alone that contains near 30 square miles of good timber. Through this region generally there are an abundance of young groves of timber, which, if the fires are kept out, will increase quite as fast as the older and more maturer portions are used up. The most valuable varieties are oak, (3 or 4 varieties) black walnut, hickory, linn, elm, cottonwood, hackbery, black locust and coffee bean.

Upon the bottom lands the cottonwood, black walnut and elm are found, and in the higher lands, the other varieties.

WATER.

This whole region is well watered by numerous rivers, creeks, streamlets, springs and lakes. The streams are formed from numerous springs of pure, clear and cool water, which are found in abundance everywhere throughout the country. The most excellent of water may be obtained by digging upon an average of 15 feet.

MINERALS.

There is no doubt but that an abundance of coal exists in this region, but a few beds have, however, yet been opened, but these prove to be of an excellent quality. There are fine quarries of lime-rock, sand, and slate-stone. Although there is iron ore, no beds have been sufficiently examined to learn of their value or richness. Few other minerals have as yet been discovered.

CLIMATE.

Our climate is about the same as in Northern Ohio, but we have less snow and probably a little more wind—producing about the same varieties of crops, fruits and vegetables. Our winters commence usually about the first of December, continuing about three months, with a succession of cool pleasant days, of dry wholesome atmosphere, touched off with cooling and sometimes high winds. Through this season the roads are extremely hard, smooth and fine, as is the case all the year except the season of spring. The evening twilights are long, soft and pleasent in the summer season, usually continuing for near two hours after sunset. The evenings, even after the hotest days, are usually cooling and pleasant. A refreshing breeze from the prairies is almost constantly in motion.

HEALTH.

We can see no natural reason why this country may not be extremely healthy. Country rough—air fresh and invigorating—water pure and cool, with temperance and industry, little or no sickness should be known. At present, as in all new countries of the West, there are agues and fevers which will vanish as the country becomes settled, and the land brought under cultivation.

WILD FRUITS AND VEGETATION.

The wild prairies are covered with a rich luxurious growth of grass varying in height from 20 inches to 5 feet, which makes the finest of grazing, or hay, which only requires cutting and stacking, not being so liable to injury as the tame grasses. For late feed, the peavines and rushes in the low lands make feed that frequently will keep stock in good order all winter. There are many very beautiful flowers which, in turn, are in bloom the whole season, giving a pleasant and delightful odor to the breeze that fans the verdant landscape. There are various bulbous roots that grow wild, such, as in years past, the Indians have gathered for food. Among the best is the wild potatoe, the bean, and artichoke. Hogs eat these voraciously; among the best of our wild fruits may be reckoned plums, gooseberries, strawberries, rhaspberries. There are crab-apples and haws, which grow in abundance and the finest we ever saw; grapes are of spontaneous growth, and are also fine. The plums are almost as fine as the cultivated varieties, large, delicious and abundant. Strawberries grow around the edges of timber and brushwood, and in the bottoms on the streams.

GAME, ETC.

Elk and deer are abundant in the counties north, and even near here may be seen every day; there are also abundance of fowls—swan, geese, pelicans, turkeys, ducks, prairie chickens and quails abound in their peculiar localities; and fish of the choicest kinds, fill our lakes and streams. Wild bees are common.

Council Bluffs, the most important city west of the Missouri, (directly opposite Omaha City, in Nebraska,) is the county seat of Pottawattamie county, and now contains about 2,500 inhabitants. It is a sparsely built incorporated city, contains 2 churches, three schools, 10 stores, 6 doctors, 12 lawyers, and mechanics and artists to match. Lots in the city rate from $100 to $1000, each, and improved farms in the neighborhood from $5 to $10 per acre, including timber.

This is a desirable place either for the poor man or the capitalist, the mechanic or professional man, and we consider the prospects for mercantile pursuits very good. A good steam flouring mill is very much needed, and so is the services of a thousand laborers and mechanics.

PRODUCTIONS.

Corn produces heavily and naturally, yielding from 50 to 100 bushels to the acre, with little trouble. Winter wheat is not a certain crop, on account of there being so little snow throughout the winter. Spring wheat produces heavily, and of an excellent quality. Oats yield from 59 to 75 bushels per acre. Rye, barley, buck wheat, potatoes, turnips, melons, and other vegetables and grains do well. There are few or no orchards in this region, but there is no doubt but most of the cultivated varieties of fruit will succeed and do well here.

CONGRESS, OR UNENTERED LAND.

The most choice lands in this region are entered, but there are within a few miles of the city considerable un-entered lands, which, though without timber, is good rich land. In the country east and north the chances are better, and good claims may often be had for a small price.

Timber lands may also be purchased to suit those who enter prairie lands.

TOWNS IN THIS REGION.

The next in importance to our city is Glenwood, the county site of the next county below (Mills,) is a young and flourishing place, is surrounded with an excellent agricultural country, possessing many advantages. It has a population of about 1,000, and has within its own reach the elements of prosperity. Sidney, the county seat of Fremont county, is also a pleasant and prosperous town, which is being rapidly improved. St. Mary's, opposite Belleview, and 2 miles below this place, is a small, pleasantly situated town, on the banks of the Missouri river, upon the same broad bottom that lies in front of our city.

IRANISTAN,

In Cass county, is 40 miles east of this city, on the Ft. Des Moines stage road. It is situated upon one of the Nichnabotna's, has one good water-mill, and several good creditable buildings. There is excellent timber in the region, good water, stone mill sites, and a fine farming district of land. Calhoun and Magnolia are situated in the midst of Harrison, one of the finest counties in the State, are small towns, just commencing permanent improvements. Sargeants Bluffs, an hundred miles north, is situated on the Missouri river, and will, doubtless, at some future day, be a large and prosperous place. Sioux City, at the mouth of the Big Sioux, is a new place, attracting considerable attention. It has just been laid out, and we have been shown the Platts. This place is located near the northern extremity of the State, and is surrounded by an excellent agricultural country, well timbered, and will without doubt be the most important place in that region.

MILLS.

We have within this county about 12 saw and grist-mills, but not half enough to supply the demand for lumber and grinding. The county above has some four in operation, and the next below six, and Cass county one.

FUTURE PROSPECTS.

We are situated almost in the geographical center of the United States, upon the longest stream on the globe, and directly in route, west, from the great Metropolis of the East to the South Pass, and at the entrance to the great and only natural highway to the Pacific, the valley of the Platte. The fact that hundred of thousands of pioneer emigrants have taken this as the only practicable route, and that a hundred has taken this route to California where one has taken any other, is evidence sufficient of its importance. There are now four railroads from the East, pointing directly to this place, some of which are fast progressing to completion, and the chain is already perfect from the Atlantic to the Capital of our State, and still they hasten towards us. We shall without doubt hear the shrill whistle of the Iron Horse, making our hills and valleys re-echo with its rattle within three years.

SUM TOTAL.

Taking into account all our advantages and disadvantages, we know of no region of country that holds forth greater inducements to settlers than does this region, not only for the capitalist, who here can find a broad and profitable field for operations, but also for the mechanic, the laborer and professional man, and the poor, who seek a pleasant and independent home in the West. For grazing, stock growing, or dairy business, there is no region of country better adapted. Stock requires little, or sometimes, no feed, and upon the prairie grass will fatten in an incredible short space of time. The poor mechanic and laborer soon become land-holders, and the capitalist is not satisfied with less than 40 per cent. well secured, which he readily obtains.

Carpenters, millwrights, brickmakers, masons and engineers are in special demand.

HOW TO GET HERE.

Boats run regularly from St. Louis to this place, all through the season of navigation. Freight up usually averages about 75 cents per hundred, and passengers (cabin) $15; deck, $5. The railroad from the East is completed to Rock Island, (300 miles from this place.) Teams can be purchased in and about Davenport at fair prices.

PRICES OF GRAIN AND PRODUCES.

Flour sells at $5 per hundred. Corn, 30 cts.; wheat, $1,25; oats, 30 cts.; potatoes, usually 25 cts., (now 75;) pork, $4.00 per hundred; butter and eggs, 25, (in the summer 10 cts.;) groceries and dry goods at the usual western prices. Laborers get from $1.00 to $2.50 per day, (including mechanics.)

Stock of all kinds bears a good price, from the fact of this place being the great outfitting emporium for emigrants westward.

NEBRASKA.

What we have said in the foregoing articles, in regard to Western Iowa, is entirely applicable to Nebraska in many respects; especially the soil, climate, fruit, vegetation, &c., &c., on the eastern portion of the Territory. The interior, or western parts, is more mountainous and barren, and is almost entirely destitute of timber, and is really of little or no value except for grazing. A number of important towns are springing up on the Missouri river, the most noted of which are Omaha City, (the Capitol,) Belleview, Plattsmouth, Mount Vernon, Nebraska City, Florence, Fort Calhoun, Desoto, Tekama, and Fontenelle. All these occupy a country on the river, north and south, of near a hundred miles and are surrounded with good, fertile and choice lands. Lime stone coal, and other minerals, have been found in many places, and this country, though now but little known, offers great inducements to settlers.

The French Loan.

The Paris Moniteur of January 18th announces that the sum total of subscriptions to the National Loan amounts to 2,175,000,000f. 177,000 persons took part in the loan. Algeria, Corsica, and the offers to subscribe of some of the departments during the last few days are not comprised in this amount.

The departments furnished 126,000 subscribers, the subscriptions of whom give a capital of 177,000,000f. At Paris there were 51,000 subscribers, with a capital of 1,398,000,000f.

The foreign subscriptions are comprised. England provided a capital of 150,000,000f., and Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, &c., a similar amount.

☞ Perhaps the oldest tree on record is the cypress of Somma, in Lombardy. It is supposed to have been planted in the year of the birth of Christ, and on that account is looked on with reverence by the inhabitants; but an ancient Chronicle in Milan is said to prove that it was a tree in the time of Julius Cæsar, B. C. 42. It is 123 feet high, and 20 feet in circumference at one foot from the ground. Napoleon, when laying down the plan for his great road over the Simplon, diverged from a straight line to avoid injuring this tree.

DEAN SWIFT held this doctrine: That there are three places where a man should be allowed to speak without contradiction; namely, the bench, the pulpit, and the gallows.

Miscellaneous.

The Year of Death.

The year 1854 will be handed down to future generations as the year of desolation and death. In all that could contribute to human misfortune, it is without a parallel in the nineteenth century, and its crimsoned traces on the pages of our history will stand out as the pathway of the destroying angel, in the execution of the terrible judgements of an omnipotent God. We have suffered national and local calamities before—we have witnessed the pestilence that walketh abroad at noon-day, spreading its fearful ravages in almost every section of our favored land—we have had wars with their blood-bought glory and sickening bereavements—we have had occasional shipwrecks, entombing our friends in the great ocean shroud—we have had want, wasting the existence of our fellows, while pride and luxury rolled around them—but never before have all these calamities spread their desolating curse so fearfully upon the modern world, in the brief space of a single year.

Scarcely a bulletin reaches us that does not come richly freighted with the progress of desolation. Every engine of death seems to have been called into requisition to serve the wise purposes of Him who ruleth all things. Every element has been hurrying along the work of destruction. Every gale that swept its hoarse voice through our mountains has carried the fatal message to the luckless mariner who stood in its course. When the world realized, some years ago, that the "President" had buried its inmates in the pitiless brine, and left no record for the living, and the voice of mourning resounded wherever the Press and Forum could give it utterance; but in this year of death, the "City of Glasgow" sends four hundred human beings to a watery grave, and its horrors fade from our memory as fresher and more terrible calamities crowd upon us. The "Tayleur," the "Staffordshire," the "Birkenhead," the "San Francisco," the "Artic," the "Powhattan," the "New Era," the "Victoria," the "Yankee Blade," and a number of others less fatal to human life in their destruction, swell up such a list of shipwrecks and such a work of death as have never before been recorded from the same causes. Disease, too, swept over our land and hurried thousands to an untimely grave. In most of our Southern and Western cities commerce was brought to a stand till the pestilence had glutted its terrible appetite; and after it came a financial crisis with its long train of bankruptcy, of ruined credit and absolute want. The heavens had refused their refreshing showers and the earth had refused her abundance, and all the long accumulating evils of reckless indebtedness and dishonesty broke suddenly upon the already crippled business of the country. Our streams became unnavigable and our unfinished railroads were abandoned, and suicides, defalcations, and villiany swelled the tide of our calamities. Riots, too, have been rife throughout the land, and human life has been sacrificed upon the altar of political and religious prejudice. Scarcely a journal reaches us from any of our many cities that does not record some fresh violation of the public peace, and tell of some new victim who has fallen to appease the growing spirit of intolerance.

But the record is still far from being complete. The whole world has shared in the work of death. The pestilence has known no boundaries, and revolutions and wars have unsettled governments and swept men into the jaws of death by thousands. Mexico is shedding her own blood in an intestine struggle for personal preferment. Spain reels under the infamy and oppression of her rulers, and her once honored capital has been at the mercy of an infuriated mob. China, the mother of Empires, has been but one vast field of inhuman butchery, regardless of even the redeeming traits of civilized warfare; and away in the East the Crescent and the Cross strike hands to enrich the harvest of the great destroyer. The Czar, forgetful that another's ambition once made his Empire tremble until the snows of the north stiffened his legions and annihilated them, has dreamed of extended power, and Russian blood flows like water on every battle-field. The Turk fights heroically for his nationality, until France and England join to make common cause with him; and now all Europe is convulsed, and apparently engaged in the bloodiest revolution the world has ever witnessed. For the first time in history, the colors of England and France do honor to the same sacrifice, and the Musselman's cannon tolls the requiem of the Christian soldier—all to do honor to the work of death!—[Chambersburg Rep. & Whig.

Horrible Discovery.

Ten Persons Perished on the Prairies.

We are furnished by a gentlemen from Lafayette, Ind., with the details of a rumor current in that city on Thursday, which fill the mind with horror, in view of the sufferings of the party to whom it refers.

On the Saturday preceding the memorable storm of the 21st of January, two families, numbering ten persons, moving from Southern Indiana to Northern Illinois, arrived at Oxford the county seat of Benton county, Ind., about forty miles northwest of Lafayette, with two ox teams, and well provided with necessaries for the road. They remained there through the storm, and on Monday morning resumed their journey. Last Tuesday morning a man passing over a prairie, only about five miles from Oxford, came upon a sight which filled him with horror.

The carcases of two oxen, from which the viscera had been removed, lay upon the ground. Inside of one of them were the frozen bodies of four children, and in the other the frozen corpse of the mother, with a nursing infant at her breast. Under the snow was a heap of ashes, in which the iron of the wagons showed that the party had broken them up, and burned everything they had in them, in the effort to save their lives. Nor far from this spot was found the body of the other woman of the party, partly concealed in a snow drift, and near her one of the men. The two other men had not been found.

It is probable that the party became inextricably involved in the snow drifts on the prairie, and lost their presence of mind. After burning up their wagons it would seem that the men had killed two of the oxen for a shelter to those found in them, and then, accompanied by one woman, vainly endeavored to reach the town they had left, and procure aid to rescue their companions. The two other oxen had wandered off. There was nothing about the persons to indicate who they were, and nothing more is known about them than was accidentally communicated by them during their brief stay at Oxford.—[Chicago Press, Feb. 24.

Infamous Attempt to Ruin a Young Girl.

Forcible Ride on a Horse-Sled.

Some days since a Mrs. Chase and a man who is her partner in business were brought before the police court, charged with inveigling a young woman from Great Falls, N. H., for the purpose of prostitution. The charge was so far proved that His Honor thought it proper to order them to recognize with sureties in the sum of $500 each, for their appearance at the next criminal term of the S. J. Court. Failing to find sureties, they were committed to Jail. Monday, however, under chapter 171, section 22 of the Revised Statues, two Justices of the Peace admitted the prisoners to bail. They departed to their haunt, the Robinson Tavern, in Hermon. Here, however, they were waited on early Tuesday morning by perhaps a hundred of the best citizens of Hermon, and advised to leave the place. A horse-sled was near, upon which, without violence, the man and woman were placed, and removed beyond the limits of the town. Drums, fifes and flags gave a dramatic air to the procession, and the obnoxious parties, moving to such music, made solemn promise that they would never come back again. With this the Hermon people were satisfied, and dispersed, after having taken some steps towards returning to her home in New-Hampshire, Elizabeth Taylor, the young girl upon whom Mrs. Chase's designs were formed.—[Bangor Mercury.

At the present writing, we desire to inform a wonder-loving public, that "Sebastopol is not taken." In order to put a stop to the terrible state of anxiety which now exercises the public mind, all over the world, we intend to send out our Daguerrean artist to "take" it by the next steamer. If he succeeds, we shall present it to our readers in our next.—[Yankee Notions.

Fancy Dress Ball of the Vantoon Rangers.

A gang of young rowdies, male and female, gave a grand Ball at Hoffmann's Hotel, corner of Oliver and Henry streets, on Thursday evening. Unfortunately for the harmony of their proceedings, they did not give Capt. Ditchett, of the Fourth Ward, an invitation, and he made his arrangements for an opposition. He stationed a posse of men in the vicinity of the house, in such a manner that no suspicion would be excited, while he himself went into the bar-room, and waited for those whom he knew would come after their usual drinks, which he was sure would be often. When they came to the bar, he would beckon the gentlemen out of the room under pretence of having business with them. No sooner were they on the sidewalk, however, than he would place them in the charge of an officer, who conveyed them to the Station-House, locked them up, and returned for more. In this manner they secured nine of the party, including the floor manager. Their names and professions, as reported by the Police, are:

Wm. Thompson, thief, John Bartlett, tailor,
John McDermott, thief, Samuel McDonald, thief.
Pat McDermott, thief, Wm. Kelly, thief, and floor manager, John Gallagher, thief,
Dan McDermott, thief, John B. Smith, thief,
Dan O'Brien, thief.

The ball went on swimmingly until the floor manager was arrested, when, from some cause not yet accounted for, on scientific principles, the whole company bowsed through the windows. The "ladies," of whom there were about twenty in number, aged from 16 to 24, were dressed in short clothes, and all manner of fancy dresses. These the police allowed to "depart in peace."

The floor manager, who was fancily dressed in a stiff hickory shirt and a shad-belly coat, with the tail sticking out stiff with starch, asked the captain, "What fault he had to find with the ball," and if it was not a well conducted affair, to which the captain replied that the only fault he had with it was that they had been so ungenerous as to give a ball in his Ward without extending an invitation to him.

McDermott swore if he had thought that the captain would have made such a muss because he did not get an invitation, he would have given it to him willingly; for, said he, "I had the entire management of the Ball, and I could just as well have done so as not." On being taken to the Station House, and finding that the captain was really in earnest, he protested against such treatment, and said he would publish the whole affair if it cost him $10. One of his party informed him that he need not go to that expense, as it would all be out before he had an apportunity of publishing it. All those arrested were committed to the cells of the Fourth Ward Station-House until yesterday morning, when they were taken before Osborn, who committed them to the Penitentiary for 60 days each as vagrants.—[Tribune, March 3.

A Wife Turned to Stone.

Mr. J. P. Soy, residing near Germantown, Ohio, recently disinterred the remains of his wife, his grand-child, and other members of his family, buried on his farm, in order to inter them in the Germantown Cemetery, and found that their bodies were all more or less petrified. The wife had been buried twenty-four years, but the body was in an excellent state of preservation. Upon a close examination, it was found that the remains would not give way under the pressure of a piece of board which one of the gentlemen placed upon the corpse; and this strange circumstance led to still further investigation. The shroud, and indeed, all the covering which was upon the body at the time of interment, 24 years ago, had disappeared—not a vestige of them remaining. The body was perfect except the right leg, from the knee to the ankle joint, where the flesh seemed to have wasted away, and lay at the bottom of the coffin in a substance resembling sand. With this exception of decay, the body and limbs exhibited the same perfectness of exterior they did when life and animation were in the body. The body, indeed, had been petrified! It was by some strange quality in the earth and other causes, turned into stone of a drab, or more properly speaking, flesh color; and the chisel of the artist might imitate, but could not make so close a resemblance to the human form divine."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1855.

The Union.

In another column will be found a letter from California, in relation to a project that is on foot in that place for making a new independent western government, by uniting California, Oregon, Washington, &c., &c., and forming several new States therefrom.

Whether this is true, or not, of course, we cannot say; but the article in question has led us to make the following remarks.

We have seen, with no little anxiety, for some time past, a growing tendency among our statesmen and politicians for the acquisition of territory, as well as the multiplication of States and Territories within our own borders. This disposition, fostered by our leading statesmen, for the purpose of accomplishing sectional political interests, leads to a woful laxity in political morals and integrity; it severs, in many instances, the strongest ties and most sacred national obligations, destroys confidence in the nation and its compacts, and leaves us, feeble, helpless, and enervated; an easy prey to interested politicians, or bands of political adventurers, either at home or abroad.

We are, it is true, at the present, a great nation; our commerce is extended and extending; our flag floats triumphantly over the world, and is respected by all nations, and millions of the human family hail it as a banner of freedom, exhibiting the power of light, intelligence and progress, over anarchy, despotism, and degradation. Our nation manifests, at the present, the proudest triumph of freedom over bondage, liberty over oppression, republican institutions over monarchical and despotic, that the world ever produced: here freedom is not a name—intelligence is more than a theory: here learning is not confined to a few: here promotion is open to all: here trade, commerce, manufactures, agriculture, arts, science and literature invite the industrious, the enterprising, the intellectual, the scientific: our facilities for enterprise are unparalleled in the world; in our boundless oceans and majestic rivers, in our commercial relations with each other, and with all nations, in our manufactures, our steamboats and railroads, in our unbounded Territories, our rich and fertile lands, our varied climate and soil, and our extensive productions; in our schools and academies, in our science and literature, in the developing arts, and in the freedom and power of the mighty Press, we are unequalled. The young Republic is a combination of talent, intelligence, and enterprise of all nations, directed by God as a neuclus of freedom, an asylum for the oppressed of all people, an outlet for the groaning millions of the world: based upon a liberal constitution, nourished by the blood of patriots, enriched by the wisdom and intelligence of philanthropists, patriots, and statesmen, it has exhibited a Herculian strength, and, like a mighty giant, has outgrown its cotemporaries, and stands, at the present day, in bold relief among the nations of the earth, the wonder and astonishment of an admiring world. Such is our present position. Now, what for the future?

Shall we imitate the grasping ambition, the follies, the vices, the examples of other nations who have had their rise, their progress, their zenith, and their decadence—their fall? Shall we, through our prejudices, our corruption, our infidelity, our ambition, our pride, arrogance, and sectional feelings, only make another exhibition of the weakness and incompetency of man to legislate for himself, to guard and protect his own, or nation's interest? Shall we wantonly let loose the fiery passions of the depraved human breast; shall we riot in the narrow purlieus of sectional interests, and basely barter our country's weal at the shrine of mammon or fiendish hate? Shall our insensate passions cause us to gamble away our dearest rights; to throw the apple of discord among contending parties, foster and encourage division and strife, let loose the fiends of war, and turn our beautiful Eden into a charnal house? Shall we be recreant to the high trust committed to us, and basely barter away this boon, so dearly bought by the crimson current of this infant Republic, the best blood of our venerated sires, whose shades, if they could now speak, would cry with the voice of ten thousand thunders—Poltroons! fools!! idiots!! forbear!!! Recreant sons dare not destroy the Temple of Freedom! Bridle your wayward passions, curb your insensate follies; preserve inviolate the sacred trust committed to you. Know ye not that the destinies of millions are in your hands? Respect the memories of your fathers! have regard to your own honor, and think upon your own rising posterity! You are in a position where you can either immortalize yourselves for good or evil; pause before you proceed; a little farther, and you plunge the fairest nation in the universe in war and bloodshed, destroy the beautiful fabric which cost the combined energy, genius, talent and blood of some of the noblest sons of the earth to rear, aided by the Almighty. Pause e'er you hurl into hopeless bondage millions that are yet unborn. Do this, and you render yourselves a curse to posterity, and the shades of millions who will die through the curse of your impotency, will point at your haggard manes and shriek from their cavernal haunts, with mocking jeer—There go the parricides that sold their country's rights, let loose the dogs of war, and sent myriads of us to the ghostly world! They would be statesmen, ah! They are our murderers, and the murderers of their own offspring. Shall this be said, or will you unite? Will you act like men? Will you preserve inviolate the charge committed to you, be the pride and boast of America, and perpetuate her constitution and institutions inviolate to a grateful posterity, and live in the hearts of your countrymen?

What reflecting American does not view with pain the dishonorable filibustering attempts upon Cuba; and these, to a great extent, winked at by men in authority; the desire for the annexation of the Sandwich Islands; fresh slices from Mexico, &c. &c.—all of which would be very well based upon correct principles and legitimately obtained—our government ought to throw its protecting ægis over all who desire it, but it ought not wantonly to provoke difficulty nor hypocritically profess to seek to benefit people by wholesale robbery. Who does not know that all these things arise from sectional prejudices, and that these acquisitions are arrived at for sectional political effect. One party violates and breaks down constitutional barriers, and unblushingly steals property from the other; and the other party, as an offset, would steal provinces to make more room for its peculiar institutions and strengthen its voice in the Union. A third party, perhaps, with a desire to conciliate, breaks the most solemn national compacts, destroys national confidence, and opens the floodgates of contention on a painfully litigated subject, already so feebly guarded. But is not popular sovereignty your interest? Yes; and we believe it in the abstract, to a certain extent. We are not now, however, discussing individual interests, and would not barter national honor and integrity for any particular views of our own. Popular sovereignty, under proper restrictions, is right; but all of the above principles are wrong. Whenever the national faith is bartered away, it must cause regret to every honest man. The same weaknesses exists in other things.

The floodgates once opened and the constitutional barriers removed, and there follows in the wake, corruption, bribery, legislation for private interests, monopolies and reckless squandering of the public domain, political gambling and stock-jobbing, national speculation, a division of North and South, independent government in California, new States and Nations organized; disunion, strife, and all the concomitants of misrule and corruption; more expenses, more Presidents, Governors, Legislators, Judges, Lawyers, armies and navies; more room for the hungry office-seeker, and less confidence. The feeble barriers now in existence being broken, the long pent-up sectional hate blazes forth, crimination and recrimination succeed, followed by intestine broils, internal commotion and civil war, recorded by the blood of millions; Europe called to assist in the slaughter, glutting her gloating eyes and debauched countenance over the folly and fall of the great Western empire.

We could write more on this subject, but must stop, for the present; we have reflected long and painfully on the above subjects. We lift our warning voice, and say to statesmen beware how you trifle with your sacred trusts lest, peradventure, blood may be found on your garments; check the angry torrent; bridle your fierce passions, and call to your aid the spirit of the great Eloheim, that he may inspire your hearts with wisdom, prudence, intelligence and honesty; that you may calm the troubled waters, lull the raging elements, and stop the impending ruin; that when you are leaving this world, in taking a retrospective view of the past, you can lay your hand upon your heart and say, I have done my duty to myself, to my country, to posterity, and to my God. We hope for the best; but fear the worst.

THE Herald and Tribune speculate thus upon the aspect of War between England and the United States:

"Of course, at first the agricultural interests would suffer from the want of a market for their cotton, corn and tobacco. But they have, before, been worse off in this respect than they ever could be now with a population of twenty-six millions; and the depression has never lasted over a year or two. Raw produce would fall in price, and so would land; but, at the same time, manufactured articles would be enhanced, and mills and factories would rise in every quarter of the country. After a few months inconvenience, the labor which would be thrown out of employment by the fall in agricultural produce would flock to the mills; and would soon find there all that any man has a right to claim in this world—an opportunity of selling his labor at a remunerative price. The crisis in England would, of course, produce a corresponding crisis among the foreign merchants here; but this too would only be a nine days' wonder. In the end—if the war and non-intercourse lasted ten or fifteen years—this country would then be in a position to command the world."

Adjournment of Congress.

ON last Sunday morning, at 12 o'clock, the thirty-third session of Congress expired. By some they have been denounced, by others applauded, according as party policy and interest dictated. Perhaps they may have done some things well; others might have been bettered. But as there has been so much said upon this subject, we let the matter go, satisfied to take our common lot—if not with the world, with "the rest of mankind." We have not been treated very well in the case of the Land Bill; but we will hope on and look for better times. We ask no favor of Congress; we demand simply our rights as American citizens, and if the late session have refused these, a coming one may be more just and liberal; we have told our mind, and for the present, let the thing go.

The Post Route Bill was passed. The bill to establish a weekly mail between the Pacific and the Atlantic has failed. The Collins' Mail Steamer Bill, that was vetoed by the President, was appended to the Naval Appropriation Bill, and unanimously passed, with a slight alteration, Congress retaining the power upon six months' notice to discontinue the extra allowance. The bill for the erection of public buildings in Kansas and Nebraska passed. Mr. Douglas reported a bill authorizing the people of Oregon to form a State Constitution, and apply for admission at the next session. It was opposed by several Southern Senators as well as a member from Massachusetts. Mr. Douglas finally moved to lay it on the table, which was done by 27 to 11. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation came into the Senate with one hundred and forty-eight amendments from the House. The Senate agreed to one hundred and four. The House receded from forty-four, and the bill passed.

TWO SCORE AND NINE WIVES IN MOURNING FOR ONE MAN.—One argument against the "peculiar institution" of the Mormons is the sorrow it is liable to bring upon the female portions of the community, to say nothing of the large number of old bachelors who would die, leaving no mourners behind.—[New York Dispatch.

This is a knock down argument for romance and novel writers, but we appeal to the sympathizing lovers of romance to extend their sympathies to the sorrowing desolate maiden ladies throughout Christendom and especially in New York, who not having husbands to mourn after, mourn all their lives in single blessedness because, forsooth, the gentlemen (according to law) are all taken up; and, seriously, we ask of these philanthropists if they ever turned their attention to finding a remedy for the vast amount of mourning, not to say the sufferings and misery attendant upon the many thousands who never fill the measure of their creation, many whose hopes both here and hereafter are wrecked upon the ocean of public sentiment, wretched outcasts upon society, without a tear from the thousands that weep over the sorrows of Wirter, "Children of the Abby," or the pathetic account of "Eliza Wharton," and yet meet the destroyer with outstretched arms in your circles of aristocracy. This is one argument against the "peculiar institutions" of these sympathisers for Utah.

And as to the old bachelors, &c., the statistics of Mormondom does not include so many, though it is true that there is a "questionable remedy" here, that they do not find in Utah; as there it is a part of their strange belief that every male as well as female should legitimately fill the measure of their creation, and they conscienciously seek to themselves wives, and thus fulfil the first great command.

BRO. ORSON SPENCER speaks rather discouragingly of affairs in Kentucky and some of the regions about Cincinnati. The great trouble with many is, that they do not understand Mormonism, and have only newspaper reports to go by. A number of Saints who will soon be on their way there will change the moral atmosphere of that city, and the regions around, and produce a living testimony in their midst that the forked tongue of slander cannot controvert. Accounts are very different from many places. We have numerous letters from various parts of the country, particularly in Pennsylvania, that tells another story. A spirit of enquiry is obtaining around, and numerous baptisms taking place. Mormonism is not dead, nor does its spirit slumber. In many parts of the United States the Saints have moved away, and left men without a witness, or testimony, to pursue their own course; but the spirit and power of God lives among his people, and where the light bursts forth it must and will be seen, appreciated and admired, by the honest in heart among all people. It is such that will build up Zion, and be ornaments in the city of our God—others can pursue their own course; our motto is onward, and our advice to the Saints, live your religion.

"MORMONISM IN N.Y.—Mrs. Ellen Weley complains that her husband Henry has seduced her sister Margaret Lundrigen, who lived in the house with them, and wishes the Mayor to see that her sister is properly cared for."

These names we are not acquainted with, and either the Tribune is mistaken in the names, or mistaken in ascribing it to Mormondom. Is it that the public taste has become sated with such affairs in Christendom, that it is necessary to head it "Mormonism in N.Y." Now, Mr. Tribune, we protest against this use of your hight character and influence in conveying this misrepresentation, (as your forte is not in the jocular,) for we have borne the sins of so many for years past, we feel that we ought to be exempt now from bearing more than our own, which, by the way, we acknowledge to be quite as much as we are anxious to answer for. The law of Israel was that the adulterer and adulteress should both be stoned to death. Call things by their proper names, which in reality would read Monoganism in New York.

THE MAIL AGENT between Raleigh and Malden, named McGowen, was shot on the 6th of March by three men, for a trifling debt, receiving six balls in his head and body.

UTAH.

WE have received, via California, Deseret news up to January 4th.

There are many items of interest which we shall lay before our readers, but have not room for all this issue.

The Legislature met on the 11th of December last. President H. C. Kimball was elected President of the Council, in the place of President W. Richards, deceased; and President Jedediah M. Grant occupies his former place as Speaker of the House. We omit for the present the doings of the Legislature, their committees, &c.

The Governor's Message is, as usual, a well digested, interesting and luminous document, exhibiting the true position of the Territory, with which, from his indefatigable exertions and personal observation, no one can be more conversant than himself; he obtains his information not only by hearing, but by seeing. As often as twice a year he visits the extended settlements; his eagle eye sees with a glance anything that is out of place, and not unfrequently, with his escort and body guard, in traveling between settlements, he repairs old and plans out new roads, builds bridges, &c., &c. He is a practical man, and believes in doing more than talking. We will give his message next week.

Proposals are advertised by Col. Steptoe for a new military road, commencing at Great Salt Lake City, and running by way of Provo, Fillmore, Parowan and Cedar Cities, to the eastern boundary of California, in the direction of the Cajou Pass, for which $25,000 was appropriated by Congress.

A new and improved route is to be opened from Utah to California. The following will explain:

Adams & Co. were to commence a line of stages on the 1st of February between Los Angelos and Salt Lake, to run once a fortnight. It requires now sixteen days to travel it without relays. They think with proper relays they can run it in six. We shall see.

On New Year's day the Governor and Legislative Assembly of Utah Territory gave a New Year's festival, in compliment to Judge Kinney, his Associates, other United States officers of the Territory, and Lieut. Col. Steptoe, with the officers in his command.

All things are prospering in little Utah. "This very turbulent people" are quietly minding "their own business." The smoke ascends upwards as usual, the mountains are in their old places, and Gov. Young alive and kicking.

The West.

WE call the attention of those interested in the West to an article on the first page. We could not have described it better. We think, however, that our friend Johnson has rather softened down the question of health. There certainly are great inducements held out in that land.

New Scheme of Disunion.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6, 1855.

I hasten to lay before you, in advance of all publicity, a scheme which is now advancing, under profound secrecy, among a goodly number of our most respectable and influential citizens. I have no time to comment, but give you the plan, as it has been revealed to me, without any injunction of concealment.

A new republic is to be formed, consisting at first of ten States, three to be comprised within the present limits of the State of California, three in Oregon Territory, two in Washington Territory, and two from the western portions of Utah and New Mexico. The basis is to be a confederated government, similar to yours on the Atlantic side. The great railroad is to be abandoned, and every obstacle thrown in the way of its construction; while the argument at the hustings is to be made to the people, that the Government at Washington have refused the road to the people of the Pacific. The queston of slavery is to be abjured and disclaimed until the plan is so far executed that there can be no restriction, after which the Southern four or five States will adopt slavery. The first convention is to be imposing in numbers, and especially so in the distinguished talent of its members. You need no information as to the number of ex-Senators, ex-Congressmen, ex-Governors and ex-Judges who swarm in our midst, panting for one more good old-fashioned political chase.

The President, Senators, Representatives and Cabinet Ministry are all to be chosen by the direct vote of the people. The Naturalization Laws are to be fixed on a severe basis. The act of independence is to be simultaneous with a well planned and decisive seizure of the United States reserves, with whatever of moveables or live stock they may contain. The Sandwich Islands are to be guaranteed their independence, and the United States are to be appealed to in a tone of friendly good-bye.

Here you perceive an opening for all the prominent politicians—a field for the military and naval aspirants—a call for powder mills and ordinance foundries. You may also guess how readily such a severance will be graciously received by England, France and Spain. I leave the subject with you, without comment. Visionary as it may seem, it is not a fancy sketch; fail it may, but it is now a purpose of deep interest with the parties concerned. The first public movement will be either a society or a convention, for the purpose of forming a new party, to be called the Pacific Railroad party, to draw off a majority of citizens from all old party alliances. Through this medium the Washington Government is to be proscribed and proved to be practically inadequate to our necessities. It is to be shown that we send our gold away, and receive no Governmental protection in return, and that as we now virtually govern ourselves, we might as well have the credit of it abroad.

The conspirators will be startled when they see this letter in your columns, and will begin to heave the lead to find out their soundings. —[Cor. N. Y. Herald.

Conference Minutes.

Minutes of the Conference held in Philadelphia, January 7, 1855.

THE following have been mislaid and overlooked for the last two weeks:

Meeting called to order by Elder SAMUEL HARRISON, President of the Branch, at three o'clock, P.M. Opened by singing by the choir, and prayer by Elder N. H. FELT. Present from Salt Lake City, Utah, Elder JOHN TAYLOR, of the Quorum of the Twelve; also, Elders E. K. FULLER, JETER CLINTON, and ALEXANDER ROBBINS, Presidents of Seventies; ANGUS CANNON, "Seventy," and Bishop N. H. FELT.

Elder TAYLOR presiding. Elder CLINTON arose and remarked, "As it is customary, when in conference assembled, to transact business relative to the Kingdom of God, that we all have the privilege of voting, or, in other words, raising our hands, signifying our approval or disapproval, I will now propose the authorities of the Church in the Valleys of the Mountains. It is moved and seconded that we uphold, by our faith and prayers, our beloved Presidents, BRIGHAM YOUNG, and Councillors HEBER C. KIMBALL and JEDEDIAH M. GRANT, as the first presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Carried unanimously. Moved and carried also, that we sustain with our faith and prayers the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles—Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, C. C. Rich, E. T. Benson, L. Snow, E. Snow, and F. D. Richards. It was then moved and carried unanimously, that we sustain the organization of the Church as it now exists in the Valleys of the Mountains.

Bro. TAYLOR then arose and made some remarks upon the importance of the conferences held semi-annually throughout the world, in which every officer, from the first President of the Church, the Quorum of the Twelve, to the Deacons, with all the authorities of the Church in Zion, and in addition to these, the local authorities of each branch, are thus voted for every half year, and every member in the Church is expected to vote for or against; and if any one have objections to the persons nominated for office, then is the time to manifest it, for if any one does not feel in their hearts to sustain a person in his calling, and yet hold up their hands and vote for him, acts hypocritically, and have no right to go around afterwards grumbling about them; but after you have voted to place a man in authority, do all you can in righteousness to uphold and sustain him, for there is not a government, political or religious, upon the earth, whose officers pass under so rigid a scrutiny as they do in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; in other organizations they are appointed for two, three and four years, or for life; in ours, for six months, or during good behavior. But I will not detain you longer from the business of the Conference. May the blessings of the Lord rest upon you, and his Spirit guide you in the path of righteousness. Amen.

It was then moved and carried unanimously, that we sustain and uphold with all our ability and power Elder JOHN TAYLOR as President over the Mission to the Eastern States, and also the brethren who are associated with him on this Mission. Then followed the nomination of the officers of the Branch—Elder SAMUEL HARRISON as President of the Branch; Elders, H. SKIDMORE, A. LOWER, FRANCIS, FROST, DOVE; Bro. G. J. WILLIAMS chosen Recorder.

The Philadelphia Branch consists of 130 members, including 7 Elders, 8 Priests, and 5 Teachers.

Elder CURTIS, President of the Branch at Hornerstown, represented that Branch to consist of 25 members in good standing.

Elder WM. TERMAN, President of the Union Branch at Quincy, Franklin Co., Pa., represented that branch, consisting of 30 members.

Elder HARRISON, who had visited the branch at Tom's river, represents them in good standing, and numbering 75 members.

After having got through with the business of the Conference, Elder TAYLOR arose and moved that Elder SAMUEL HARRISON be ordained a High Priest: Carried. Er. H. then took his seat in front of the stand, and was ordained under the hands of Brs. TAYLOR and FELT; after which Elder TAYLOR made some remarks in relation to his mission east, and the purpose of publishing a paper in New York, and requested the Saints in Philadelphia to use their influence in spreading it, and endeavoring to get subscribers, &c., as it is quite important that it should be well sustained as a medium for necessary information to the immigration on their arrival in this country, and to the Saints scattered throughout the States, as well as to counteract in some degree the vast amount of falsehood and slander so lavishly bestowed upon us as a people. May God in his infinite mercy bless you and unite us all in righteousness, and rolling on His purposes, even to the coming of the Son of Man, and throughout all Eternity. Amen.

Conference closed by singing and prayer.

G. J. WILLIAMS, Clerk.

The names of the members read by Elder Robinson, being 29 in good standing, two having been expelled. Daniel Robinson nominated to preside over the Union Branch, carried. Voted that Martin Henry officiate in the office of Teacher, and David Robinson in the office of Deacon, and William Tarmon in the office of Priest. The members again met in the evening and partook of the Lord's Supper, after which Elder Tarmon read from the Book of Covenants the duties of the several offices in the Priesthood.

It was moved and carried to adjourn.

Singing and benediction by the President.

Correspondence.

Gov. Young and the Mormons.

WE don't know the writer of the following diatribe, but should judge that he must have escaped recently from a Lunatic Asylum. At the request of Mr. Littlefield, we publish it with his remarks. We appreciate his motives; he has displayed talent and labor worthy of a better cause, for we think his time might have been spent to better advantage than in replying to the religious frothings, the maniacal ravings, and the fiendish hate of so palpable a fool. We think that he may look in vain for its appearance in the "Saturday Mail," but n'importe. If his readers have read his own article they will need no comment, for he has proven himself alike ignorant of the morals, policy, politics, and pursuits of the people, as well as the genius of the Constitution and Laws of the United States.

THE GOVERNOR OF UTAH.

GOVERNOR BRIGHAM YOUNG said lately, he held the patent of his honors direct from the Almighty, and that he would resist any attempt of President Pierce to meddle with them. The consequence was that for some time, no civilian could be found with courage enough to go and supplant Brigham. But at last a soldier has been found who will take that bull by the horns. Colonel Steptoe is that man. We shall be anxious to hear all about the Colonel's reception in Salt Lake city. He will, doubtless, take some of his armed companies along with him for the sake of peace and amity. We do not believe Brigham, though backed by his two score wives, will dare set himself up against the General Government. He has now come in contact with the outside civilization, which he and his Mormonites have been endeavoring to avoid, and must abide the consequences. Emigration will soon overflow the Salt Lake Valley, and the beastly license of his rogues and fanatics will soon be done away with, as the muddy character of a pond is changed after a stream has been made to flow through it. Nothing but a dreary wilderness, remote from the cities of men, could tolerate that exceptional form of civilization. If it desires to exist any longer, it must pack up and go to look for another blessed wilderness. But it will not be easy to find such a one. If these wandering vagabonds should pitch on some favorable bottom land, away apparently, from the beaten tracks of our pioneers, ten to one, Colonel Benton's railway would come thundering through it some fine morning, and scatter their camp once more.

It should be a matter of general congratulation, that a soldier and a christian gentleman is going to take Brigham in hand and keep him in order. We may now expect that the Laws of the United States will come into collision with those of the Mormons, so perfectly incompatible with the prevalent principles of society. There is no need of any power of prophecy to foretell the result. Mormonism will be blown away like the miasm of a marsh, and a flood of wholesome civilization roll through the gorges of the Salt Lake Valley.—[Graham's Saturday Mail, printed at Philadelphia, Dec. 30, 1854.

The above chapter of singularities is extracted from your paper of December 30th, 1854. It is made up of many incongruities and interlarded with such a truthless flow of allegations against the Governor of Utah, and the Latter Day Saints generally, that justice and truth seem to demand their refutation. Had this come from a source less eminent, it would have passed unnoticed. But it has been flaunted through your circulation of 20,000 copies, which fly off into every part of this Union, and to trans-Atlantic nations; and being the offspring of that intellect which, for fifteen years, gave celebrity to "Graham's Magazine"—these are causes sufficient to give to this article an importance worthy of notice.

First. You attribute a saying to Governor Young which he never uttered, in the light you give it. He has never said he "held the patent" of his gubernatorial "honors direct from the Almighty;" but he might have said to the effect that he would be Governor until the Almighty said, "Brigham you need not be Governor any longer." How does Mr. Graham know but God Almighty preceeded President Pierce in excusing Brigham Young from being Governor? This is a grave question and one, too, that will be very hard for him to answer definitely unless he is a believer in revelation and a legitimate medium for its reception. Neither is there anything in this like a threat of resistance should President Pierce attempt to displace his official honors. Yet the effect has been wonderful upon the nerves of dunces on the tripod who have thrown off gas and nonsensical farragoes enough to quite secure them from a collapse. And, according to Mr. Graham, all the civilians in this blessed land found their hearts in their throats as their "courage" came oozing from the ends of their fingers. Even the reward of Gubernatorial honors and emoluments could not induce them to make the venture. Wonderful man must be that Brigham Young, that a single statement of his can vanquish all the statesmanship of America! Graham says it, and he ought to know. Bless the Star Spangled Banner! Lucky it is there is a soldier in the land! Col. Steptoe, a brave at Chepultepec marches broad side up to the rescue, and Mr. Graham says he "will take that bull by the horns". He has predicted it, so we'll watch for its fulfillment.

Second. "We do not believe Brigham, though backed by his two score wives, will dare set himself up against the General Government. He has now come in contact with the outside civilization, which he and his Mormonites have been endeavoring to avoid, and must abide the consequences."

This quotation exhibits consummate ignorance of the true character of Gov. Young and his religious adherents. "Set himself up against the General Government"? No sentiment he has ever uttered, no act of his life, can be pointed to, which truth and candor can so construe. He should be a barbarian, an outlaw, a land pirate, a bandit by profession, a brigand by trade, or a freebooter in practice, in order to justify this strong language.

Mr. Graham: should you ever have the distinguished honor of making the acquaintance of that gentleman, your cheek may mantle with shame and self reproach, for the injustice you have done him. You will find him a social, affable, friendly, companionable man, with a sufficient judge of human nature to "read you like a book."

Sir, he was reared amidst the great American civilization, was taught in her schools; the maternal hand that rocked his infantile cradle was a daughter of liberty, and his sire was among those sons of freedom whose stalwart arms wielded the swords of the Revolution. The Constitution, our Republican Institutions, and the principles of equal rights, have ever been his pride and themes of vindication. The germs of Republicanism were sown in his breast when a boy, and they were lodged in good soil, for in the days of his maturity and manly strength the fruits of philanthropy and patriotism have marked his course. He is an American patriot, one of her ablest, boldest, and most successful propagaters of freedom, and still you charge him with intentions of disloyalty, and allude to the dangers that may result to him and his compatriots of Utah, from a "contact with the outside civilization," the "consequences" of which, you say "they must abide."

Sir, your very prolific and imaginative mind must have been wonderfully tortured in the contemplation of the calamitous and annihilating consequences attendant upon such a collision! If, by the term "outside civilization," you mean that kind which was exhibited by the State of Missouri in the expulsion of hundreds of freemen from their homes in the dead of winter to seek an asylum in a sister State—incarcerating some within her prisons, and massacreeing many others; or if you allude to that "civilization" that murdered the Smiths, while in the Carthage jail—that took the lives of many more, and finally disfranchised thousands and exiled them from the protection of their country and forced them into the wilderness among wild beasts and Indians; if it was this, then the eccentric flights of your brilliant imagination must have revelled most gloriously amidst the triumphs of mobocracy, violence, rapine and extermination, administered by your boasted "outside civilization" upon the poor "Mormonites!"

Most wonderful Mr. Graham of the "Saturday Evening Mail!" How wofully do you plunge down from the sublime and pleasant heights of literature, where the fountains of human kindness distill its kindly waters to sooth and melt away the cold ice of insensibility! Upon your piles of didactic lore, that radiate the powers of genius and intellectual thought, you turn your back! and, with sword and fagot in hand, take a bold and daring step into barbarism and intolerance. You pursue this persecuted people to their new home in a far off wilderness and have the affrontary to call them "rogues and fanatics," and tell them to "pack up and go to look for another blessed wilderness remote from the cities of men," if they would still continue to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. Lo, and behold, "emigration will soon overflow the Salt Lake Valley," and society there will be purged of evil practices, "as the muddy character of a pond is changed after a stream has been made to flow through it." Glad to hear such a host of exemplary and virtuous people are so soon to hearken to the invitations of the poor Mormons to come and settle with them in those fertile vallies. Hope those who have mobbed, robbed, plundered, murdered their brethren and driven them from their homes, wont think themselves called upon to go there.

Third. "If these wandering vagabonds should pitch on some favorable bottom land, away apparently, from the beaten tracks of our pioneers, ten to one, Col. Benton's railway would come thundering through it some fine morning, and scatter their camp once more."

This contains still more of the peculiar aims of Mr. Graham's "outside civilization." In the first place they are called "wandering vagabonds." Vagabonds, indeed! Do you mean by this that they are idlers, a shiftless collection of itinerants, without any visible means of support? If so, let your imagination soar to those rugged heights that rear their summits of eternal snow above the vallies of Utah, teeming with their thousands of inhabitants. There you will overlook all the pursuits of (not "outside") civilization moving briskly forward; cities springing up as if by magic, farms opening on every hand; agriculture flourishing; the earth yields her treasures of rock and the polishing hand of skill piles them into palaces and Temples which will be among the wonders of the world; the hum of manufacture floats on the breeze, the mountain torrent leaps the rugged precipice and turns the wheels of machinary at the base; and amidst it all is the prayers of thankfulness, the songs of gladness, the voice of melody, and the rejoicings that flow out from gladsome hearts towards the Giver of every good. A few years since, all there was a desolation. Who has wrought the mighty change? Who penetrated the wild regions a thousand miles "away from the cities of men," and have brought all this to pass amidst the Rocky Mountains? Alas, who, but Mr. Graham's Mormonite wandering vagabonds! They are forming there an inside civilization that will become the very core and soul of rational liberty, the nucleus of freedom, that will endure the test of Republicanism, and survive the conflicts which "outside" propogandists of civilization may seek to bring to pass by the aid of "christian gentlemen" and "Benton's railway." Vagabonds? have they not furnished the thousands of weary emigrants with flour, pork, grain, and vegetables? have they not given them shelter and rest? have they not shown them kindness and sympathy, and helped them on their way through the rugged passes and barren wastes towards the regions of gold? Have they not stood in the great wilderness highway and reached out the fraternal hand and acted the part of men, philanthropists, and true citizens of the great world? They have done all this, still Mr. Graham lavishes upon them the epithets of "rogues," "fanatics," "vagabonds," and "Mormonites." If they have ever appeared like wandering vagabonds, it was the handiwork of unjust persecution that drove them from homes; if they are Mormons, it is from honest convictions of conscience; and it will take a being wiser than yourself, sir, to prove them fanatics and rogues.

Sir, if the founding of a Territoral Government in that remote portion of our public domain; if the rapidity with which splendid architectural edifices are there reared—roads opened and all the variety of internal improvements pushed forward—if the establishment of institutions of learning for the education and enlightenment of the masses—if the successful planting there of that renowned standard that supports those stars and stripes that are emblematic of American freedom through all the world—if the wonderful success with which mercantile operators meet—if the liberal principles of free trade tolerated and carried out are not sufficient reasons why the citizens of Utah should be exculpated from the obliquy attached to the epithet of "vagabonds," then, for the sake of humanity, would it not be well to restore to them the affluence, the homes from which they have been driven; the houses barns and grain to which the torch of incendiaries was applied, in those locations, too, where your boasted "OUTSIDE civilization" sways its proud sceptre? It might be well for you to reflect a little upon these things and ascertain the true character of that people at whom you hurl the shafts of irony and intolerance. You should understand that they are American Citizens—that theire forefathers trod the battle-fields of the Revolution and their blood consecrated the American soil to freedom, that it might yield its strength to feed the oppressed of every clime. Understand, sir, that for their honest sentiments of religion they were driven from their inheritance within the broad limits of these States, and before you again insinuate their disloyalty to their country, recollect that five hundred of their ablest men left their families scattered through the then wild regions from which I now write, and marched against Mexico during our recent conflict with that country. What other people would have done it? It is enough to hang the heavens in blackness and cause tears of angels to fall from the courts of glory, that men should so love their country as to part with wives and children upon an unprotected frontier, and then, after the battles are fought and the weary march ended, be branded with disloyalty! Shame on you, Mr. Graham, and all others who have given publicity to such unmerited charges.

Fourth. Your congratulant paneggyric inspired from the miraculous circumstances "that a soldier and a christian gentlemen is going to take Brigham in hand and keep him in order," is among the last clauses of your marvelous chapter. You cause Col. Steptoe to loom up before the imagination in the ample proportions of both soldier and statesman—which double character is borne by him to the field of his future labors. Another concomitant is: that "he will take some of his armed companies along with him for the sake of peace and amity." And so he did, for the latest intelligence from him is that he was encamped with his soldiers in the heart of Salt Lake City, and for want of any foe to employ their prowess they were, some of them, taking liberties with domestic sanctity, rather incompatible with those harmonious forms of enlightened society fostered by the INSIDE civilization that sways a benignant sceptre over the fair vallies and rugged mountains of Utah. Sir, the people of Utah are agriculturalists, mechanics, artizans, and the ministers of peace. Then why insult them and blunt their warm feelings of patriotic devotion, by sending them a Chief Magistrate with a military outfit and "armed companies" for an escort? If the Colonel and his command deport themselves as quiet and orderly citizens, disposed to keep the peace, they will have no use for arms, and, from the reputable character generally awarded Col. Steptoe, there can be no doubt but everything will move on harmoniously there, and the "collision" you predict, in a contact of the laws of the United States and those of the Mormons, will be most fortuitously avoided. And, dear sir, it is a task too hard for even your profundity and literary acumen, to point to one single law, established for the general participation of the people of Utah, that is, in the least, "incompatible with the prevalent principles of society." The sweeping prediction with which you conclude: that "Mormonism will be blown away like the miasm of a marsh," is but the reiteration of the threadbare prophesy of Anti-Mormons, so often used in their denunciatory edicts against that power of truth which is mighty and WILL PREVAIL. I bear my testimony of this, Mr. Graham, and close by saying, I shall look for this to appear in your "Saturday Mail."

I am, sir, yours with due respect.

To the Editor of the Mormon.

SIR—The following remarks are at your service, if you think proper to insert them in THE MORMON:

"Your cause is just, but we have no power to redress."

These were the words of Mr. Van Buren while President of the United States. There may be some who might have the curiosity to inquire, What was the occasion of this remark from the President? To such I will state, that after the people, called Mormons, had purchased land in Missouri of the United States to a very great amount, they were driven, by mob violence, from that State into Illinois, and at that time (1838) a delegation was sent by the Mormons to the General Government, to petition for redress. It was upon this occasion that the remarkable expression was made by the Chief Magistrate of the United States—remarkable from so high a source, because, while it fully admits the justness of the claim, it also admits the weakness and inability of Government, from some cause, to protect its own citizens. This the Mormons—not foreigners—but citizens of the United States, whose fathers fought and bled for the liberty we pretend to enjoy; these, without murmuring, commenced quietly and industriously to plant and build in Illinois, and soon the banks of the Mississippi were enriched with fine farms, comfortable dwellings, and a noble city, which told well of the industry, perseverance, and energy of this people. But alas, the same ruthless hand of mob violence, like the withering sirocco of the desert, passed over these fair prospects also; and the Mormons were again forced to look back upon their homes but to bid farewell, yet uncomplaining, take up their march into the wilderness, with the words still ringing in their ears, "Your cause is just, but we have no power to redress." Poor and destitute, in the midst of toil and fatigue, and with their families, facing the keen cutting blasts of winter, they pursued their slow and toilsome way across the country to the Missouri river, there in the wilderness, among the more friendly savages, to rest for the winter. These poor disfranchised Mormons, in the midst of their destitution, deprived of their homes, and yet homeless, were suddenly called upon to produce their quota of men—yes, more than ten times the per centage of men advanced by any State of the Union, were called into active service in the war with Mexico. Five hundred formed what was then known as the "Mormon Battalion," and of which, for patience, discipline, and promptness, during the tedious march over the desert, and their effectual service in California, Gen. Kearney, Col. St. George Cook, and many others, have borne honorable testimony. Did these men step forward in their country's cause reluctantly? Did their lacerated feelings cause them to resent a call from that government that would not, or could not, redress their wrongs? No! The reply made to Col. Allen by Brigham Young ought to ring through the Halls of Congress and vibrate in the ears of every American citizen, and put to shame the mean, cowardly sycophant, that with hypocrasy and falsehoods, seek to heap additional injuries upon the heads of that people. The reply was this: "You shall have your battallion at once, if it has to be a class of our Elders;" and in three days the battallion was ready to march. Circumstanced as they then were, does this look like disloyalty? And is it possible that the tales of returned, disappointed, broken down political hacks, can neutralize in the minds of honest men, not merely words, but deeds, that now stand recorded in the department at Washington? We don't believe it.

And, again, after all, these extraordinary trials and fatigue incident to life in a wilderness, impoverished by their losses and weakened by the draft made for the army, they commenced a long and tedious journey of upwards of a thousand miles of arid plains and rugged precipitous passes of a mountain country to the then parched and unproductive valleys of Utah. Here the weary travelers hoped for rest, though the prospects were anything but flattering to those whose homes had been been upon the rich soil of Missouri and Illinois—yet there they were willing to cast their lot, although aware it would require the utmost energy and indefatigable perseverance to bring back that soil through the laborious process of irrigation to produce the common necessaries of life. And yet there, where eight years ago the prowling wolf or grizzly bear held possession, are now well built cities, thriving villages and pleasant and fertile farms to greet the wayworn traveler, to rest, and supply his wants on his distant way to California. And now, methinks, the reader would exclaim—"This people have surely earned a right to rest, and to every privilege granted to American citizens and settlers of a new Territory." And though government has once since said—"Your cause is just, but we have no power to redress," they can say this no longer, but in justice will eagerly bestow upon them every privilege within their power to grant. But pause, gentle reader—I blush for the degenerate children of a noble race. Our statesmen, guardians of our rights and nation's honor, have forgotten their high calling, and stooped to listen to tales fit only to frighten the occupants of nurseries. These noble statesmen have been the weak and willing instruments of meaner men, dupes of disappointed office-seekers, and some of them have virtually said that these Mormons are not popular, and though "their cause is just, we will not redress them." Though the gold paid for Missouri soil may still fill our coffers; though they were driven from their homes in Illinois; though in their most trying hour they willingly answered their country's call; though they've made the wilderness to blossom as the rose, and opened the rich treasures of gold to us, and nobly sustained the great chain connecting the East and West together, and settled a country no other people would;—but they are Mormons, who believe the same God reigns that once reigned in Israel; they believe in polygamy as an institution of God, and it is sufficient that this view of the subject is not popular at present, and therefore we, (not all, for there were honorable exceptions,) deliberately proclaim ourselves the champion of sectaries, and open to the highest bidder, and solemnly deny these Mormons, (not a remuneration for Missouri land,) but a quarter section of land, so freely granted to other settlers. Thus we see men in high and responsible stations, barter away the dignity of their calling, to join the rabble in the cry of mad dog, and take so questionable a course to eradicate Mormonism from the land. And if Mormonism has become a constitutional question, it has indeed been met in a most undignified manner; and the course pursued in denying to Utah the liberal provisions made by Congress to other Territories, because of their difference in faith, displays in those who adopt that course, as a remedy, a most contracted view of the vast and diversified interests of so great a nation as this under which Mormonism commenced, and under which, through its various phases, it now exists. When shall we see the halls of Congress filled by nobility like those that have passed away?

A NATIVE OF NEW ENGLAND.

From Our Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, March 4, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR—The Thirty-third Congress terminated to-day just about noon, having been in session most of the time for several days and nights successively. They passed all the general appropriation bills, though the President vetoed the one making appropriation for carrying the mails by ocean steamers. The section that was introduced by the House of Representatives into the Civil and Diplomatic appropriation bill, making a reduction on the Tariff of twenty per cent. was stricken out in the Senate. The section in the Army bill appropriating thirty thousand dollars for the introduction of camels and dromedaries into the United States for war purposes, was also stricken out. The clause in the Post Office Appropriation bill giving Mr. Wm. F. McGraw thirty-six thousand dollars for one year for carrying the mails from Independence to Salt Lake; also allows him the right of preemption to six hundred and forty acres of land at any place where he makes a station on the road, and the privilege of making them every twenty miles if he chooses to do so.

The Senate passed a bill on Tuesday regulating postages; this bill fixes the rates of postage at three cents for any distance not exceeding three thousand miles, and five cents over that distance. The ocean mail postage is not to exceed two cents, unless where postal arrangements with other nations provide for higher rates.

The Ocean Mail steamer bill was next taken up, which was debated at great length; the session continued until 9 o'clock in the evening. The discussion was mainly upon the principle whether Congress should retain the right to give six months notice to the Collins line of steamers to discontinue the contract with them to carry the mails to and from Liverpool. The House passed the Naval Appropriation bill. The Indian and the Army Appropriation bills then occupied the House for the remainder of the sitting, which was continued until a late hour in the night.

TUESDAY 27.—The residence of the Hon. Thomas H, Benton was consumed this afternoon by fire, including all the books, papers, and manuscripts that were in his office; also nearly all the furniture in the house.

The Senate on Wednesday passed a bill from the House of Representatives establishing a more efficient discipline in the Navy. This bill provides other kinds of punishment than flogging, and holds out rewards to seamen for faithful service. The discussion of the Ocean Mail Steamer Bill occupied much of the remainder of the day, which was finally passed as it came from the House of Representatives, containing the contract with the Collins line of steamers, as it has been, thirty-three thousand dollars for each trip, and they are to perform twenty-six trips in the year.

The House passed several bills, among them the Indian Appropriation bill. The Bounty Land bill was also taken up and discussed at great length; one or two amendments were added and then it was passed by a large majority. The Army Appropriation bill was then taken up and discussed until twelve o'clock at night.

The Senate on Thursday spent the most of the day in discussing the Civil and Diplomatic bill. The debate turned upon an amendment offered by Mr. Clayton to strike out the section reducing the duties on certain imported articles. This section was introduced into the bill in the House of Representatives; it might be said, and in fact it is a revision of the whole tariff. The debate waxed very warm, and finally became so hot that a recess of several hours was taken in order that Senators might cool off a little. At six o'clock the Senate met again, and the debate was kept up until a late hour in the night, when the amendment offered by Mr. Clayton was rejected.

The most of the day was spent by the House in discussing the Indian Aappropriation bill. A bill was passed by the House to carry out the Reciprocity Treaty.

Everybody seems to be hurrying off from Washington. The omnibusses, hacks, and cabs are all employed in running to and from railroad depots and steamboats, and I too soon must be hurrying away to other and distant parts; and here let me bid adieu to the readers of the MORMON, with a prayer to Almighty God that he may greatly bless them, and the promise that they shall hear from me again from other parts, and another cognomen if the Lord will. And with my best wishes for your prosperity, Mr. Editor, I subscribe myself, as usual,

A MORMON IN WASHINGTON.

From our Cincinnati Correspondent.

THE following interesting communication is from our old friend Professor Orson Spencer, Chancellor of the University, of Utah. We shall be pleased to hear from him often.—[ED.

CINCINNATI, March 2, 1855.

PRES. TAYLOR, Dear Bro.: Your paper "The Mormon," came to hand last evening, and is worthy of the honored man whose name it bears. I wish you to send me five copies of it to No. 166 Vine street, for six months, and your order for payment will be met at sight. Such a paper is needed, for the events it will chronicle, for the history it will record and for the instructions and warnings it will proclaim. The history which your pen will record, and the counsels and blessings it will publish, will be matters of retrospect and intense interest in ages to come, when the drama of this age will pass in vivid remembrance before the minds of the present actors. Men in a future period may be assisted to learn righteousness by the things they have suffered in past ages. Could this nation listen to the voice of Apostles sent among them, they might learn wisdom at a cheaper rate, than to pass through the deplorable smash of conflicting elements, and the furious eddy of every wild and ungovernable passion. But the drama is instructive and rich, and your pen will contribute to portray it. The stage exhibits a complete set of actors for the tragic, comic, and for the farce. Apostels and Prophets grace the platform.

They always have done so in the greatest epochs the world has ever witnessed. Christ and his Apostles were actors in some of the varied scenes which the stage effects to portray. In those scenes the vindictive and merciful were seen at the top of their speed, and the pitiful and ridiculous were rivals in the same race-course. While the heads of Apostles were falling from the guillotine, in prisons, and the death-wail of sweet male infants, was rending the air of Bethlehem; even then, Priests and Lawyers were shouting at the top of their voice, moral and intellectual progress!

You, sir, from the high watch-tower you occupy, are well able to understand many parts of the drama that are now being acted. I am not the only one who have seen your mangled body, together with that of a mighty Prophet and Patriarch, at a time when it did not require artificial blood-battles in order to produce a tragic impression of a high order. Many people are now shouting progress, who affect a holy fear of being contaminated even by reading the fresh and direct revelations of Heaven, and are diligently preventing the people from receiving the only instruction that will save the nation from the cataracts of human gore, and from the avalanche of every destruction in the moral and political elements. The singular spectacle now exists, of scores of men, in one hour putting their hands to the bellows of stereotype founderies, in order to issue a perpetual edition of ever-varying lies, and in the next hour, lending their influence to favor some pseudo-benevolent society in order to save souls and convert the world. And members of Congress, may be heard in the day time recommending to Utah, another code of morals, and in the nocturnal recess, dignitaries of the same body, are rolling in adulterous sheets, and chambering in wantonness and at times probably, responding to pious constituents, that they have boldly given a broadside against the Polygamic Institutions, of those wise Patriarchs, in whom all the families and governments of the earth are to be blessed.

Now, if this does not constitute a pious fraud, and ridiculous farce, what can do it? But enough of this, at present.

Elder Barlow has just come in from Georgetown, Kentucky; the spirit of violence in that region is so rank and mouthy that he has deemed it prudent to leave. Elder S. T. Bankroft, a well-known and highly respected citizen of the same place, had also received some sectarian and catechetical instruction in the shape of missile works; and as that is an antecedent to modern progress and a potent substitute for moral suasion, he will also most probaly have to leave.

Cincinnati is so well dosed with soporifics and moral opium, that her late financial spasm constitutes no invincible discouragement, and the pains of unbelief are apparently checked, so long as there is sufficient constitution left to bear sectarian opiates. Some of the Saints in this City, and others in more distant parts, manifest a strong desire to emigrate to Utah. The scarcity of provisions and fodder in some parts of Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, is creating some fear of suffering before another harvest. The Elders in this State were all well at the last reports, and endeavoring to arouse the scattered Saints to a lively sense of their duty, and to publish the glad tidings of the gospel to all the meek and humble among men. Apathy and the "Spirit of deep sleep" seems to be the most formidable impediment in their way. Desiring ever to enjoy the benefit of your counsels and your prayers, I remain your humble brother, in the gospel,

JOHN TAYLOR. ORSON SPENCER.

MR. EDITOR—I send you the following paragraphs taken from, the Sunday Times, for republication, as a rare specimen of the "code of good morals" in force in this good city of Gotham, for the especial edification of such members of Congress who were opposed to granting lands to settlers in Utah. Would it not be as well to petition that worthy and honorable body that New York be excluded or expelled from the Federal Union on the same grounds; or, shall we consider this as the "code of good morals" worthy of imitation by the benighted inhabitants of Utah.

Yours, W.

"A BURNING DISGRACE.—We venture to say there is no respectable citizen of New York who is not shamed and humiliated with the spectacle which our principal thoroughfare presents every evening after eight or nine o'clock. Strangers who visit the city are shocked with the open parade of shamelessness which Broadway presents. In no other city of the Union would women, who publicly make merchandise of themselves, and turn the pavements into assignation grounds, be permitted thus to insult decency. In St. Louis and New Orleans, every courtezan is arrested when found in the public thoroughfares, while even in London they are required to keep in certain localities, and are seldom found in the respectable parts of the town. But here, in the very heart of the city, and upon our principal thoroughfares, they stare in the very face of virtue, and, with their shockingly painted faces and gaudy charms, disgust every respectable person. We cannot think of a reform from which Mayor Wood could reap so much honor as he would were he to banish these gilded creatures of sin and shame from public sight. If they will pursue their abominable vocation, let them be sought by those base enough to desire their company, but let them not be allowed to outrage virtue and innocence by their shameless and degrading exhibitions. We have been expecting for a long time to hear that our Mayor, in the midst of his reforms, had taken this matter in hand. The Press has repeatedly urged it upon his attention, and it is time he made a move in the premises. We advise him by all means to remove the fouler blots on our city before bestowing so much time on small ones."

WE have news from New Mexico. The Indians are becoming troublesome. At Pueblo, on December 25, fourteen men were massacred by the savages, and several women and children carried off. The inhabitants of Santa Fe expected an attack from a large force of Apaches who had determined to take the town. The First dragoons had a fight with a party of Indians at Sacramento Mountain on the 25th of January, when twelve of the latter were killed. Capt. Henry W. Stanton and three privates, however, were slain by the Indians. Lieut. Sturges completely routed a party of Apaches sixty miles from Santa Fe, and recovered a number of stolen cattle. These occurrences had created an intense excitement throughout the Territory, and Gov. Garland had called out five companies of volunteers to protect the settlers.—[Evening Mirror.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.—The Legislature of Indiana has adjourned sine die, without electing a United States Senator, or any State officers, and these latter cannot be filled by the Governor.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LORD PALMERSTON is spoken of in the highest terms by the English press, as eminently qualified for the high and at present embarrassing position that he occupies; his talents are thought to be brilliant, his experience great, his knowledge of diplomatic and governmental affairs extensive and accurate, whilst his good-humored pleasantry, suavity of manner, and conciliatory powers, give force and impetus to his intelligence, and render him, at the present critical juncture, so necessary to unite and fuse the conflicting elements, parties and interests, whose collision and disunion have recently been so disastrous under the former administration. His age is said to be seventy-one, certainly rather against a man taking the helm in such boisterous times; but being healthy and vigorous, it is supposed that his tact, industry and genius, together with his unbounded popularity, will amply compensate for any discrepancy in age.

It is supposed that Lord Raglan will not lose his command in the Crimea. One hundred and fifteen thousand men are to be added to the army, and other important changes are to be made. We have not room for details, but give the following, from his remarks in the House of Commons:

"He had not thought it his duty to appoint a Secretary of War, because he thought the offices might be amalgamated, and that the civil departments of the Ordnance might be placed under the control of the Secretary for War. (Hear, hear.) The Secretary of the Admiralty had established a board to superintend the transport service at sea. We were engaged in warlike operations with France as an ally, but we had not the means of sending so many men into the field as France, and it was but fair that we should make some return to France in the shape of additional naval arrangements. (Cheers.) He was convinced that the establishment of that board would lead to increased economy and increased efficiency in that department. Well grounded complaints had been made in reference to the condition of our war hospitals, so that it was intended to send out three civilians for the purpose of making good sanitary arrangements for the hospitals, camps and ships. He anticipated the greatest advantage from their scientific labors. Lord Raglan had received instruction to send persons duly qualified to cleanse the camp, and to take other measures tending to promote the health of the troops. Many complaints had been made of want of organization in the Commissariat department. A commission, of whom Sir John M'Niel would be at the head, was going to examine into the defects of the Commissariat department, and will have full power to set them all to rights. In the British army there has not existed an officer such as the "chief of the staff" in the French army, and the consequence was that all complaints had been made to the Commander-in-Chief. To remedy this defect, Brigadier Simpson was going out in that capacity, and he had no doubt that Lord Raglan would readily attend to any suggestions he might make with regard to the medical department. He might say Lord Panmure was going to attend entirely to the medical department at home, and an hospital was about to be established at Smyrna."

IT is much better to be falsely accused of doing wrong, than truly; the first reflects upon the accuser, the second upon yourself.

A CLERGYMAN, who was in the habit of preaching in different parts of the country, was not long since at an inn, where he observed a horse-jockey trying to take in a simple gentleman, by imposing upon him a broken-winded horse for a sound one. The parson knew the bad character of the jockey, and taking the gentleman aside, told him to be cautious of the person he was dealing with. The gentleman finally declined to purchase, and the jockey, quite nettled, observed:

"Parson, I had much rather hear you preach than to see you privately interfere in bargains between man and man in this way."

"Well, replied the parson, "if you were where you ought to have been last Sunday, you might have heard me preach."

"Where was that?" inquired the jockey.

"In the State Prison!" retorted the clergyman.—[Yankee Notions.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptés, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire á l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "The Mormon" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "The Mormon" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.
The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.
No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Our Good Time is in the Present.

BY ELDER W. G. MILLS.

I HATE the whine of discontent
That marks the age we live in,
That speaks of olden times well spent,
To our forefathers given:
Some sing their worth and competence,
And some their mirth are humming,
While some despise their taste and sense,
And sing, "The good time's coming."

What though the future may be great,
Or past were good and pleasant,
We have no share in either state,
Our duty's in the present!
They had their wants and trials too,
Their light was not still shining;
And we've enough within our view
To keep us from repining.

The landscape's lovely to the eye
When we from distance view it;
Yet there are faults we may descry,
Whene'er we ramble through it.
But while the scenes before, behind,
With beauty are abounding,
We may be able here to find
Some charms our steps surrounding.

The times we have, which some regret,
To our seed will be olden;
And they, with unborn poets yet,
May call this period golden!
And they may chant their graceful lays,
Their future bliss up-summing,
Just as we sing of by-gone days,
And long for better coming.

Then let such murmuring feelings die,
That long for other ages;
The blessings that we now enjoy
Will shine on history's pages.
The best philosophy for man,
Life's present cares enduring,
Is now to do the best he can,
Thus future bliss securing.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

TO THE

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

OF THE

TERRITORY OF UTAH,

Delivered December 11th, A. D. 1854.

Gentlemen of the Council and House of Representatives:

UNDER the benign influence of high Heaven's protecting care, we are again assembled inthe capacity of a Legislative Assembly, to ordain and establish such laws as shall best subserve the public good.

The toil of the husbandman has been rewarded by a plentiful harvest, and peace, prosperity, and success, have eminnently attended all our efforts.

We have been delivered from the overflowing scourge which desolates the nations, the wayward destroyer, and the devouring flame. With thanksgiving and praise, let our aspirations ascend from warm and willing hearts, unto our Father and our God, who has extended unto us his rich blessings, and caused the earth to bring forth in her strength for our sustenance.

Although a large immigration have found homes in those peaceful vales during the past season, yet, it is believed there is an abundant supply of food for all, until another harvest.

Through the untiring exertions of our worthy delegate in Congress, Hon. John M. Bernhisel, appropriations have been obtained for making a "road through our Southern settlements, and extending to the boundary of California; for holding treaties with the Indians: and to defray the expense incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities in the years 1851 and 1852." These are the first appropriations of the kind which have been made for this Territory. This action of Cohgress, though tardy, is none the less acceptable, evincing as it does a favorable disposition to place Utah upon an equal footing with other Territories. We hail it as a good omen, and trust that in future her interests may not be neglected, nor her claims unregarded. There seems to be a difficulty in obtaining appropriations when made by Congress; month after month, and even a year sometimes intervenes, before they are received at the point of disbursemont. Where the distance is so great, and the means of communication are so limited, it is desirable that the action of the department should be prompt in such matters.

The present prospect is, that none of the appropriations made at the last session will be received before another year; such delays operate very onerously and unjustly upon the Territory, as well as upon the citizens, who have so long been anxiously looking for the liquidation of their just claims.

The appropriations for the State House and Penitentiary are each expended; and in order to complete either of those works, an additional appropriation will be required either by the Legislature or Congress.

The works at Fillmore have rapidly progressed the past season, and it is anticipated that the State House will be ready for the accommodation of the Legislature at its next annual session.

Peace with the Indians has been preserved during the year, although detached parties of the Utahs have been found unfriendly, which in one instance resulted in their killing two of our citizens. The perpetrators of this crime were brought in by other Indians, and delivered up to the United States authorities, before whom they had a fair trial, were found guilty of murder, and executed according to law, the Indians themselves giving testimony against them.

It has required the greatest forbearance and patience, as well as large amounts of presents on the part of our citizens, to maintain amicable relations with them. In some few instances they have presumed upon the forbearance shown them, and conducted themselves very improperly and abusively to the people. The pacific policy which has, from the beginning, been exercised toward them, has no doubt avoided many collisions which might have resulted in open war.

Although large quantities of beef, flour, clothing, guns, ammunition, &c., have been given them, to conciliate and make them friendly, yet the savage propensities of their natures, their improvident and vile gambling habits of life are such that no present supply, no matter how generous, remains long with them; and their indolence precludes any idea of their replenishing from their own resources.

The Shoshones are rather superior to the Utahs, and provide better for their own living, although a large party of them have quartered upon the settlements north during the past summer. Much has been done by the inhabitants, since their residence among the Indians of the mountains, to ameliorate their condition. They were found to exist in the lowest state of degradation—poor, ignorant, indolent, and savage. In their anger, nothing restrained them, but fear, from the greatest excess of crime. They would sell and gamble away their own children, and steal from and rob other Indians of theirs, either to sell, gamble away, or kill, as their humor seemed to suit them. A horse or gun was deemed an equivalent for killing a man; and every shade of difficulty became a matter of barter for pecuniary consideration. The settlers have invariably given them provisions and clothing, furnished them with guns and ammunition to kill game, and in various ways administered to their relief. In many places grain has been raised for them and houses built for their chiefs and principal men.

This policy has had a tendency to correct their vile habits and propensities, and sometimes induce them to labor for their own support.

This course of liberality towards them, in addition to constant loss of property caused by their depredations, is a severe tax and burden upon the people, especially in the more isolated and thinly settled locations, where their visits are more frequent and more numerously attended. It is, therefore, with a sense of relief that we look forward to the disbursement of the present appropriation made for holding treaties with the Indians, in the expectation that the people will be secured against their depredations, and partially relieved from their constant support.

The Territory will also be partially re-imbursed for advances which she has made from time to time for the suppression of Indian hosiilities. It is undeniable that those expenses have been much less in this, than other Territories similarly situated, and should be met with a spirit of liberality on the part of the General Government. But whatever the Government may be able to accomplish in her intercourse with the Indians, it is scarcely expected that Utah will be relieved of their presence—consequently not freed from their depredations. The inhabitants should therefore secure themselves and property as much as possible, and be prepared to defend themselves at any moment from their hostile incursions. Each settlement should complete its defences, and preserve an active and energetic military organization. In various ways the people have sought to secure their own safety, and protect their property from constant depredations, short of maintaining an open warfare against them. I have uniformily pursued a friendly course of policy towards them, feeling convinced, that independent of the question of exercising humanity towards so degraded and ignorant a race of people, it was manifestly more economical, and less expensive, to feed and cloth, than to fight them.

The policy adopted towards a small band, usually inhabiting Weber county, by the inhabitants of that district in distributing them out among the citizens, making for the Indians judicious selections, where they and their families may feel that they have a home, and know that they can depend upon having food, shelter, and kind treatment in exchange for their labor, seems feasible, and if, in the end, it should prove successful, will have a tendency, at least, to secure peace to the inhabitants, and civilization to the Indians. Doubtless, a vast deal of patience and forbearance would be required to carry out this policy, even if the Indians should consent to try it. If they were suitably employed, it is believed, they would become profitable laborers after a little experience. They should be paid honorably and fairly in such things as they need, day by day, according to their necessities, until they learn to be more provident of their means. Like all other works of great philanthropy, this probably would be gradual in its operation; but if it should be deemed worthy of adoption, it is believed, it can be carried into general effects in the Territory.

In many of the Southern settlements, already the Indians have become useful in labor and business, and quite a number of Indian children are found living in families, who have taken them to bring up and educate. So far as my knowledge extends in relation to the subject, such children have had the benefit of Common Schools; this blessing is secured to them by the operation of law.

The subject of Education has probably received as much attention in this as in any other as newly settled State or Territory. In almost all the wards and districts, good school houses have been erected, and schools maintained a part of the year, but I fear that sufficient attention is not paid to the selection and examination of teachers, or the manner of conducting schools. Although the Board of Regents, have doubtless by their influence aided much, and are still extending their influence and exertions in a general way to advance the cause of education, yet at this moment, there is not a Parent School for the instruction of Teachers—a Mathematical, or High School, where the higher branches are taught, in all the Territory; neither have they a single object of Public Improvement under their auspices in progress for educational purposes. This is partly owing to the want of means to operate with, and partly to the fact, that the Board, consisting of men engaged in such a multiplicity of business, have but little time to devote to these duties. Hitherto the cause of education has been entrusted with the Board, by the Legislature, who probably conceive they had sufficciently discharged their duties by having investsd the Regents with full power and authority to act in relation to that subject. But it is a subject of vast importance, and involves trusts of too weighty consideration to be neglected for any reasons at present existing. It is a subject fraught with momentous interest to us, and our youth, who are soon to become our representatives upon the earth, and will, if neglected, recoil with bitterness upon our own heads, when too late to remedy.

As a Territory, we have peace, and extensive abilty exists with the People, to establish, and sustain good Common Schools in every Ward, and Distrtct, not only three or six months in a year, as appears at present most common; but ten, or eleven, wherein every child, no matter how poor, may find admittance. Schools for Teachers, Mathematical Scheols, and wherein the higher branches are taught, should also be kept in successful operation, in all the principal towns. It is moreover an opportune time to introduce the New Alphabet, in forming which, the Regency have performod a difficult and laborious task. I reccommend that it be thoroughly and extensively in all the schools, combining, as it eminently does, a basis of instruction for the attainment of the English language, far surpassing in simplicity and ease any known to exist. Although the more immediate duties pertaining to the subject of education, may devolve upon the Regency, still it does not free the Legislature from responsibility, and I doubt not that whatever aid or influence you may find in your own power to extend, will be cheerfully given.

I cannot refrain from again calling your attention to the subject of Home Manufactures. Large quantities of wool, flax, hides, furs, and almost every variety of the best material for the manufactnre of woolen cloth, linen, leather, hats, soap, candles, glue, oil, sugar pottery, castings are found in abundance and easily procured, and yet we find large quantities of such articles annually imported, and purchased by the people, which causes a large and constant strain of our circulating medium.

If a few hundred thousand dollars, which are now annually expended, and carried away for imported goods, were instead thereof invested in machinery and articles for Domestic Manufactures, it would prove far more advantageous, and rapidly advance the prosperity of our Territory. It would appear that the expense and trouble of transporting goods over a thousand miles of land carriage, would be sufficiently protective to encourage the capitalist to embark in domestic manufacturing. It is manifestly our interest as a people, to more generally produce from our own resources, articles for our own use. It is the spring of wealth to any community—of independence to any State. Much has been accomplished, but the very prices prove that the manufacture of all of the above mentioned articles, as well as many others, in a lucrative business opening to the enterprise of many more of our citizens. If our market could be abundautly supplied with articles of domestic industry and economy, our object would be attained, the money retained in the country, and importers seek elsewhere a market for their goods. The Kanyon Creek Sugar Works, designed for the extensive manufacture of sugar from the beet are nearly ready for operation. The Works in Iron county, for the manufacture of iron from the ore, are in operation, although not as successful as could be desired. The operators have had many unforseen obstacles, more or less incident to all new locations, and untried metals, as well as many adverse circumstances to contend with; but it is gratifying and encouraging to know that they have so far been able to surmount them all; and have moreover acquired an experience which will greatly facilitate future operations. This branch of domestic manufacture has received considerable aid from the Public Treasury, and may, for a limited time, still need some assistance.

We recognize, in the general diffusion of true knowledge, and the universal practice of well directed industry and economy, the elements of unbounded prosperity, and independence; they form the bulwarks of our defence and are the source of our freedom. The fostering care of Legislative authority and aid, should be extended to all such objects as are so manifestly calculated to promote the general welfare. Considerable Public Improvements have been accomplished, although more through the voluntary contributions of the people in labor, &c., than funds devoted for such purposes. Bridges across the Jordan and Sevier rivers have been built; mills have been, and are being constantly erected; roads are made; kanyons and mountains explored, for material, and vast quantities of timber, lumber, stone, and other materials collected for the permanent improvement of our towns and cities; all betokening a spirit of energy, and enteriprize on the part of our citizens, gratifying to all, who feel an interest in the improvement, and progress of these far distant vales.

The revenue derived from the assessment of the past year has been merely nominal, amounting in all to only	$6,358 31
And of this amount collected	4,434 56
Which leaves a balance delinquent of	1,951 75
There have been collected, however, from the delinqueneies of former years, (Which has aided the Treasury to meet a great share of the public debt.)	5,682 11
Auditor's warrants, redeemed at the Treasury during the year, amount to	13,182 85
Leaving in circulation at the date of report, October 31, 1854	3,352 36
(Which is less than half the amount outstanding at the close of the last fiscal year.)
There is still a delinquency in the hands of the Collectors, amounting to	8,273 31
Which, if collected, would leave a balance in favor of the Treasury of	4,920 05

It is barely probable that sufficient may be realized from the present delinquency, to meet the existing indebtedness. You will, therefore, perceive, that whatever appropriations may be made, it will necessarily be based upon revenue arising from future assessments.

There exists an unwarrantable neglect on the part of a majority of the Collectors, in not collecting the taxes, and making their returns in proper season. The Revenue Law should embrace a penalty, and a provision, making it the duty of some person to prosecute such collectors as fail to comply with the requirements of the law; because a collector dislikes to enforce his collections, should cease to be an excuse. The people are abundantly able to pay their taxes; and if they neglect to do so, the law should be enforced against them. In common courtesy, the people should be more prompt in these matters, and not devolve upon their officers the unpleasant task of compelling them.

If appropriations are made for Public Improvements, and other objects of interest and general utility, the rate per cent. will necessarily have to be increased, but for the ordinary expenses of government, it is considered that the present will bring sufficient revenue.

We are still left in doubt, in regard to the construction of a railway across the continent, the time when, and the route it shall traverse. If it were thrown open to private enterprise, and men were secured the right of way, it is more than probable, that one, or more, would now be in process of construction, and soon in successful operation.

As the all absorbing Nebraska-Kansas question seems now happily disposed of, it is sincerely hoped, that this matter will earnestly engage the attention of Congress at an early day. The Deparment have probably received the reports of the several railway routes surveyed by this time, and nothing should hinder their proceeding at once to the decision of its location, and taking measures for its speedy construction.

In the Military Department there is no material change from last Report; the usual musters have been held, but the new enrolments which it is anticipated will show a considerable increase in the numbers, have not yet been returned. Some of the Volunteer Companies are providing themselves suitable uniforms, which adds to their military appearance, and indicates that they feel an interest in the performance of this, as well as other duties. It, would be a matter of gratification, if others would follow their example. Tis true, we prefer effiecency in organizatton, discipline, arms, ammunition, and all necessary accoutrements, to useless appendages, ornamental or otherwise; but the energy and commendable pride which stimulates an officer or soldier to uniform himself may generally be taken as an evidence that the more necessary part is not neglected. Service during the year, has been nominal; no expeditions have been called for, and the constant Guard Service so requisite during the prevalence of Indian Aggressions and hostilities, has been, in a measure, dispensed with.

Forts and City walls, remain in most of the settlements in an unfinished condition. We again, urge it upon the People to improve the present time of peace and prosperity, to complete their defences as they know not what hour their enjoyment of quiet may be broken.

The aid of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company has been extended to thousands of poor, to assist them to emigrate from the United States, and other countries and find homes in the Valleys of the Mountains. The operations of the Company thus far, have been very successful, although comparatively little remuneration has as yet been received from those benefited. They will, however, as they get able, refund, and in many instances double by donation what they have received.

By the aid of this Fund, much good has already been accomplished; many thousands of persons have been taken from the depth of poverty and placed where they can, not only sustain themselves, but soon find a competence for themselves and families. Still thousands are anxiously awaiting for the time when the Company will be able to bring them, also, to a land, where labor finds its reward. The operations of the Company prove doubly remunerative; it not only places the poor in a situation to sustain themselves but adds to the sum of labor necessary to develop the resources of the Territory, and bring forth and combine from the elements, things necessary for the sustenance and convenience of human existence.

Our labor is our wealth; by it we bring to ourselves the luxuries of life, ornament the earth with beautiful dwellings and gardens, build cities, and bring forth the rich fruits of the earth from her prolific bosom. This, then, is a natural outlet to the over-populated districts of the older states and countries, where every avenue seems closed against the poor who linger out a miserable existence in hunger and want, bequeathing their children the same fate—a hopeless and thankless legacy. Here! in these fovored climes, poverty can scarcely be said to exist, and no person, having the common ability to labor, need want for the common necessaries of life. This has been the labor of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company, to pick up the worthy poor from such places, and give them an inheritance with us. That they have been successful, let the hills, the vales, the kanyons, which echo with the hum of their industry, make answer! Let the granaries, groaning with the productions of the earth, the result of their labor reply! From the beginning, their operations have gradually increased—the last year's immigration amounting to nearly four thousand souls. It is designed to operate more extensively hereafter, in immigrating from the United States.

The full compliment of the Federal Officers for this Territory, except an Indian Agent are now resident with us; and so far as I am informed, a good degree of cordiality and reciprocal kindness exists between them and the people of the Territory.

A corps of the U. S. Troops, under the command of Col. Steptoe, on their way to California, are also sojourning with us during the winter. From the courteous and gentlemanly bearing of the officers, and the control which they appear to exercise over their men, I feel gratified in the belief, that if their services were wanting in protecting the settlements from Indian aggression, or otherwise, it would be cheerfully extended.

While thus briefly reviewing the condition and situation of our territory—our own beloved mountain home, I am forcibly reminded of her rapid progress during a short period of her existence, also eliciting bright anticipations of her glorious future, when she shall emerge from territorial thraldom, and have her place among that mighty family of nations whose progress and power, whose influence and destiny, the disclosing eye of Omnipotence can alone reveal. May we aid, by our united energy and ability, in subserving the public good, that when we go hence, we may have the proud consciousness of having faithfully kept and fulfilled the important trusts reposed in us by the people, whose servants we are, and whom we have the honor to represent.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, U. T.,
Great Salt Lake City, Dec. 11, 1854.

New Route

From Carson Valley to Great Salt Lake City.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
Nov. 27, 1854.

EDITOR OF DESERET NEWS, Dear Sir: Doubtless many of the readers of your columns will feel highly interested, pecuniarily, as well as otherwise, to hear that Col. Steptoe, now in command of the United States forces in this city, started an expedition to look out the shortest and most practicable route to California by way of Carson Valley.

This expedition was accomplished by Colonel John Reese, resident of Carson Valley, who has rendered very material aid to the success of Colonel Steptoe's expedition.

We started on the 18th of September, six in number, two with Colonel Reese, and three of the United States employ. Our aim was to keep as near a direct course for Carson Valley as possible. Upon this course we followed the Beckwith trail near two hundred miles, where it took a North West direction, and seeing by the lay of the mountains that it must lead us a long way from our designs, we kept our southwest point, and within thirty-five or forty miles, without a single hill of importance, struck his trail again at a point which took him five days to accomplish, as we learned in Carson Valley. Made several other adventures, and cut-offs, got short of provisions, and were obliged to hasten on our journey, keeping directly on the trail which strikes the Humbolt at Lawson Meadows, down which we hastened one hundred and fifteen miles to Rig Town on Carson river. The poisonous effects of the water of the Humbolt can hardly be believed except by sad experience. We came near losing all our animals by it, as well as our own lives, and could as sensibly feel its poisonous influence within ten minutes after drinking, as we can feel the cheering influence of a cup of good strong tea. Suffice it to say, we arrived at Mormon Station in Carson Valley on the 15th of October, twenty-seven days from the time we left Salt Lake.

I would here state that a small company of eleven persons hearing of our intended trip before we started, posted themselves on the road ahead of us with only one horse to the man, upon which he rode and carried his provisions; none of them however were loaded with more than half rations for the trip. These falling into our company, we were obliged for humanity's sake to assist as far as possible, which proved a backset to the expedition. In Ruby Valley, two hundred and fifty miles from this city, a company of five Dutchmen overtook us.

Upon this route going and coming we found the Indians as peaceful and about as wild as the antelope, with the exception of a band of the White Knife Tribe.

We were detained in Carson Valley seventeen days, in which time we took good notice of the advantages of that country. Its soil and climate is equal to the best of the mountain valleys. Its timber is exhaustless, and of superior quality.

Reese & Co. have in successful operation a very fine, large, three story grist mill, to which is attached the most complete saw mill we ever saw in motion, with a circular saw six feet in diameter. We witnessed it saw twice through a ten foot log, making a complete change of the mill, and sawing twenty-eight feet of lumber in one minute and fifty seconds.

Started on our return to this city on the 2d of November, accompanied by S. A. Kinsey of the firm of Reese & Co., and a Mr. Davis, owner of a large drove of sheep wintering in this valley. Col. Reese took with him two other men and accompanied us about two hundred miles on our return trip.

We traveled down the Carson river on the south side, passed around the sink, and satisfied ourselves that there is no outlet, as has been faithfully reported. Kept our course north-east as near as mountains would permit, without road, or trail, for near two-hundred miles, where Mr. Reese left us turning east over a mountain to another range of valleys by which he intended to make his return. Here all the mountains and valleys range north-east and south-west. About forty miles from where he left us we struck the Beckwith trail but one and a half day's travel to west of the exact point where we anticipated.

This whole route is well supplied with grass—no drive over thirty miles without water in the dryest season of the year, and, in the early part of emigration, it is plenty in all the mountain rills. Wood and sage brush are abundant.

Added to these advantages, we avoid the Humboldt, and alkali in general, and we are confident we can reach Carson Valley by this route inside of five-hundred miles, and that soon this will be the main thouroughfare of California immigration.

We know that from the Beckwith route we have cut off over one-hundred and fifty miles and to expect to receive, between this and spring, a full account of Mr. Reese's return trip from where he left us to Carson Valley, so that we shall be apprised of the best route known by white men. After a most extraordinarily successful trip of twenty-four days we arrived in this city on the 27th of November.

Yours most respectfully,

O. B. HUNTINGTON,
C. A. HUNTINGTON.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1855.

The Mormons.

We have lately read a long labored article in Putnam's Magazine, headed "The Mormons; shall Utah be admitted into the Union?"

We were considerably amused in looking over the affair, and in writing our good humor has not left us. Our author is rather Shakspearean in some of his remarks, and treats the matter rather theatrically; he has got up a very pretty little scene, in one act. We would respectfully recommend that he have the whole piece dramatized, got up especially to be acted in the Franklin Museum, and for which, no doubt, he will receive a liberal compensation. However, as he has thus left it, and we wish to assist him in his enterprise, we will furnish one or two additional acts, after having made a few remarks by way of prologue.

Now we wish to assure Mr. Putnam that we have no particular objections to be written about; men must live; besides Mormonism, cooked and hashed, à la cuisine Française, so that you cannot discover the original substance, is so funny, so nice, so palatable, and so popular, that we are quite willing that writers should be paid, and readers amuse themselves for their pains: but we must be allowed a little of the laugh too, for we are really amused both at the cupidity of readers and the ignorance of writers generally, when they enter upon this subject.

In examining the article of our learned friend, we have looked in vain for anything authentic in his premises about the Mormons, except indeed that we believe in polygamy; we can find as much in the Arabian Nights, Jack the Giant Killer, or Tom Thumb, as in his book, on this subject. He has said that they are "immoral," "obscene," "blasphemers," "impostors," and used many other gratuitous remarks equally as gentle, courteous and polite; without ever washing out his mouth, we presume. There is no need of proof, of course, to such small and gentle allegations; that would be superfluous; good Protestant Christians don't believe in works of supererogation; it certainly would be unmannerly to ask it; besides it is so much easier to get up an article without proof. However, what may be in strict accordance with Mr. Putnam and his readers' views, may not exactly suit our taste, and as we believe in matter of fact, we ask for proof, and will agree to bring fifty testimonies in favor, to his one against, the morality of the Mormons; and furthermore, we dare him to compare the morals, chastity and propriety of the Mormons with those of the chaste city of Gotham, or any city or territory in the United States, having the same number of inhabitants.

Page 201 we are gravely told that "the Mormons themselves call it (Utah) a Theocratic Government." Now, Mr. Putnam, again we call for that very inconvenient proof. Come sir, face the music; we give your quotations, now give ours. We say it is false; we have a church government, and a state government, the same as Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, &c.; but the Mormons, in their relationship with the United States, have just the same government as any other territory. Who gave them an organic act? Who appointed their Governor, Secretary, Judges, Attorney General, Marshal, &c.? To whom are those parties responsible? Will Mr. P. answer, and then will he please inform us what a Theocratic Government is? And furthermore, we should be gratified to learn by what species of legerdemain he makes the Mormons differ from others? We wait for a reply. We are not concerned about "Frederic the Great," "Napoleon," the "Hindoo Gods," "Polibius," or "the Pope." We want some of these little non-important things answered, and we will talk about grammatical and philosophical disquisitions, and abstract theories, afterwards.

But again, page 203, he says, "Brigham publishes divine decrees in the Day and Seasons." Now it unfortunately happens for Mr. P. that we have no such work as the Day and Seasons for Brigham to publish his revelations in.

We must now touch briefly on his theology. He states that "religious liberty means, that no one shall be troubled about his faith, his inner man; but acts remain forever subject to law." Now we think the framers of the Constitution thought very little about the inner man when they penned these words; we give his quotation from the Constitution: "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Here then are two things that Congress shall not do; the one is, it shall not make a law respecting the establishment of religion; the other is, it shall not prohibit the free exercise thereof. Now we would ask Mr. P., what is the free exercise of religion? He states, the free exercise of his faith, his inner man; but we think when Methodists, Presbyterians, &c., build churches, ordain elders, preach, &c., it has something to do with the outward man; but he says acts (religious) remain forever a subject of law. This we deny in toto. Nothing becomes subject to law until a law is made regulating it, and not then until it comes in collision with law. The Constitution ordains that there shall be no law made interfering with the free exercise, not mental, of religious faith. Mental operations no country can interfere with.

If his views obtained, the moment a Congregationalist, a Methodist, or Presbyterian go to church, or camp meeting, he would subject himself to law. Mr. Putnam's doctrine would prevent the Shakers from jumping or dancing; the Methodists from shouting, or having the falling down power; the Baptists, or Campbellites, from baptizing; the Methodists and Episcopalians from christening; and the Catholics from confession or mass. These are none of them the exercises of the inner man; they are the free exercise of faith pertaining to the outward man—subject to law by his decision, but concerning which the Constitution has said "there shall be no law."

Mr. Putnam asks, Has the State (Utah) a Republican form of government? We answer, if Minnesota, Oregon, New Mexico, Kansas and Nebraska have, so has Utah; and we ask for a single instance—not of opinion, but of fact—wherein it has differed, or does differ, politically, from any other Territory since its organization. We don't want shadows stuck up to fight; we want actualities; give us the facts, not psychological impressions. We can't receive your author, Ferris; he is no authority for us; his book is a base tissue of falsehoods: we quote you, and your acknowledged authorities; we expect the same treatment. Neither is there any need of fine spun philosophical theories, based upon false premises. Mormonism is a tangible thing, and Utah is de facto a Territory, and a member of the body politic of the United States. There is no need of digging up the old musty records of ancient rotten dominions, nor of consulting "a dictionary," to find it out. We are living in a republic, the most free, enlightened and liberal that ever existed. Would he also make politics psychological, referring only to the action of the mind or soul, and reduce us to the same condition of philosophical Republican France, where you had liberty to think, but not to speak; where you had liberty to write, but the police had liberty to take your writings from you; where there were plenty of presses, but no liberty to use them without permission; where if twenty-one persons met together without permission, they were liable to be imprisoned without process; where the Prefect had liberty to shut up a religious meeting at pleasure; where "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité," was written over the door of every public edifice, and tyranny, oppression and despotism universally reigned; where liberty was psychological, mental, and religion ditto—both a theory, a shadow; but where the essence was trampled under foot! This, Mr. P., is a fact that thousands of living witnesses have seen, and not an idea. Switzerland is not much better; the republics of Netherlands and Venice would not do for us; the Holland Stadtholder might do in the Netherlands, and the aristocratic nobility govern republican Venice: we want no such patterns, no such republicanism. Ours is a model Republic; and you, yourself, have quoted the guarantees of our religious liberty; they are worthy the men who dictated them, and ought to be written in letters of gold; we can't have them spiritualized, psychologized; they are not like the empty words liberté, égalité, fraternité, before referred to; they say what they mean, and mean what they say, and are engraven in the hearts of thousands of freemen. Strike at the Mormons over these landmarks, and the lash will recoil fearfully upon those who would so recklessly break down these sacred landmarks; we can stand any law that others can; we are not afraid of law.

Now, concerning chastity, we would ask not only Mr. P., but others, does it become the citizens of New York to talk about Mormon immoralities, you who are literally wallowing in filth and corruption; you whose houses, hotels, saloons and streets are swarming with prostitutes, whoremongers and lasciviousness, and from this hot-bed of vice, this fœtid stench of corruption, where white women are bartered for two, three and five dollars each, to preach about Mormon corruption? Why, the Mormons would feel contaminated with the polluted touch of such putrid debauchery. We can safely recommend to them a saying of Jesus, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone;" and would conclude with an English motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense."

Having now got through with our Prologue, it becomes necessary for us to fulfill our engagement, and assist Mr. Putnam to two other Acts for his Play.

The influence of transformation through his Psychology is so powerful that black is made to appear white; sweet, bitter; and truth, error. We have met with religionists, and among them clergymen, that we were altogether at a loss to account for their hallucinations. One, for instance, in reading "These signs shall follow them that believe," immediately assured his hearers they should not follow. Another, on reading "Ye shall lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost," said it would be awful presumption; and on quoting "The sick shall be healed by laying on of hands," said it is imposition and jugglery. "To one is given the gift of tongues, to another the interpretation, to another prophecy;" this plain Scripture was declared horrid blasphemy. Our eyes are opened—they were psychologised; and as this modern science has lately made such rapid strides in the development of new ideas, and is now taking hold of the editorial department, we give the following:

NEW DRAMA—ACT II.

SCENE—A Theatre, Lawyers, Doctors, Ministers, and other professional men on the stage. A promiscuous assembly of Ladies and Gentlemen occupying the boxes and galleries. A group in front of stage—Rakes, Courtezans, Blacklegs, dealers in human flesh, keepers of houses of ill fame, &c., &c.

Mr. P. approaches the foot lights, bows to the audience, and delivers a most eloquent address upon the powers and excellency of the science of Biology or Psychology. He calls upon those who will yield themselves subject to his influence to come forward—six gentlemen go forward and take their seats. Mr. P. operates, makes his passes—one of the subjects begins to be impressed—puts his thumbs to the thumbs of the subject, opens his eyelids, and says, Now, sir, rise up.

Mr. P. Do you know any thing about the Mormons?

Sub. No.

Mr. P., pointing to the group in front of stage, asks him, Who are these?

Sub. Rubs his eyes, looks amazed, says Rakes—Courtezans—keepers of houses of ill——

P. Hold! (Aside—He is not under the influence.) Sit down, sir.

Sub. Again seated.

Mr. P. operates again.

Sub. Under the influence, head nods—body oscillates—he is perfectly subject.

Mr. P. Arise.

Sub. Rises.

Mr. P. What is this? (Giving him castor oil.)

Sub. (Smacking his lips)—Honey.

Mr. P. What is this? (Giving him soap.)

Sub. Sugar.

Mr. P. What is this? (Giving him a roll of muslin.)

Sub. A baby. (Hugs it.)

Mr. P., aside. (It now operates excellently.) Now, sir, tell me who are these. (Pointing to the group in front, before referred to.)

Sub. Oh, beautiful! what elegant ladies and gentlemen. (Approaches an old shrivelled strumpet.) Oh, the sweet, innocent, lovely, virtuous creature! what beauty! what charms! what purity! Permit me to approach thee, thou paragon of perfection.

Mr. P. What do you now see? Do you know the "Mormons?"

Sub. Yes.

P. What are they?

Sub. Blasphemers, hypocrites, deceivers, obscene imposters.

P., aside. (It works most admirably.) Ladies and gentlemen, I have now exhibited before you the wonderful and astonishing powers developed in this remarkable science of biology or psychology. (Exit, gracefully bowing—curtain falls amidst thunders of applause.)

ACT III.

PARADISE.

SCENE AT THE GATE.

Bang! Bang!! Bang!!!

A Voice. Who comes there?

P. Putnam.

[Abraham approaches.]

P. May I make so bold as to ask your name?

A. My name is Abraham.

P. Happy to see you, sir. You are, I believe, the father of the faithful. (Bowing very obsequiously.)

Abraham, in a deep study. Put—Put—Putnam—I don't know you.

P. Don't know me! Why, I was editor of quite a literary, scientific, and religious periodical; I advocated good morals, went to church, and was opposed to wickedness of every description. Why! I wrote quite a long article against those abominable Mormons.

A. Are you the wretch that wrote that? Why, you fawning sycophant! why do you come here and Father Abraham me, and speak of my blessed name, when you did all in your power, while on earth, to make me odious before the people?

P. You odious! Impossible!

A. Don't talk to me about impossibilities! Did you not condemn polygamy as a heinous national sin? as a curse? I am a polygamist. Do you hear, sir? I am a polygamist.

P., (trembling). I did not mean you.

A. You meant my principles, sir.

P. I would not for the world have offended you; I have always spoken well of you and the Bible.

A. Yes, and as constantly opposed me and the principles contained in the Bible.

P. I only opposed vice, sir.

A. Then, why did you not refer to the infamous debauchery, prostitution, whoredom, and abominations that existed all around you? Were you blind to all this? Did you ever read this?

"ALL SORTS OF SINS.—The Mayor yesterday received a letter complaining of an old scoundrel, 65 years old, who makes a business of advertising for young girls as teachers to go South, but takes them really for prostitution. A woman who keeps a store in Broadway acts as his reference, or procuress."—[N. Y. Sun.

And this?

"The chief of them are situated in Broadway, directly in the face of public travel; they are furnished in the most luxurious and seductive manner; they are each maintained at a cost which would speedily ruin any honest citizen; they are fed and fattened and pampered on the tears of broken-hearted fathers and mothers, on the anguish of wives, on the sighs of kindred, on the disolution of all the virtues and pleasant charities that sweeten home, on the blight of youthful innocence, on the corruption of manhood, on the dishonor of old age. Hell has no more infallible vestibules on earth than the identical dens which yawn in Broadway."—[N. Y. Tribune.*

I suppose these abominations were very pure, because practised among Christians, and it was popular to abuse the Mormons; and my practises, ordained of God, were very corrupt. Don't you know that your practises among Israel caused a forfeiture of life? My children ordained that adulterers should be stoned to death. They were polygamists. You are silent!

P., obsequiously. I am very sorry; I am afraid I was under a wrong influence, and should like a place—a little corner—in your bosom with Lazarus.

(Curtain falls.)

* We are sorry to be under the necessity of raking up this filth; but are compelled to do so in self-defence.

Governor Young.

We don't feel called upon to defend the character of Gov. Young from the frantic ravings of men who know nothing about him. We say to inquirers, read his message to the Utah Legislature; let his own words and acts speak for themselves. If anything further was necessary, we think it may be found in the fact of Col. Steptoe, the Judges of the Territory, and the merchants, having petitioned the President for Gov. Young to be re-appointed to the office of Governor, as will be seen in another column.

We have lately had a very pleasant interview with the Hon. J. M. BERNHISEL, who has been on a visit to this city since the recess of Congress. The Doctor enjoys good health, and is looking and feeling as well as we ever saw him.

In a long conversation with him, and also from seeing him several times in Washington, we are thoroughly convinced that his office there is no sinecure. He is a true friend to Utah, and looks after her interests, with an argus eye. He may not be so vociferous, noisy or loquacious as some, but we believe that a more indefatigable man, in looking after the interests of his constituents, cannot be found; and we firmly believe that his unassuming, courteous and gentlemanly bearing, coupled with his intelligence, tact and untiring diligence, do more real service in securing the wish of his constituents, in the interests of Utah, than all the powers of boisterous declamation, or noisy argumentative debate. Several members of Congress with whom we conversed, and whom he had occasion to call upon officially in committees, mentioned the same thing to us when in Washington. One prominent member remarked, "if you don't get what you want, it certainly will not be your delegate's fault."

To answer the many inquiries for the address of Elders from Salt Lake, we will give them as far as we know them:

JETER CLINTON, Philadelphia.

ALEX. ROBBINS, Boston.

MARTIN H. PECK, (care of G. Hicks) East Calais, Vt.

E. K. FULLER, East Windham, Green Co., N. Y.

BENJ. CLAPP, Fairfield, Freestone Co., Texas.

S. M. BLAIR, Port Sullivan, Milam Co.

We are informed by Elder J. F. Secrist, that Elder Riser, from Germany with thirteen saints, arrived on the 6th inst, in the Charles Buck, thirty days from England, he says we were within seven-hundred miles of Philadelphia in thirteen days, when with storms and calms we were delayed seventeen days more, before arriving in port, during the storm the steersman was washed overboard and lost. If Elder Riser or Secrist wish to preach to their old friends, they have our best wishes for their success.

Arrival of the Danish Saints.

THE following from the St. Louis Luminary, will be interesting to our Brethren:

"We are happy to announce to our readers that Peter O. Hanson and three hundred and seventy-five of his company of Danish Saints arrived here Wednesday. March the 7th by the Oceana, Cap. Miller. Fifty of Br. Hanson's company are still on the river on board the Moses Greenwood, in charge of Elder Peterson. The company has been greatly blessed and favored, having had but few deaths and those mostly children. For particulars, see Elder Hanson's letter.

"We learn by correspondence with which we are favored from E. D. Richards, that the ship Siddons was to sail on or about the 20th of Feb., with about four hundred Saints on board, bound for Philadelphia, under the Presidency of Elder John S. Fulmer. Elders Isaac Alfred, O. M. Deuel, James Pace, William Smith' and George Simpson all ex-Presidents of Conferences were to accompany him.

"Elder Fulmer is intrusted with the special charge of the P. E. Fund passengers. Nearly all on board the Siddons were of that class.—Aged fathers and mothers about three score and ten, are announced as emigrants this season for the valley, by the P. E. Fund. It is thought the emigration will he rather late this year, in consequence of scarcity of ships to Philadelphia. We learn by a letter received this day from N. Orleans dated Feb., 22d, that the Neva was telegraphed from the mouth of the river, having thirteen Saints on board. They will probably come up the river on the Moses Greenwood.

"Since writing the above the Moses Greenwood has arrived. With the balance of the Danish company; also the passengers of the Neva, all enjoying good health and spirits."

Opinions of the Press.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Daily Herald. We are much obliged to the gentleman, with whom we had a very pleasant interview while on our way out, for his courtesy; but think when he becomes a little better acquainted with Mormonism and its advocates, he will find out that talent and ability is not confined to one man.

"THE MORMON.—We have received the first number of Elder John Taylor's paper—THE MORMON—published in New York City. It is a large, well-printed sheet, and the editorials are written with great force and ability. Mr. Taylor is one of the most talented men, and by far the ablest writer in the Mormon ranks, and being an old disciple in the faith, his views and expositions of the doctrines and customs of the Saints may be received as semi-official. As some little doubt may exist in regard to the polygamy of the Mormons, we extract the following unequivocal avowal from an article on the subject in the paper before us:

"'We are not ashamed to proclaim to this great nation; to rulers and people; to the President, Senators, Legislators, and Judges; to high and low, rich and poor, priests and people, that we are firm and conscientious believers in polygamy; and that it is part and parcel of our religious creed. We do this calmly, seriously, and understandingly; after due consideration of its principles and bearings; religiously, socially, morally, physically, and politically; we unhesitatingly pronounce our full and implicit faith in this principle, as emanating from God, and that under his direction it would be a blessing to the human family.'"

Star in the East, Ho! It has come at last.

"The first number of the anxiously looked for 'MORMON' made its appearance in our sanctum last evening, just in time for us to introduce it to our readers. It comes in a beautiful dress, with a head and front that cannot fail to commend it to the attention of all who may chance to meet it.

"It is printed on excellent paper—double medium sheet—and on new type. Office, No. 102 Nassau street, New York. Price of subscription, $2 per annum, or 5 cents single copy. Subscriptions received at the Luminary office.

"'The Mormon' bids fair to be all its prospectus promised, and we hail with joy, this rising Star in the East, and we trust it will receive that support and encouragement which is due to the commanding talents, and indomitable perseverance of the editor and publisher—Elder John Taylor. He has been so long, and so generally known as a bold and powerful writer, a scholar, and a gentleman of the highest order, that the greatest meed of praise we can bestow upon 'THE MORMON,' is to say it is edited and published by Elder John Taylor."

Thank, you, Mr. Luminary; a few more such remarks, and we shall really begin to think we are smart. In order to be equal we perpetrate the following:

Why is it that The Luminary embodies so much light that its genial influences warms the hearts of thousands? Because it is the reflections of Snow.

The Squatter Sovereign,

Is the name of a new paper that we have just received; it is edited by Stringfellow & Keely, and published in the new town of Atchinson, Kansas Territory; which place it claims as being the best starting point to Utah, California and Oregon. It is, as its name indicates, the advocate of popular sovereignty, and is pro-slavery; it is a neat sheet, and its editors seem to be perfectly at home in the tripod. We quote the following in relation to Utah, which we admire for its good sound sense:

"UTAH.—We have seen in some of the papers that President Pierce has appointed Col. Steptoe Governor of Utah. We are sorry for this. Not that Col. Steptoe is not as suitable a person by education, talent, &c., as any other, but because of our peculiar ideas of 'Squatter Sovereignty.' We presume the General Government expects to derive no revenue from the appointment of a Governor in Utah; and as every one must know that Brigham Young would be the choice of every man, woman and child in the Territory, over Col. Steptoe, or indeed any one else that could be sent from the States, and surely the people should have some voice in the matter, as they alone are interested. If Gov. Young should violate any of our laws, or do anything not consistent or lawful, then try him by the law. Because forsooth the ideas of the Mormons differ from ours on the subject of matrimony, shall we do an act that may end in bloodshed and riot? We say no, they are responsible alone to their God for their morals, so long as they do not affect others. We hope that no Southern man, no advocate of the people's rights, will join in this crusade against what may be by some called immorality on the part of the Mormons. We have been contending for years against this same assumption, and let us but once join in the attack upon the Mormons, then farewell to the rights of the South; we could never again say to the North, that slavery, if a sin, was one in which we were alone involved, and that they should not interfere with it. We repeat, that the local affairs of a Territory are matters with which Congress has no right to interfere. She has as much right to prohibit slavery, or abolish the use of liquor in the Territories, as she has to interfere with the domestic arrangements of the Mormons.

Russia.

It is rumored that the Emperor of Russia has written to the President of the United States, representing that there is a coalition among the western powers in opposition to the United States growing out of the Cuban and other affairs and that a protracted diplomatic policy with the United States was by them recommended to Spain, while France and England would divide and scatter their strength, in such a manner in South America and the United States as not to excite suspicion or alarm, and that Nicholas is furthermore desirous of entering into closer relationship with the United States.

We have no doubt that the latter is true; but think that the western powers have their hands full enough with their own affairs, without attending to ours at the present. Our navy under the present state of the Russian affairs would of course be very acceptable. It would not be bad diplomacy this, if it should succeed.

Candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. George Law, whose name is familiarly associated with many of our great Railroad and Steamboat enterprises, has been solicited by the Speaker and several members of the Pennsylvania Legislature, through a joint committee, to give his views on the subject of national politics, with reference to proposing him as a candidate for the next Presidency. His response, which is too lengthy for us at present, was enthusiastically received by his interrogators.

BY STEAMSHIP CANADA.

VERY strong winds had prevailed off the English coast, and very severe weather prevailed throughout Europe.

15,000 persons were thrown out of work in Liverpool owing to the severe weather and dullness of trade.

THE WAR.

The Russian Grand Dukes reconnoitered the Allied front. Two French divisions marched towards Inkermann. The Allies are daily expecting an attack. The Russians had commenced their night sorties but had been vigorously repulsed, they had received considerable reinforcements. Thirteen hundred men, with provisions and store, had reached the French army, Feb. 2. The Czar's two sons have entered Sebastopol.

Gen. Weil, has reported that the situation of the French army is, on the whole good, and that the British is not so bad as reported.

The French army will be divided into two corps. The one under Gen. Pelisser, and the other under Gen. Bosquet.

LATEST NEWS BY THE PACIFIC.

WEDNESDAY, March 14, 1855.

There has been difficulty in the Ministry of Lord Palmerston—the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Home Secretary, and the Chief Lord of the Admiralty having resigned. The ostensible cause is the success of Mr. Roebuck's motion for a committee to inquire into the management of the war.

Lord John Russell has consented to act, and takes the Colonial Secretaryship. The Earl of Elgin, it is supposed, will occupy one of the places of the resigned.

Joseph Hume is dead, very much lamented.

There have been very hard times in England—great numbers out of employ. A serious riot has occurred in Liverpool, at which place 18,000 men were out of employ. The whole country seems to suffer in the same way. Bands of men, women and boys, from one to two thousand, marauded the streets, broke open stores, and attacked markets, both in Liverpool and London. They acted apparently without concert, impelled probably by hunger. The police quelled them. The very last news things were assuming a better appearance.

THE WAR.

Louis Napoleon seems determined to go to the Crimea, although England and Austria have desired him to stay at home. His absence, it is said, will not exceed thirty days.

Russia has declared war on Sardinia. It is rumored that Tuscany has joined the Western Alliance, and that Naples has not.

Lord Raglan is said to have resigned, to avoid recall. The Earl of Lucan and some other officers have been invited to resign.

There has been an attack made by the Russians on the Turks, February 17. The following is the telegraphic dispatch:

FEBRUARY 17.

The Russians attacked Eupatoria this morning. They were commanded by Liprandi; and their numbers were 20,000 infantry and 6,000 cavalry. They commenced the attack an hour before daybreak, and had with them 70 guns. The conflict lasted three hours. The assault was signally repulsed. The steamers threw shells among the assailants. The Russians have 500 men hors du combat, the Turks 150.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT NEWS.

SUDDEN DEATH OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

PEACE PROSPECT CONSIDERED MORE FAVORABLE.

HALIFAX, March 15, 1855.

The royal mail steamship Africa, Capt. Harrison, has arrived at this port en route for Boston. She left Liverpool on her regular day, the 3d inst.; her advices are consequently four days later than those received by the Pacific. The news is of the most important and startling character.

The Emperor of Russia is dead. He expired suddenly, at 1 o'clock on the morning of Friday, the 2d inst., and the event created the greatest excitement.

No details have been received, but there can be no doubt of the fact, as it was announced in the House of Lords on Friday night, by Lord Clarendon, and in the Commons by Lord Palmerston.

Surmises were afloat that he was assassinated, but it is thought he died of apoplexy after an attack of influenza.

His illness was known in England before the news of his death was received, and caused a slight rise in the funds. The effect of his death, of course, had not transpired when the Africa left Liverpool.

The Vienna conference was to open on the 5th instant and peace expectations were daily growing stronger.

From the seat of war there is no news of the least importance.—[N. Y. Herald.

Indian Tradition.

A TRADITION held by the Utah Indians, as related by them to Mr. D. Huntington, the intelligent interpreter to that tribe. They say, the Great Spirit or Shinob had a son whom he loved much, and the bad spirit also had a son. The son of the Good Spirit died and Shinob threw dust on his head and wept, and the bad spirit came to him, danced and laughed at his sorrow, but after three days the Son of the Good Spirit came to life, and Shinob and all his friends rejoiced; that after many days, the son of the bad spirit died also; he also threw dust on his head and wept for three days, after which, his son not coming to life, he went to Shinob and besought him to raise his son. But the Great Spirit answered, when my son died you did not come to comfort me, but ridiculed me in my sorrow; and now because you love to see others mourn, you shall learn what it is to mourn. Go, your son shall not rise again.

Correspondence.

From our Utah Correspondent.

G. S. L. CITY, Dec. 22, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Seeing a copy of your Prospectus in the Deseret News, I take the pen to congratulate you on your introduction into the Far East, as we have to term that side of our Great Republic.

The Legislative Assembly opened its Session on Monday, the 11th inst., in the Council House in this City, and has been in session ever since. We miss the Hon. John Taylor in the Council, though his place is filled by the Hon. Orson Pratt, A. M. All the members of both Houses are applying themselves closely to business, as they are conscious that forty days, the time allowed by Congress for this Territory to legislate, is a limited period to perform the duties necessarily required in a populous and extensive Territory like ours; as you are aware that every other Territory in the United States has had the privilege of lengthy Sessions of the Legislature, while that of Utah has never been allowed to exceed forty days. A great deal of business in the hands of Committees, and Legislative business must annually increase with the increase of population and extended area of settlement, not to mention the increasing thousands of emigrants to the Golden Shrine of California, who annually travel nearly a thousand miles within our Territorial limits.

The weather has been the finest imaginable; one slight snow, frosty nights, and the most beautiful sunshine during the day, favor the builders, and teams find their way to the kanyons with little or no obstruction every day. Stock is fattening on the range. The new Council House is enclosed. The business of the Historian's Office is suspended during the Session of the Legislature, as most of the clerks have got into office, or are members of that body.

The people of Springville built 50 rods of wall of earth, 6 feet thick, and 12 feet high, last week, and are continuing the job, and will no doubt in a short time feel themselves entirely free of any fear of the Indians; this wall encloses 3-4 of a mile square.

A subscription of $10,000 has recently been made in "Provo" to build a meeting-house, and $175 has been subscribed by ladies to procure the nails and glass. It is generally healthy this winter.

The Council of the Presideney met, for the first time, in the upper room of the new Tithing house last Sabbath evening, which was dedicated for a Council room.

Col. Steptoe has sent men to explore a new route to California, which shortens Beckwith's trail 100 miles, with grass and water at convenient distances on the way. It will be shorter than the road north of Salt Lake 250 miles.

Our City Fathers have adopted a decided Temperance movement in this city, abolishing all licenses, makes the chances of the soldiers and others who indulge, rather slim for obtaining the "critter." GEO. A. SMITH.

DEC. 27.

P. S. On Christmas morning while the officers were away making a "Christmas call" upon Col. Steptoe at his house, the soldiers got hold of some of the "creature" through the indulgence of Mr. Perry, U. S. Suttler, without the knowledge of the officers, and kicked up quite a row for our quiet city. Lieut. Allston was the officer of the day, and used every exertion to quell the riot, but with little effect, until the U. S. officers arrived from the Colonel's, when some eighteen or twenty of the rioters were arrested; some three or four pistol shots were fired, but fortunately without injuring any one. By request of Col. Steptoe a strong civil force was placed on duty during the night. Everything has remained quiet since.

Judge Kenney made a splendid party on Tuesday last, in which Governor Young and many of the Twelve, with Col. Steptoe and his officers, participated. The Judges, Col. Steptoe with his officers, and the United States Territorial officers, and the merchants of this city have petitioned President Pierce to reappoint President Young, Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Territory. The petition is an excellent one, and will speak for itself. A Legislative Ball comes off at the Social Hall on New Year's day at 2 o'clock, P. M. The Territorial and Military officers of the United States are invited; it will be a splended affair.

The city authorities have been very vigilant not only in closing, but in keeping closed all the avenues to intoxicating liquors, and an effort has been made in the Legislature to establish the "Maine Liquor Law," but it is likely to fail, although some stringent measures, will no doubt be adopted on the subject.

Yours, &c., G. A. SMITH.

From our Boston Correspondent.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: The following items, though stale in Boston, may not be uninteresting to your distant readers. The Loring case discussion, before the Legislative Committee, in the Representative Hall, of which I wrote in my last, terminated on Tuesday evening, 6th inst. The debate has been animated and highly interesting to the citizens of Boston generally, (as you know slavery is the all absorbing topic of the day in New England) and the talent that has been brought into requisition during the three days it has continued, has been of the first order. The hearing on the second day (28th ult.) opened by testimonies from Robert Morris, Wendell Phillips, and Theodore Parker, Esq'rs., with regard to the pre-judgment and otherwise injudicious course of Judge Loring in the trial of Burns, for which they considered he ought to be removed from his Judgship. Mr. Getchel of Alabama, then appeared in behalf of the remonstrants, justifying the course of the Judge, contending that he had acted in accordance with the oath of his office, &c., as every good officer of the government should do. He spoke briefly of the Southern people, saying "Uncle Tom's Cabin" gave a very incorrect idea of them; and that they were not monsters with hoofs and horns, as some Northern people would make us believe. If straws tell which way the wind blows, his whole speech was quite unpopular. He was followed by Messrs. Hildreth and Walker, for the petitioners, who briefly contended that Mr. Loring did not act according to the expressed will of Massachusetts, though he might not have departed from the letter of the law; and therefore the honor of the State demanded his removal. After an adjournment of one week, the hearing was again resumed, (on the 6th inst.) R. H. Dana and Wendell Phillips occupied the principal portion of the time. Mr. Dana, who spoke for the remonstrants, is himself an Abolitionist of the first class, opposed the removal on the ground of its making a precedent that would ultimately become more detrimental to the abolition cause, than its present consumation would be advantagous. He contended that Mr. Loring acted according to law in all good faith, and it would be contrary to the spirit and genius of the Federal Constitution, to remove him. He protracted his remarks to nearly four hours, wielding the "law and facts" in a masterly manner.

Mr. Phillips then in a closing speech, addressed the committee for the petitioners in a sensative. and spirited though candid style; he bore witness himself as had others, that Mr. Loring had not acted in a legal manner, that he had refused to give the prisoner sufficient time, in his trial, that he had prejudged him before hearing the evidence, &c., leaving no stone unturned, that might have a tendency to bring about the grand consummation so much desired by himself and friends. I was constantly admonished during the remarks of Mr. Phillips, by the fluency of speech, and the zeal coupled with candor which he manifested, that no cause of which he was the champion, could ever suffer for want of an able advocate.

On Sunday, 11 inst., I visited the Music Hall, and listened to an address from the Rev. Theodore Parker, of great modern Religious inovation notoriety. Truly he is one of the great men of his age, and one who wields talents, education, and an influence, well calculated to gather to his standard (as it does) a large and talented congregation of the elite of Boston, and that too greatly to the discomfiture of the old fogy conservative institutions, of sectarianism.

In expatiating upon the great subject of human progression he said, that from 1815 to 1828 was a time of general peace, (excepting the quarrels of clergymen,) but since that time, the political horizon of the Nations had gradually gathered blackness, that is portentious of one of those great revolutions, that are necessary in their times, to the developement of truth, and the advancement of Human Liberty. He became quite prophetic, saying we were on the threshold of very important events, that would purify our moral atmosphere, and bring about a higher state of happines and enjoyment. It was a handsomely written production, but delivered in a monotonous style that did not do it justice. The Music Hall, is said to be one of the best of its kind in this country, capable of holding some six thousand persons, and was built at a cost of some two hundred thousand dollars.

Yours, as ever,

ALEXANDER ROBBIN, JR.

We publish the following because we like the sentiment contained in it. We go in for principles—not men. If the devil preached the Gospel it would be true. If every man in the Church apostalized it would not make the doctrines false. Truth is an independent principle, and cannot be changed by the acts of men.

CRESSONA, Feb. 20, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER,—I found out through the kindness of Brother Samuel Harrison, that you intend printing or starting a weekly paper; this is cheering news for us, shut out as we are from the society of the Saints, enjoying none of the comforts or blessings of an organized branch. We need something of the kind to cheer us up, and give us the truth which is intended to make us wise unto salvation. Many are the disadvantages that we labor under here in the States. We are compelled to take the enemy's papers, if we wish to have any news; and then there is nothing but old lies, got up by the devil and his co-writers, to discourage and destroy the Saints: falsehoods and glaring calumnies stare us in the face as we peruse these filthy sheets. Well does Bro. O. Pratt say that this is a lying generation. There is but two of us in this place, and many a kick and cuff we get from the would-be wiseacres; but we thank our Heavenly Father that through His goodness we have been able to withstand them all. We are but children in the cause, but we expect through the goodness of God to be made strong. Every little newspaper nastiness is stuck at us for the purpose of shattering our faith; and the last, to cap the climax, (I refer to the so-said wife of Bro. Young—the advertisement appeared in the Ledger sometime back, and no doubt you have seen it,) one of my friends, who is, by-the-bye, an enemy to the Saints, came across it; he came to me post-haste with it. "Now," says he, "here is truth—this is direct from one of Young's wives, and you cannot get over it." He thought, as a matter of course, it would knock up my Mormon trotters, and lay me down; but he was sadly disappointed. I told him it mattered not to me whether she was one of his wives or not; I knew in whom I had trusted, and if there was a Judas among the Twelve, so there might be among the Latter Day Saints; and more, if Brigham Young himself would come and tell me that Mormonism was a humbug, I would tell him he lied. This was too much for him, and I trust the devil has left me for a little season. This you may consider rather hard language, Bro. Taylor, but it is my feelings, and I cannot help but express myself in this way. The doctrine of the Latter Day Saints is true—it is reasonable—it is scriptural—it agrees with the teachings of Christ and the Apostles; and can it be an imposition from A to Z, the principles are good—it is truth; and all hell combined will not make me believe otherwise as long as the Lord gives me his spirit.

* * * * * * * * *

God bless you, Bro. Taylor, and may you be the happy instrument in the hands of God in doing much good in the States while you stay with us. Yours, in the Covenant,

A. M. MORTIMER.

We received an interesting letter from C. Gibbs, Minersville, Pa. but shall only be able to extract briefly for want of time, before going to press.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—I was informed by Elder Mortimer, that you was about starting a paper, called "The Mormon," in N. Y., and very glad we were to hear it, for after drinking deeply of knowledge that fell from your lips in Glamorgan Conference, in Wales, and having been here since September last, without further teachings, we feel thirsty indeed, and we anxiously wait the receipt of your paper, and should be glad to see you, and any of the Elders from Salt Lake. We want counsel and instruction. There are both English and Welsh Saints here. Elder A. Farr, baptized some here about a year ago. We are anxious to go to the Valley, and the idea of stopping here a year without instructions is more than we can bear; and you will please send us five copies of "The Mormon," and as circumstances admit we will send for more.

"All is peace and plenty. Goods plenty, and cheaper than heretofore. No sickness of any description. Flour 4 1-2 cents per lb. Potatoes 75 cents per bushel. Sugar house built, and machinery mostly in place. Gas, oil and powder factories progressing finely. Winter more like spring—the farmers are plowing and sowing still. Cattle fattening finely on the range. Roads first rate, and everybody sober—Maine Liquor Law being in full force, thank the Lord.

A letter from a friend in Salt Lake, upon mercantile affairs of the Territory, we are forced to omit this week for want of room.

Letter from Texas.

PORT SULIVAN, Feb. 19, 1855.

DEAR BR. SNOW—I wrote you a few days since, in haste, and do the same at this time. When I came to this country, and particularly to this place, seven months ago, and commenced preaching the gospel, I met with true friends, as the world calls men, whose interests makes the face bland, or actions blythe, and also came the spirit of opposition, and with it, all the presecution that men dare, or the Lord would permit, against me.

I remember a prophecy; that before I left I would break up the town. I have, by the blessing of God, built up a branch in this place, of fifty members, more or less, rather more I think, when all is told. By petition, &c., the name of this place has been changed to Brackenville, and when the Mormons leave, the place will feel the effects of the above prophecy. I have baptized two others, since last I wrote, and hope to add others ere I leave, as I think there are others yet, who will obey the gospel, in this land.

I purpose starting out all the Saints from here, in my company; those that I have baptized, and several others. The more wealthy and able, are helping the poor, and I hope and pray that I may be enabled to accomplish a completion of the work that the Lord has called me to do; but I assure you, I often feel grieved, and my soul is wrung to the full extent that it will bear, and not always by the world, for of all the trials that I have to bear, the one of ingratitude, evil surmises, and the damning spirit of jealousy is the worst. If it was not that the Lord calls me to preach, and save the people, they might roll on their apple-cart, for there are few worth the trouble (seemingly) they cost; but I will try and hold on—pray for me. I feel determined in every principle of Mormonism. I cannot bear a grunt, or a whine from any.

I have no news from home, since October. I send you a few more subscribers for the Luminary.

When I get my company off, I shall lay before them the "Tithing Law," with all the power, might, and mind I can possess, and bring you every dollar I can raise, but the people have not much money, it is very scarce, and hard to get. Their negro property is on the wane for cash, and land is poor sale.

The weather is clear and fine, like unto our April in Utah, and the grass is begining to spring up finely. The brethren are preparing for a start, with Southern energy, and we will start as early in the month of March as possible. The rivers are very low, and the winter has been unusualy warm and dry. The health of the people is quite good. I have received to day, the Luminary of January 27—ever acceptable to me, and to see its clever editor would do me fully as much good. Give my love to Uncle Milo, and all my old friends, and accept the love and good wishes, and fervent prayers of your devoted friend and brother in the New Covenant,

S. M. BLAIR.

We have not received any information, by the present mail, in relation to the positions, circumstances, or destination of the Saints on board the ship "Siddons." Perhaps another mail may bring it in time, if not, we shall do the best we can after they arrive.

Miscellaneous.

Serious Conflagration.

About 11 o'clock last night, the premises of Messrs. G. I. & S. T. Cummins, harness manufacturers, No. 14 Park st., were discovered to be on fire, and before the alarm was spread through the city, and the engines reached the building, which is one of the largest in the city, was completely enveloped in flames, which were fanned by a strong south westerly wind. The fire soon communicated to the large wooden building next adjoining on the north, owned by Mr. Hiram A. Gray, sawyer and turner, which was almost entirely destroyed.

The Messrs. Cummins, who occupied the upper part of the first building, through its entire extent, had on hand some eight or ten thousand dollars worth of stock, the whole of which was entirely destroyed with the building. Their books and papers were contained in an old-fashioned iron safe, in the upper story of the building, and whether they were preserved in the general wreck, has not yet been ascertained. The probability is, however, that the safe burst in the falling of the floors, and that its contents were destroyed. Messrs. C. had an insurance of $6,000 on their stock of goods, divided equally between the Hope Mutual Co., of New York, and the Western Co., of Pittsfield, Mass.

The building occupied in part by the Messrs. Cummins, was owned by Messrs. Hooker & Osborn, carriage manufacturers, who occupied the lower portion of it, in front, as a warehouse for finished goods. They had, at the time of the fire, some $5,000 or $6,000 worth of carriages on hand in the building, every one of which, with one exception, was burnt. There was but a small insurance, we learn, on their stock; and the building, we understand, was also but partially insured. Messrs. H. & O. had a valuable stock of lumber in the rear part of the building, and lying about the yard, the principal part of which was destroyed. The value of the stock of lumber, and what portion of it, if any, was insured, we could not ascertain.

The tools, and some portion of the machinery, belonging to Mr. Gray, were saved. He had an insurance of some $2,500 on his building and materials, which will not, however, cover his loss.

It is impossible to estimate, at present, the amount of loss, but it is undoubtedly much greater in extent than that caused by any fire for a number of years past.—[New Haven Journal, March 6.

The St. Louis Murder.

Our city was shocked yesterday at an occurence that took place about 1 o'clock, P. M., in which one of our citizens, Deputy-Marshal Brand was killed almost instantly by the discharge of a revolving pistol, in the hands of Robert McO'Blennis. McO'Blennis and Brand, it appears, were standing at the bar of the Planters' House saloon, drinking, and apparently in the best of humor and companionship. Brand was a little intoxicated. It could not be perceived that McO'Blennis was at all affected by his potations. After emptying their glasses, McO'Blennis and a friend stepped away from the bar and seated themselves toward the front part of the saloon, at which Brand approached a friend of his, who had declined drinking with the party just before, and commenced a conversation with him; Brand's friend wished to know who McO'Blennis was, and learning that he dealt in horses, remarked that he should like to buy or trade for a good animal. At this Brand went over to where McO'Blennis was sitting, and proposed an introduction of his friend. Soon afterwards hard words were heard between the parties, McO'Blennis refusing to be introduced, Brand applying hard terms, and McO'Blennis retorting in the same strain. Shortly McO'Blennis and his friend left the saloon, and Brand continued the conversation with his friend and the bar-keeper.

The matter was thought to be entirely settled, but soon McO'Blennis returned, and the recriminations of the parties were begun afresh. Those present interfered, and did all they could to quiet the adversaries, but a quarrel seemed inevitable. Finally, McO'Blennis remarked that if Brand wanted to settle the matter, there was no better time nor place than at once, and on that very spot. Brand replied in almost the same words, when the parties commenced feeling for their pistols, with which both were criminally armed. McO'Blennis was the more expert in drawing his revolver before his antagonist's pistol was discharged of a single barrel. Brand fell upon the floor mortally wounded, four balls having entered his person—one in his right hand, another in his right arm, another in his right shoulder, and still another and the fatal one, in his right breast. Brand, as he fell into the arms of his friend, cried out, "George, I'm dead!" He was carried into a basement room of the Planters' House, where he received every attention, but died in a few hours. Brand leaves a wife and three children to suffer their cruel bereavement.—[St Louis Democrat, March 1.

The Sorgho Plant.

The scarcity of corn in France has drawn attention to a new plant, recently introduced from China, which promises to supersede to a certain extent the use of bestroot in the manufacture of sugar and the distillation of alcohol. The Agricultural Committee of Toulon has recently addressed a report to the Minister of War, with respect to the use of the plant in question. It is called the sorgho, or holcus saccharatus, and was first introduced into France in 1851, by M. de Montigny, the French consul in China, who sent some grains of the seed to the Goverment. Since then the culture of the plant has been commenced with success in Provence, and promises to be of great advantage to Algeria. The sorgho has been called the "sugar-cane of the North of China," and numerous experiments have recently been tried, with a view to ascertaining if it possesses the properties necessary for producing a crystallizeable syrup, so as to become a rival to sugar-cane and beetroot. According to the report of the Toulon Agricultural Association, it would appear to have these properties. The fact has been ascertained by a series of experiments made in the deparment of the Var. It also appears to be richer in the saccharine principle than any known plant excepting the vine. Beetroot contains from 8 to 10 per cent, of sugar; the sorgho produces from 16 to 20 per cent., from which 8 to 10 per cent. of pure alcohol, fit for all industrial and domestic purposes, can be produced. The refuse is excellent food for cattle, who are very fond of it. The plant grows with great rapidity, and does not require irrigation.—[Dispatch.

An Old Veteran.

DANIEL BRADISH, a soldier of the Revolution, is now, and has been for many years, a resident of Norfolk, N. Y. He is a native of Hardwick, Mass.; was a corporal in the militia in 1777—came to Bennington with the company he belonged to the next day after the battle, which was on the 16th of August, 1777. He was at the capture of Burgoyne, at Saratoga, and commanded the guard at the house where General Fraser died. He relates those incidents minutely. I have known Mr. Bradish from my boyhood. In 1804 he was a member of the Assembly of the State of Vermont, and Justice of the Peace in the town where he resided. His age will be ninety-four the last day of April next. His mental faculties remain unimpaired, and his memory good. At the age of ninety, he could read fine print without glasses. Since then his sight has failed. He has voted at seventy-two State elections, and always voted the Whig ticket.—[Cor. St. Lawrence Rep.

Fire and Loss of Life.

The house of John J. Brown, of Conway, Livingston Co., Mich., was burnt last Sunday night, attended by the following melancholy circumstances: William, aged 11, and Emma, aged 3 years, were burnt in the house. Mrs. B. escaped from the house, but returned for her children. Mr. B. rescued her from the flames, but she died 15 hours afterward. Jefferson, aged 7 years, was badly burnt, but may recover. Mr. B. was burnt, but not dangerously. He was formerly a resident of Barre, N. Y. He went to Michigan in 1836. In the summer of 1841 his house and contents were burned, in Michigan, but no one was injured.

A MONSTER IRON SHIP.—The Edinburg Journal gives a detailed account of an immense iron ship, which is now being constructed for the Australian trade. Mr. Scott Russell is the builder, and she is more than half completed. The actual measurements of this leviathan vessel are 675 feet long, 83 feet wide at her greatest breadth of beam, and 60 feet deep in the hold. She will be furnished with paddle-wheels and a screw—the former of a nominal power of 1,000 horses—the latter of 1,600 horses; but practically the combined power may be estimated at 3,000 horses. The four cylinders in which the pistons are to work, are the largest in the world; each of them weighs twenty-eight tons. Lying on the ground, a man, with his hat on, may walk through them without touching the upper side. The engines, when erected and put together, will be upwards of fifty feet in height. The weight of the entire machinery will be about 3,000 tons, and of the hull 10,000 tons—making 13,000 tons. She will carry several thousands tons of coal and merchandise, 1,600 passengers, and her measurement capacity gives about 25,000 tons burden! Notwithstanding, her draught of water will be but small, not exceeding 20 feet when light, and 30 feet when fully loaded. She will carry coal enough for a voyage around the world, and is built upon a model to insure great speed. Her ordinary speed is expected to be 18 or 20 miles an hour. She is expected to make the voyage from England to Australia in 30 days, and return by Cape Horn in 30 days more—thus making the circuit of the globe in two months.

ANNUAL APPORTIONMENT TO ACADEMIES.—At a meeting of the Regents of the University, on the first day of March, 1855, the distribution of $40,000 of the income of the Literature and United States Deposit Funds was made among the several academies entitled to participate therein. The New York Deaf and Dumb Institute receives $490; Grammar School of Columbia College, $230; New York Conference Seminary, $1,815; New York Free Academy, $825 and Rutger's Female Institute, $549.

ASTOR HOUSE.—It is said that Messrs. Coleman & Stetson have taken the lease of the Astor House, New York city, for eleven years from the next first of May, at an advance on the present rate of $3000 per annum, Mr. Astor agreeing to spend $15,000 for improvements and repairs. This will be good news to hundreds of Bostonians, who look upon the Astor as their New York homes.—[Boston Transcript.

PROGRESS OF DISASTER AND CRIME.—The papers of the 14th published in N. Y., are plentifully garnished with dreadful disasters by sea and land, horrid murders, and homicides, public and private perjury, plundering, and robbing, and crime of every description. Does it denote the advance of civilization, and the near approach of the Millenium!

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, a few years ago was the undisturbed habitation of bears, wolves and other wild animals; now the Chronotype says it contains a population of between 2000 and 3000, consisting of Buckeyes, Suckers, Wolverines, Pukes, Badgers, Hoosiers, &c., together with all the adjuncts of civilization.

News of the Week, etc.

THE Sun says that a Mr. Thompson of Kansas Territory, has built a prairie ship, or wagon, to be propelled by wind, in which he proposes, with thirty companions, to make a voyage to the Rocky Mountains, next June. We can immagine them sailing over some of the ravines and sand banks that we passed over. We hope Mr. Thompson will choose some able bodied men, and take plenty of grub along. We shouldn't like to take a passage in that craft.

THE specie brought into our country by foreign emigrants, is one source of our staple currency. The New York Board of Emigration estimates that $20,000,000 in money has been brought into the country in the last year by German emigrants alone. We think so too, and a very important one. There is hundreds of thousands of dollars arriving in this country, through that medium that neither the New York, nor any other board knows any thing about.

THE model of the new steamer, to replace the lost Arctic, and to compete with the Persia, the forthcoming steamer of the Cunarders, has been adopted. She is to be 317 feet in length, some 40 feet longer than the present steamers of the line, and the power and capacity of her engines are to be 50 per cent. greater than those of any other American steamship afloat. She is expected to cross from port to port in nine days.

AN excommunicated member of the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, Mississippi, made application to be reinstated, and all the members consented excepted Dr. Woodward. The excommunicated member became indignant, and while the trial was in progress, he attacked Dr. Woodward and stabbed him to the heart, in front of the pulpit of the church.

The valuation of these vessels is set down at $10,185,000.

THE little steamer Surprise, built to run on the Androscoggin, in Maine, recently reported as in "winter quarters," has rather a novel shelter. THE London Times, Atlas, and other leading English Journals, complain very much of the late administration, and reflect very severely upon the management of the aristocracy. THE republic of New Granada, remains neutral in the present war.

GEN. SAM HOUSTON, has delivered several Lectures, in this city, lately to large audiences. A party was got up for him at the mansion of the Hon. Mr. Cooley, whereto great numbers were invited without regard to party predilections. The Mirror has the following:

"From 9 o'clock until 12, the rooms were thronged with a crowd of distinguished men, of all political complexions, stripes and density. Whigs and Democrats, Hard Shells and Soft Shells, Old Fogydom and Young America, Know Nothings and Know Somethings, with a representation of all the liberal, and some of the illiberal professions—doctors, lawyers, judges, editors, bankers, merchants, &c., &c., &c., were all gathered around the distinguished Senator, (and the sumptuous supper table) in a state of glorious fusion and harmony. There was the burly ex-editor of the very Hard organ mingling meliflously (and drinking too) with the oily Prince of Barnburners."

Mayor Woon, the principal proprietor of the Tribune, and the Editor of the Express, were also present. Great good humor and hilarity prevailed.

Opening of the Panama Railroad.

THE formal opening of the Panama Railroad took place on the 16th ult. It was celebrated by a party that went out from this city, in the steamer George Law.

There were great numbers of eminent men from the United States, and Central America, as well as foreign officials, present on the occasion, after partaking of a sumptious banquet delivering speeches, &c., the party made the transit in four hours and a half, including stoppages.

The first locomotive made the passage from ocean to ocean the 27th of January conveying the Chief Engineer Col. Totten, and the General Superintendant. The passengers to, and from California passed through on the 30th; since which time the road had been opened to regular travel.

The celebration took place on the line of the road near the confluence of the Chagres and Chespo rivers, and the junction of the two valleys of the Chagres and the Rio Grand, about twenty-seven miles from Aspinwall.

Letter from the Crimea.

THE following will be interesting as coming from our brethren in the Crimea:

DEAR BROTHER RICHARDS,—Since last I wrote to you, we have had to pass through many trying and dreadful scenes. The 2nd Division, to which most of this Branch of the Church belongs, has been in three general engagements, and in the last, the brethren suffered severely, one—Priest Patrick Brodle, was killed; he fought as every soldier should—in the love and fear of God, and I feel to say, great will be his reward. Elder McLean was wounded in the arm, which only kept him from his duty four days. Three of the brethren were wounded—two slightly, the other brother—Peter Hay, has lost his right arm, and he will have to return to England. I have written to Elder Gilbert, at Chatham, so that he may be received when he arrives there, as he had no certificate with him, on account of my not being able to see him.

We all feel the solemnity of our present position, and let what may come we feel to say, Thy will be done, O Lord.

No one, but those who have been in similar situations to what we have, can form any idea of the horrors of the field of battle. God grant the time may not be far distant when we may be released from such scenes.

One only have we baptized since I wrote last, but I have the pleasing news to say, that many would be baptized if we had time and opportunity.—[Millenniel Star.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Poetry.

Song of Zion.

BY ELDER LYON.

Let them talk of this Earth as a desert who will,
Yet there's freshness and blossom in parts of it still;
Tho' its green spots are scared and its streets turned to gall,
Yet there's still on its surface a good place for all!
Far away from vain strife,
There's a land in the West,
Where our friends live the best!
'Tis the Valley of Life!

Then why should the tear-drop of care dim the eye,
When the day-star of hope, points the place where to fly;
While the Ensign is raised, and Truth's messengers call,
Let us off to the Valley, there's room in 't for all!
Far away, &c.

Let them look on this life as the last lot of man,
Who've no wish to improve all the good in't they can;
Sure the blessings of Ephraim in fulness recall,
That abundance of wealth promised Joseph, for all!
Far away, &c.

Then let owls seek their holes, who despise the bright day,
While "like doves to our windows" we'll hasten away!
Sure there's nothing in Bab'lon, but misery, and thrall!
Then away to the West, for there's room in't for all.
Far away, &c.

Sonnet, on Suspicion.

BY ELDER LYON.

Suspicion! "Green-eyed Monster," how I dread
The glare, of thy low, sneaking, hell-batch'd glance;
Thy slimy movements, track the path you tread:
Thou car'st not much for character; thy chance
Is how to kill! and that by treach'rous stealth!
Devoid of praise or e'en for proffered wealth.
Half words, and winks, insinuate thy guile
'Gainst others' virtue, and their dear-earn'd fame,
That self may ride, triumphantly the while,
Rough-shod o'er greatness, for a selfish aim!
Hell-born incubus! Damn'd assassin sprite,
Hence! seek thy dwelling in chaotic night,
Give me the faith, increasing still in love,
To think no evil, but all good approve.

New-York in 1854.

THE YEAR OF PUNISHMENT.

Few persons who were in the City of New York, during the holidays of 1853-4, and who enjoyed the capacity of motion, throughout that pleasant season, will fail to remember how almost every circumstances attending it, combined to render the closing week of the old year and the opening one of the new, a gayer Carnival than good Manhattan had ever known before.

The glitter still played upon the California gold, and every region of the Earth seemed to have poured its treasures into the lap of our people. Dives feasted and grew fat, as he had never done before, on the shores of what the poetry and pride of England once styled "the Copper Republic;" and even Lazarus walked abroad in decent garments and with smiles upon his face. In the far West—we mean of this fair Island,—an Empire in itself,—new mansions sprang up as rapidly as the night-grown palace of Aladdin, and, beyond them, sparkling, many-tinted, refulgent in the bright sunshine of our clear, crisp winter-days, arose, a crystal dome, sheltering the rarest and costliest products of human skill and taste. Towards the East and North, our wharves are chafed by the impatient prows of ten thousand vessels from every mart on every sea, and all these yielding the palm for beauty, bulk and speed to the sailing and steam fleets of our own New York merchant princes.

Our country was in its pride, and our people in their exultation. Joy and abundance reigned everywhere, almost, at home and on the street, and even the haunts of chronic poverty were accessible to the warmth of promise and the glow of hope. Vice rioted in splendor of decoration and the luxuriance of variety, while even virtue reaped some rewards, and, from the public rostrum, the judicial and magisterial bench, the school-room and the pulpit were heard the Christian acknowledgments of a grateful people speaking by the lips of their chosen leaders and instructors. In this psean of thanksgiving, the country united with us, for, to the farthest corners of the land, the current of our prosperity had flowed, and returned, and flowed again, bearing, through a thousand channels, its rich tide of wealth and happiness. "From the mountains all round to the sea" there was hearty rejoicing, good cheer and lusty fare, such as we read of in the olden time, when the Christmas revels of merry England inspired the laughing muse of Jonson and Marlowe, and left their racy flavor in "Sweet Will's story of Twelfth Night." On all sides, every heart was glad, the evil and the good alike, and only a few grave thinkers doubted the prolongation of this Republican jubilee, and were sneered at for their pains. Young America was in his glory, then. His gait and his dress were as jaunty as his heart was light. Typical of his country, in the various phases of her singular history, he had coped with difficulty, struggled upwards with energy and courage, built a home and battled for it, and, then, grown prosperous and careless, with all the credulity and rashness of youth and much of its conceit, (for he had done much in the world), he amazed the old fogy nations who had preceeded, but seemed now away behind him in the race, by the recherche of his amusements and his toilet, as he would tell you, with Parisian phrase and flourish, the gout of his cooking and his architecture, his vices and his equipage, and the grandiose of his pretensions and his enterprises.

Under such circumstances, the closing week of 1854 saw him dashing in wild mirth, along Broadway and the Avenues. We all remember his mad laughter, the crack of his whip, the polka-jingle of his sleigh bells. Then, Broadway was gayer than Boulevard or Corso, and the Bowery far more sleek and shiny than "the west side" at this day. Those last "wild oats" were golden, yet there shall be no more such sown, we trust, or rather, these once cast, we pray that no second crop shall follow them to sow again. Let the mirth of those days return, but let it, no longer, be intoxication; comfort and prosperity will, once more, tarry within our borders, nor come like mere guests in travesty, to vanish at cock-crow; national power and greatness will, yet, remain with us on the foundations of national virtue and national self-knowledge, which are broader, deeper and more lasting than national mimickry and national corruption.

But, meanwhile, we have sad words to write, the words that compose some of Young America's lessons, and one of these began that stormy night when, by a strange and typical coincidence, the masts of the Great Republic flung out their signal banners of fire—stars of sparks and stripes of waite smoke and lurid flame—over the terrified city, then crashed down and sank amid the tempest. From that moment, no property seemed safe from the accident of conflagration or shipwreck; from the torch of the incendiary or the cowardice, treachery and negligence of those placed on guard. On land, fire swept from city to city, a devastating scourge; neither legislative halls, nor churches, nor the temples of science and art, nor private dwellings, nor factories, nor workshops were spared; on all sides were mourning and disaster and ruin.

Wherever the fond admiration and pride of our people especially rested, the blow fell surest; our most splendid monuments of skill and enterprise were the first to sink, in shapeless heaps; our most beneficent and useful concentrations of wealth, the first to turn to ashes; and, at length, the very sky itself became like burnished brass scorching the earth to dust, where what of forest and standing grain the still inexorable element passed by, shrank sapless and dead; and through this scene stalked the pestilence, striking down its thousands, from its cool mountain-sides of New Hampshire, to the reeking flats of Louisiana, spreading, on either hand, from Ocean to Ocean. Yet even such devastation was not enough to satisfy the scourging arm. Every inland avenue of travel and commerce was beset with loss and mortal peril. Along our railroads and rivers, hundreds were crushed or burned, or torn limb from limb. In all places, at all times and in every situation of daily existence, the period allotted to rest was but an interval, between our knowledge of the last night's and the morning's news of gloom. The sea daily strewed our coast with the bodies of its victims, and the fragments of our costliest shipping. If the boast of our Government was smitten in the utter loss of the San Francisco, its troops and its armament, the national pride of our people was mortified, as its domestic sympathies were lacerated by the wretched sacrifice of the Arctic, and, in the minor range of infliction, hundreds of fortunes were destroyed, and hundreds upon hundreds of hearts withered, by every month's report of fire, collision, disease or wreck upon the waters. Glance, for an instant, at the record, and its plain, mute testimony will first acquaint you with the true proportions of chastisement. You will need no extravagance of words, no art of mournful description, to fill your mind with the picture; but there have been other scenes transpiring around you, near you, nay, often at your very threshold, which are inscribed upon a public register; some agonies that have not yet found voice for their expression; some wretchedness that your eyes have not yet seen. All these we purpose now to array before you, in the simple garb of truth, as accurately as may be; sometimes giving only general expression to grief and trouble that shrinks from public gaze, but are only the more severe; sometimes particularizing, where our narrative will serve as a type of special miseries in our city, and convey to some gifted mind and some feeling heart that impulse which will give birth to their alleviation.

The pictures we are about to range in sad succession before our intelligent and sympathizing readers, although in some degree the result of a general business system that needs purgation and reform, without reference to any immediate pressure, are more particularly calculated to represent the wide-spread misery that has resulted from the material calamities just reviewed in our introductory remarks,—the commercial and monetary crisis which formed the latter chastisement of 1854, and overshadows the new year, 1855.

Although a revulsion had been predicted by many of our wisest authorities in such matters, the mass of our population were unconscious of the impending trouble, even as late as the beginning of November last. So brilliant had been the prospects of the three or four preceding years, that not only our mercantile classes, but even our artisans had gone bewildered, and when the warnings of this or that sentinel on the house-tops were heard, they either awakened an incredulous smile or were responded to with indignation as sordid attempts to undermine public confidence. Hence, the old expectations were cherished for the coming winter; the old plans of pleasure and profit were formed on a scale even grander than usual, because more advanced in time—one year later,—and one year is an age to Young America.

Thousands upon thousands promised themselves, and those depending upon them, happier and merrier days, between the ensuing December and May, than they had ever yet enjoyed; and pledges were exchanged, engagements made, faith sworn to, solemnly, that would have given the coming year a face too fair for Earth and Time. How many had yielded the last cent of former earnings to friends and parents, and children, in country homes, depending on the renewed bounty of winter? How many, full of thrift and prudence, had applied even their deposit in the savings bank to some cherished project of a little homestead, a wife and a fireside? How many had embarked in laudable enterprise, the hope and ambition of all their youth, now, they thought, offering bright and sure success? How many a young man and young girl, in the country, parted with the tears and blessings, half hopeful, half regretful, of a fond mother, bidding them a brief farewell, and exacting Christmas promises from the gayety and plenty of their anticipations for the city? All this is recorded, in thousands of hearts, plunged in suffering to day. We will not dwell upon the sad conjecture; our province lies more within the broad realm of fact; but, the retrospect has much to do with the deep wretchedness we may record. The memory of broken hopes, and grief engendered, elsewhere, by their overthrow, is a sickness deadlier than mere hunger and cold!

When the rapid increase of the prices put on every necessary of life, the tightening of money resources in banks and on the street, the rumors of lost crops and diminished exportation, public and private rascality in joint stocks and copartnership undertakings, and, ultimately, of failure after failure in the highest circles of finance and trade, began to attract general attention, the public heart stood still for an instant with alarm; but so great, so boundless seemed the resources of our country—so resistless its energies—so rapid the current of its life-blood,—that the first difficulty only nerved men like ours to redoubled efforts. But the obstacle was to be no more than a guerdon of higher triumph, and the swirl of busy life went on. However, the palsy of the year was in our arteries; the disasters, the tumults the follies of the appointed epoch, had reached their culmination; and only too soon the fearful truth became irresistably apparent to every mind. From all the centres of employment, in the various branches of trade and commerce embraced by our community, day after day, came the report of failing work and dilatory payment. It was but a faint cry at first—a cry of surprise and apprehension; but too quickly it swelled to a lament, deep, bitter, universal, and at length the ghastly reality of absolute want settled down in icy chill and midnight gloom upon the lately festive Queen of American cities. It took long reflection, and the sharp tooth of hunger, to convince many thousands that there was reality in all the tidings of misery they heard. "Hard time" was the first public password, and it lulled multitudes into false security, for we all have been familiar with the phrase since our earliest contact with the world, and it conveys ideas of mere temporary duration and subsequent recompense. "Hard times!" is the exclamation of any luckless speculator, or any person of high or low expectations, who has not gained the summit of his wishes; it is the favorite excuse of hard-hearted avarice, the constant pretext of sneaking meanness; and many an indolent spirit has found cover for its degradation in these two empty but effective words.

The leaden goom of November last, protracted, if not deepening, at this hour, was fraught with intenser meaning; its clouds shrouded every heart, with forebodings of utter ruin, and rested in thousands of homes, happy but one short month before, like the presence of mental and moral death.

To every large city like our Metropolis, winter bring suffering; even in American towns, there are classes who live from hand to to mouth, and any deficiency of their usual employments entails privations of greater or less extremity according to the fluctuations of business that affect them; but, the depression of the current season has been entirely exceptional, tightening the gripe of poverty upon thousands who had never felt its bitter inhumanities before.

Pauperism, although not completely a stranger among us, has, hitherto, been confined to the most helpless of our immigrant foreign population; but during the past three months, it has threatened to become a permanent residence, at least, in our largest cities; and, here, Americans have, for almost the first time, found themselves suddenly reduced to abject want. Of these, none have so fearfully suffered, as those who reared and nurtured under free institutions, accustomed to cherish the proudest ideas of self-reliance and independence, have been, in a moment, cast high and dry, upon the dreary sands of poverty, without resources or prospect of rescue but in the confidence and benevolence of their more fortunate countrymen.

The causes that have led to this lamentable state of things require for their discussion more space than we can, for the present, devote to them. We may do so hereafter, and even venture to suggest a remedy—a substantial, American remedy. For the present, we shall treat the facts themselves, commencing with a class of sufferers who struggle to the last, before they will make known their desperate need; and this class we shall now endeavor to illustrate by an example.

The time will apply to the whole winter, but we place it in its most rigorous season, the months of January and February, whose terrible severities will be memorable on the record of our climate. In so doing, we shall but give the later pages of a story that is strictly true.

The money market here, continues, in spite of the Temperance League, very tight. Failures are of daily occurrence. The pea-nut woman on the corner near our office, took a bad sixpence yesterday, and went by the board.—As she owed the lady who keeps the opposite stand over the way, three cents, it is feared that she will also collapse. Several notes laid over (one another) in Wall Street on Saturday.

Pacific Railroad Exploration.

Report of the Secretary of War.

We have not room for the whole of the Report of the Secretary of War, in regard to the Pacific Railroad; we therefore give the following condensed Report of the Herald:

The "Report of the Secretary of War on the several Pacific Railroad Explorations," is before us. It is an interesting and instructive document; but for the present the pressure of the immediate news and business affairs of the day leaves no room in our columns for this report in full. It embraces a careful review of the capabilities and drawbacks of the following routes, from the actual surveys:

First—The extreme northern route, (Major Stevens'), between the 47th and 49th parallels of latitude, starting from St. Paul, in Minnesota Territory, and striking the Pacific at Puget's Sound, or the mouth of the Columbia, in Oregon. This will require a road, allowing for ascent and descent, of 2,207 miles. Estimated cost, $130,871,000. The impediments in this route are the mountains to be tunnelled, the numerous rivers to be bridged, the scarcity of timber, the coldness of the climate, and its proximity to the British possessions.

Second—Route of the forty-first parallel, (Mormon route,) commencing on the navigable waters of the Missouri, or on the Platte river, and striking thence over the Plains to the South Pass, thence to the Great Salt Lake, thence across the Great Basin to the Sierra Nevada chain, thence over that chain, and down to the Sacramento river, and down the same to Benicia just above San Francisco, on the same harbor. Estimated distance from Council Bluffs to Benicia, 2,031 miles; estimated cost, $116,095,000. Obstructions same as in the first route, including wilder deserts and deeper and rougher mountain gorges.

Third—Route of the thirty eighth parallel, more familiary known as Benton's great Central route, pronounced utterly impracticable from its mountain obstructions. Estimated length from Westport to San Francisco, 2,080 miles. The Topographical Engineers gave up all estimates of the cost of a road by this route, in absolute despair. Thus much for old Bullion and his buffalo trails, when reduced to scientific engineering.

Fourth—Route of the thirty-fifth parallel—(Senator Rusk's route)—beginning at Fort Smith, in Arkansas, thence westward to Albuquerque on the Upper Rio Grande, thence across the Rocky Mountains and the Colorado of the West and great desert basin and its mountains, and the lower end of the Sierra Nevada chain to San Pedro, at the southern extremity of California, on the Pacific. This route is about as bad as Benton's, although the engineers think that 3,137 equated miles and $169,210,265 might, perhaps, do the work.

Fifth—Route near the thirty-second parallel, or the extreme southern route, via Texas, New Mexico, El Paso and the Gila to the Pacific. Estimated distance from Fulton in Arkansas, to San Pedro on the Pacific, 1,618 miles—equated length, allowing for ascents and descents, 2,239 miles. Estimated cost, $68,970,000.

The advantages of this route are, that it is practically a third shorter than any of the others between the Mississippi and the Pacific—that it goes by the flank of the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada chain, instead of going over or under them—that the route is over a region of elevated table lands requiring little or no grading—and that the soil is dry and free from snow from one end to the other, except occasional light falls in New Mexico. The drawbacks of this route are, that after leaving Arkansas it is a continuous desert to the Pacific, without timber and without water except at an oasis here and there, at long distances apart. The Secretary of War proposes to supply water by artesian wells, and to transport the necessary timber from the two ends of the road to bridge over the desert:

Extreme Southern Route	5,717

These are the results of careful scientific explorations, by highly accomplished engineers, of the several routes, from the extreme Northern to the extreme Southern route; and it is only necessary to consult one of the latest maps of the United States to see at a glance that the only really available route is that of the extreme South, via El Paso and the Gadsden country, a howling desert though it be. The estimated cost of a railroad (single track, we suppose) by this route, is, in round numbers, $69,000,000, about half the estimate of the best of the other routes, to say nothing further of the saving of a thousand miles or so in the important matter of the distance to be traversed.

Upon the whole, this official report, the resume of authentic and reliable explorations, bears us out fully in all that we have said for the last ten years of the hideous and revolting sterility and desolation of all that vast region lying between the immediate valley of the Mississippi and that great mountain chain, the Sierra Nevada, which overlooks the Pacific. From the British boundary down to the boundary of Mexico, and far beyond, it is an Asiatic region of timberless steppes, volcanic mountains and sandy deserts, very closely resembling the deserts of Arabia. Such is the Great Basin, the only important oasis of which is occupied by the Mormons; such is the country between the Gila and the Pacific, and such is the Gadsden country.

We consider this report conclusive as to the best route for a Pacific Railroad—it is the extreme Southern route. A glance on any respectable map of the United States, at the several routes indicated, will satisfy the reader of this fact. The engineers of the army have only made it more clear and satisfactory from their actual surveys. The only remaining question, then, is the cost and the time required to build a railroad two thousand miles long over an uninhabited desert, the workmen and their provisions, the timber and materials of all kinds, to be supplied from the two extremities.

Benton's great central route is certainly done for, and well may it be pronounced impracticable, requiring as it does a tunnel at an elevation of 9,540 feet, and a hundred miles of his road at an elevation higher than the top of Mount St. Bernard. What will Benton say?

Character of the Late Czar.

BY SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON.

In the recently published second volume of Sir Archibald Alison's "History of Europe," (new series,) we find the following portrait of the late Emperor of Russia:

Nicholas I. is the greatest sovereign that Ruissia has known since Peter the Great; in some respects he is greater than Peter himself. Not less energetic in character and ardent in improvement than his illustrious predecessor, he is more thoroughly rational, and he has brought the nation forward more completely in the path which nature had pointed out for it. Peter was a Russian only in his despotism; his violence, his cruelty, his beneficence, his ardor for improvement, his patriotic ambition, were all borrowed from the states of Western Europe. As these states were greatly further advanced in the career of civilization than his was, his reforms were in a great part premature, his improvements abortive, his refinements superficial. He aimed at doing by imperial what so many ardent men have endeavored to effect by democratic despotism—to ingraft on one nation the institutions of another, and to reap from the infancy of civilization the fruits of its maturity. The attempt failed in his hands, as it has ever done in those of his republican imitators, as it will do in those of their successors, whether on the throne or in the tribune, to the end of the world. His civilization was all external merely; it made a brillant appearance, but it did not extend beneath the surface, and left untouched the strength and vitals of the state. He flattered himself he had civilized Russia, because he ruled by a police which governed it by fear, and an army which retained it in subjection by discipline.

Nicholas, on the other hand, is essentially Russian in all his ideas. He is heart and soul patriotic, not merely in wish, but in spirit and thought. He wishes to improve and elevate his country, and he has done much to effect that noble object; but he desires to do so by developing, not changing the national spirit, by making it become a first Russia, not a second France or England. He has adopted the maxim of Montesquieu, that no nation ever attained to real greatness but by institutions in conformity with its spirit. He is neither led away by the thirst for sudden mechanical improvement, like Peter, nor the praises of philosophers, like Catherine, nor the visions of inexperienced philanthropy, like Alexander. He has not attempted to erect a capital in a pestilential marsh, and done so at the expense of a hundred thousand lives; nor has he dreamt of mystical regeneration with a visionary sybil, and made sovereigns put their hands to a holy alliance from her influence. He neither corresponds with French atheista, nor English democrats; he despises the praises of the first, he braves the hostility of the last. His maxim is to take men as they are, and neither suppose them better nor worse. He is content to let Russia grow up in a Russian garb, animated with a Russian spirit, and moulded by Russian institutions, without the aid of Parisian communism or British liberalism. The improvements he has effected in the government of his dominions have been vast, the triumphs with which his external policy have been attended unbounded; but they have all been achieved, not in imitation of, but in opposition to, the ideas of western Europe. They bespeak, not less than his internal government, the national character of his policy. But if success is the test of worldly wisdom, he has not been wrong in his system, for he has passed the Balkan, heretofore impervious to his predecessors; he has conquered Poland, converted the Euxine into a Russian lake, planted the cross on the bastions of Erivan, and opened through subdued Hungary a path to Constantinople.

Nature has given all the qualities fitted for such an elevated destiny. A lofty stature and princely air give additional influence to a majestic countenance, in which the prevailing character is resolution, yet not unmixed with sweetness. Like Wellington, Cæsar, and many other of the great men recorded in history, his expression has become more intellectual as he advanced in years, and became exercised in the duties of sovereignty, instead of the stern routine of military discipline. Exemplary in all the relations of private life, a faithful husband and an affectionate father, he has exhibited in a brilliant court, and when surrounded by every temptation which life can offer, the simplicity, and affections of patriarchal life. Yet is he not a perfect character. His virtues often border upon vices. His excellencies are akin to defects. Deeply impressed with the responsibility of his situation, his firmness has sometimes become sternness, his sense of justice degenerated into severity. [Sir Archibald explains, in a foot note:—"It is in regard to political offences of a serious dye, however, that this severity chiefly applies."] He knows how to distinguish the innocent from the guilty, and has often evinced a noble and magnanimous spirit in separating the one from the other, and showing oblivion of injury, even kindness to the relatives of those who had conspired against his throne and life; but towards the guilty themselves he has not been equally compassionate. He has not always let the passion of the contest pass away with its termination. He is an Alexander the Great in resolution, but not in magnanimity. He wants the last grace in the heroic character—he does not know how to forgive.

An Irish Idea.

A Judge was once about to pronounce sentence of punishment on an Irishman for theft. "And is it upon the oaths of thim two witnesses yer honor's going to condimn me?" asked Pat. "Certainly," said the Judge; "their testimony was ample to convince the jury of your guilt." "Oh, murther!" exclaimed Pat, "to condimn me on the oaths of two spaleens, who swear they saw me take the goods, when I can bring forth a hundred who will swear they didn't see me take it."

Excellent for the hard times is the name of a St. Louis firm—Grinn & Barr etc!

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1855.

The Pacific Railroad.

On the first page will be found a condensed report of the Secretary of War, in relation to the five different routes that have been surveyed, and their relative advantages.

We agree with Mr. Bennet, that the route of Major Stephens is too far north, at least for the present, almost going to the extreme north of our Territories, and extending its advantages to a very limited number; Puget's Sound, the Pacific starting point, being in latitude 48 degrees, and St. Paul's, Minnesota, the other commencement, latitude 45 degrees. This might do, if practicable, in connection with Canada, the government of which have given a charter for the construction of a road, with the privilege of uniting with one in the United States: with some such union to lighten the expense, this might do for a side route, but not for the great leading trunk road, which, in a commercial as well as a military point of view, should be free from all international embarrassments.

We don't believe the statement in relation to the Mormon route being rougher than the other. Why do emigrants go that way? If buffalo don't know the best track, men do; and hundreds of thousands have passed that route.

Benton's road being discarded, there is no need of referring to it; but before we left Utah, we have heard the same thing definitely stated by many who are familiar with the mountains and their passes.

The fourth route, of the 35th parallel, if not reported so bad, might do; but it is too far south, being about eight degrees south of San Francisco. It commences at Fort Smith, some three or four hundred miles from the mouth of the Arkansas river, on the Mississippi, which is about 500 miles south of St. Louis, on the Mississippi river.

The next route, the fifth, and most Southern, may be cheaper, but is not so feasible. To pass over an immense desert of a thousand miles without wood or water is something more than a joke, again it is too far South for all practical purposes, on a great national highway; to go by way of Texas, New Mexico, El Passo and the Gila, might be convenient for some of the most Southern States; but it certainly would not answer for the Eastern, Western and Northern. This route has the advantages of easy grade and being free from snow, which would certainly make it a pleasant Winter route; but so circuitous, so barren, and so far removed from the legitimate channels of trade, that it cannot succeed as the Pacific route, at any rate we do not fear it as a rival. The more we examine this subject, the stronger is our conviction that the first great Pacific Railroad will be what is called "The Mormon Route," our reasons are briefly as follows:

First as to directness. San Francisco is destined to be the Great Metropolis of our Western coast; its present advancement in population, agriculture, trade, commerce, and above all its magnificent bay, render it unequalled, on the Pacific coast. The parallel of San Francisco is about one degree south of St. Louis, passes through Missouri, the south ends of Illinois and Indiana, north of Kentucky and through the centre of Virginia; by looking at a map any one would be convinced that it would not be to the interest of any of the States, for two hundred miles south of this line, to go round by Texas; and for all the States north, it would be out of the question. Again, the main arteries of communication by Railroad go north of this; add to this the Ohio and its tributaries, the Missouri and Illinois rivers, as well as the lakes, all tend to this route, nothing can be more demonstrative on this point, than a view of the vast number of Railroads covering the Eastern and Western States like a great network, all of which demand an outlet, a great leading arterie to the Pacific, not round by Texas and back to San Francisco, but on the direct legitimate channels of trade; when we calmly investigate the subject, the preponderance of this rout is overwhelming.

If any farther evidence is wanted to convince us of the superiority of the Mormon route, it will be found in some recent discoveries of Messrs. Huntington & Reese, who, since the report of the Government engineers, have discovered a new route between Salt Lake City and Carson Valley, which cuts off one hundred and fifty miles in distance, and is more even than the other route. We are satisfied on this point.

Again, there are railroads already in operation leading to this route.

Pass from Pennsylvania, on a southern branch, to Cincinnati, and there is a railroad in progress, going direct to St. Louis; passing that westward, up the Missouri, on what is called the Pacific Railroad, and you strike off almost directly west. The same will apply to Baltimore and Washington. If a little farther north, you go through Pittsburgh, Columbus, Indianapolis, and Terrahaute, to Alton, and then again up the Pacific from St. Louis.

Taking a more northerly route from New York or Boston to Albany, by Buffalo, Cleveland, Michigan City, Chicago, and so on to Peru, Rock Island, or Burlington; thence, as in contemplation, to Iowa City, Bluff City, and up the Platte river, to join the St. Louis Pacific Railroad. These are the most feasible and natural routes, and combine the most advantages for trade; add to this, the great lake and river trade, and the numerous railroads between these great leading trunks already mentioned; all adapted to sustain a great railroad legitimately, and inviting into its ample embrace the rich treasures of the Pacific. This looks more natural than going round the immense circuit of Texas, New Mexico, the El Passo, and the Gila, which some have been pleased to designate "the nearest way to the Pacific."

In going both these other routes you pass through the Mormon settlements, where there is a long string of towns and villages, and where there is plenty of coal, iron ore, water, timber, provisions, and labor, and where, we opine, quite an amount of stock would be subscribed.

Gentlemen, you will have to follow the footsteps of the Mormons.

Cuba.

In another column will be found a long and interesting account about Cuba, its soil, climate, products, commercial and agricultural position, and remarks on its relative position to this country, and the feasibility of annexation. Now, we believe the whole of this; but would be decidedly opposed to its acquisition on any other principles than would be strictly consonant with the dignity and honor of a mighty nation. The rulers of Cuba may be incompetent, their commerce and agriculture clumsily arranged, and their government despotic; but that is a matter that rests with the natives; if they feel the yoke galling, let them break it; if they want assistance, let them apply for it; if we want Cuba—and its natural location would be advantageous in a commercial or military point of view—let us pay for it openly, frankly, honestly. As it regards its annexation to the United States, and consequent improvement benefitting the world, we have millions of acres, as rich as Cuba, unoccupied, and that some of our modern institutions would exclude the occupancy of.

"THE LUMINARY" states that a company of Saints are going to start from Atchinson, on the Missouri river. From very good information, we believe this to be the best starting point on the river for those going west, who go up the Missouri river. The road from there to Marysville, at the crossing of the Big Blue, is said to be good, dry and rolling, with plenty of wood and water. We would call the attention of Bros. Snow and Andrews to the above place—Marysville—as its neighborhood, we think, would be an eligible place for a settlement. Its distance from the Missouri river would make it healthy; there is plenty of wood and water; the rich bottoms of the Big Blue would yield abundant harvests, whilst its local position, on the main military road, would afford a good market for all that could be raised. It is about 120 miles from Atchinson.

THE following was mislaid last week:

We are much obliged to the Hon. G. A. Smith for his communication. It will be read with interest. Concerning the time allotted for the Utah legislative session—forty days—a rule was passed in the House of Representatives, last session, to extend it to sixty days, but lost in the Senate. The Hon. J. M. Bernhisel informed us that it was the design to equalize the time of legislative sessions in all the Territories, at the coming session of Congress. This is fair.

WE call the attention of our coming emigrants to the letter of Bro. Esdres Howell in another column. Many will find an opening for labor. We would moreover state that we have received from President F. D. Richards, the statistics of passengers shipped on board the ship "Sidona," which left Liverpool on the 27th of Feb. There are 400 Saints on board. About 100 of which go with the Perpetual emigration fund. Among them there are trades of all kinds.

FOR the information of the Brethren in Utah and the Western States we publish, in another column, the names of the passengers in the ship Siddons, that left Liverpool, February 27th, for Philadelphia.

WE are sorry to have to record the death of Lemon Bronson, who was one of our companions du voyage from Salt Lake to the Missouri River last fall: he died at his son's house in Brownsville, Mich., March 16, 1855.

WE learn by the Council Bluffs "Bugle," that the Nebraska Legislature have located the capitol at Omaha City, about four miles west of Bluff City, Iowa.

WE have had some complaints from St. Louis about papers not having been received from the Post Office. We have sent them regularly to all subscribers.

IT is said that the difference between the United States and Spain, in the affair of the "Black Warrior," is arranged.

Mormonism.

WE have seen a long article in the New York Dispatch on the subject of plurality.

We find, in looking around, that many gentlemen are very sore when some of their peccadilloes are pointed out. It is very pleasant to talk about Mormon iniquity, Mormon obscenity, Mormon delusion and abomination; it is quite laughable, quite interesting; but then it is another thing to be told about our own; we feel very sensitive on that point; we have been so much in the habit of kicking the Mormons as we pleased, and saying what we liked without contradiction; that we really feel quite sore when our own affairs are laid open. It is true that we can publish in our journals, magazines, and books, as public censorians, the abominations that exist amongst us; but, then, this was not meant for the eye of you Mormons; that is a matter of our own; if we have our dens of infamy, if our abominations are revolting, if debauchery and licentiousness runs riot, that is our business, it is a matter that concerns ourselves. Be it so, gentlemen; we wish not to interfere with your social matters; we have merely published a very small item of your own statements on this subject, not a tythe. Now we think we have just as much right to our opinions as other gentlemen have to theirs, and if they don't feel comfortable we would remind them of the old adage about "people that live in glass houses," &c. It certainly strikes us as a little singular, that gentlemen, after so many gratuitous statements about us, which we positively deny, and which they have not attempted, nor can they prove, should feel sore about us publishing their own statements. Don't be scared, gentlemen, we have neither interfered with you nor your wives yet, and there is a great desert between you and Utah; besides, our doctrines ordain that both men and women shall be baptized for the remission of their sins in the first instance, and we think many are a long way from that yet.

Concerning a correspondent of the Dispatch, who has squared himself for so desperate a fight, we beg leave to refer him to the following article from the N. Y. Sunday Mercury, as an answer to his first very formidable argument: as it is city coin, perhaps it may pass current:

Matrimony—Disparity of Sex.

"The census tables disclose one fact of melancholy importance, which at present has not sufficiently engaged the attention of our social philosophers. They show that, in the largest cities of the Union, the females out-number the males in the ratio of ten per cent.; so that, if every man were compelled by law to make unto himself a wife, a vast number of the fair sex would still be doomed to the torturing 'hope deferred' of old maidenhood! If one dare apply figures to exhibit the result of this unfortunate disparity, what alarming conclusions would they bring us to! Of every two thousand inhabitants, one hundred must perforce be old maids. In a city containing a million, as New York will speedily do, every adult generation—say every twenty years—will cast upon society sixty thousand victims to female celibacy; so that persons now living may yet see one hundred thousand, or more, unmarriageable ladies in the city of Gotham!—at which period, we should say, it will be an exceeding ticklish place to live in.

"But, alas for the ladies! inequality of number is not the only calamity they have to contend against. There is no legal compulsion for every man to marry. In this free Republic, each man may exercise a sultanic despotism over his own affections, and, in the matter of matrimony, consult only his own inclinations. The natural consequences is a growing propensity to batchelorhood, which will probably entail the forlorn doom of the perpetual sisterhood on another ten per cent. of female citizens. We leave it to statisticans, curious in such themes, to detail the moral and social results inevitably in a condition of female superfluity, contenting ourselves with suggesting, that while such a melancholy state of things exists, no man has a right to remain a bachelor, and ought, at any rate, to be taxed for the luxury.

"But the remedy!—who can propose an efficient one? The same enormous disparity does not exist in the rural districts, though even there the female population is the most numerous, generally; but still, if proper attractions were offered, and institutions to facilitate matrimony were established by enterprising adepts in the science, bucolic bachelors might seek their wives among the thousands of despairing city dames; some relief would then be afforded, but the evil, though lessened, would still remain. We can conceive of no positive cure but the immigration of the unmarried female 'element' to Utah, or the establishment of the 'peculiar institution' of the Mormons among us. He would be a bold man who would propose this last remedy, but our private opinion is that his proposition would not lack support."

We would now ask how much the male population has been thinned off in Europe and the United States, by war, for the last forty years?

Relative to the wholesale murders of Moses, as he is pleased to term them, we don't know that we have anything to do, we think that he is quite as responsible for what Moses did as we are. We shall presume that there are ministers enough in New York City to defend the character of Moses, if they can't when they get through, we will try. He tells us that "the Crusaders killed thousands of people," what in the name of common sense has that to do with us, we were neither in the Crusades nor instigated their moves, the Crusaders were not Mormons. Have we got to atone for the sins of the Catholics? Our hero has certainly met Mormonism squarely. We wonder why he did not think of the murder of Poole and accuse us of that; of Cuba fillibustering; the bombardment of Greytown, and of the Mexican, European and Chinese wars. We admit that there has been a great deal of kingcraft, priestcraft, oppression and tyrany and we can also assure the gentleman that we are opposed to such things as much as he is. But neither these tyrants nor priests were Mormons. In looking over many of his statements we find that instead of meeting Mormonism square, he has missed them and run against Moses, the Crusades, and Mayor Wood. Terrible as the Mormons are, we think there will be no necessity for his getting an iron collar to save his neck, nor a coat of mail for his body, we will insure his life against the Mormons for five cents. But we are great deceivers, &c., well we shan't fall out about that, we suppose that he thinks he is a gentleman and shall let him enjoy his opinion.

We would here state however, that if Mormonism is so great an evil, why not prove it so, and let the Crusaders, Moses and Mayor Wood alone. These frothy words amount to nothing. The more monstrous it is, the more easily is it refuted.

To our Subscribers.

WE recommend our subscribers to pay the postage of their papers in advance—a saving of about 75 per cent. may thereby be made on the postage of one paper for a year. The postage of one paper per year, prepaid, is 26 cents—6 1-2 cents per quarter—the postal quarter commences the first day of April—the postage must be paid on or before the first of said month or 2 cents will be charged for each paper until the following quarter.

Where Will They be Driven To?

IF the following be true in relation to Gen. Harney's course of treatment towards the Sioux, we think it to be as great an outrage upon humanity, as ever was attempted, since the days of Cortes. The safe arrival of several small companies from the plains, show a not very hostile posture of the Indians at present, and without great prudence, in those intrusted with affairs on the plains, we may expect a recurrence of scnes similar to those of last season.

An Expedition against the Sioux Indians.

AN expedition of four regiments, consisting of about four thousand troops will start from Fort Leavenworth during the spring, on an expedition against the Sioux Indians. General W. S. Harney, United States Army, will command the military expedition. We understand he says he will give a month's notice to all Indians beyond Fort Laramie to leave the country, and after that time, all he finds, he will make an example of, by shooting or hanging them. He is determined to exterminate them from the country they now occupy.—[Leavenworth, Herald, March 2.

THE NEW POSTAGE LAW—IMPORTANT TO THE PUBLIC.—The Post-Office Department calls attention of the Postmasters and the public to the new postage law, requiring that all letters between places in the United States shall be prepaid from and after the 1st of April, 1855, by stamps or otherwise, and that from and after the first of January next Postmasters must place postage stamps upon all prepaid letters upon which such stamps may not have been placed by the writers, or which may not be enclosed in stamped envelopes. From and after the 1st of April, 1855, the postage to be charged on each single letter for any distance in the United States not exceeding 3000 milas is 3 cents, and over 3000 miles 10 cents. The law does not change the existing rates or regulations in regard to letters to or from Canada or other foreign countries, nor does it effect the franking privilege. The provisions in regard to the registration of valuable letters will be carried into effect, and special instructions issued to Postmasters on the subject, as soon as the necessary blanks can be prepared and distributed.

A GOLD Chronometer for Capt. Ingraham has been sent from England to await his arrival in Charleston, S. C. It bears this inscription: "Presented to Captain Ingraham, of the United States Navy, by some thousands of the British working classes, for his noble conduct in rescuing Koszta, the Hungarian Refugee, from the Austrian authorities, April, 1854."

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—A Paris paper states that Griseler, a French gentleman, has discovered that by adding a few drops of nitric either to the most rancid oils, all the disagreeable smell is removed, and that by warming the oil, to separate the spirit from it, it becomes as clear and as limpid as though it had never been otherwise than sweet. He says that a few drops of ether in a bottle of oil will prevent it from ever becoming rancid.

ACCIDENTLY SHOT.—A man named Heaney residing in North Fifth street, while engaged laying flagging in South Third near Seventh street, on Monday afternoon, was shot by some unknown person, as is supposed accidentally. The ball passed through his nose. The police were unsuccessful in their efforts to ascertain who discharged the firearm.

A HOUSE in Worcester, Mass., that has long suffered the reputation of being haunted, was surrounded by the police on Monday evening, and nine spirits, with bodies to match, were taken out and marched to the station house. In the morning they were fined $3 each for a breach of the peace.

VERDICT.—"We find that the death of William Poole was caused by a gun shot wound from a pistol in the hands of Lewis Baker, at Stanwix Hall, in Broadway, on the morning of the 25th of February, 1855."

We suppose the pistol was a young gun.

ONE of the buildings of the "fireworks" factory at Grenville, four miles south of Jersey City, was blown up yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, killing two persons and badly burning eight others.

A VESSEL called the "Grapeshot" has been sent after Baker, the murderer of Poole, who is supposed to have escaped to the "Canary Islands" in the "Isabella Jewett."

Cuba.

Its Worth to Spain—Annexation Considered in its varied Phases—Ostend Convention—Antipathies of Race, Language, and Spirit a cause of trouble—Spanish Officials—Political Privileges—Commercial Regulations—Valuation and Extent of Lands, wild and cultivated—National Resources—People—Institutions.

THERE are several points of view in which this island may be regarded, moral, religious, political, geographical and social.

The first is not to be forgotten in any inquiries instituted; any amount of argument as to advantages immediately accruing to any other country, or imagined benefits to the islanders themselves by any change of territorial jurisdiction, by any new laws new customs and new institutions, engrafted on their own, will not go to justify or to palliate the crime of attempting a forcible acquisition, or any acquisition whatever on.

These fillibustero schemes certainly appeal powerfully to the imagination of men, just as fanciful visions of the New World, reach to the mind and hearts of the old Spanards. As to the value of Cuba to Spain, though she never awoke to acknowledge its worth, till she was startled with the cry of the loss of a continent, she now resists successfully all diplomacy and all bribery. "Cuba seems to have been formed," says one of her eulogists, "to become the very button in fortune's cap."

From various considerations that she is destined to become an appendage to the United States few will deny.

It is, however, the laws of nature which have been invoked most effectually as one of the best arguments for annexation, its geographical relation position and commercial advantages being allowed to indicate as well its inevitable destiny, as its brilliant future. The arguments have been negative as well as positive. The chances of a marfime war, in which its possession by a hostile power would be the means of crippling our shipping and exposing the whole southern coast of this country, have been fully considered. Then the importance of its acquisition in a commercial point of view is well nigh overwhelming in its conception, to those possessed of commercial foresight; and we know that the commercial interest in this age predominates over all other considerations. Even the early wars of the European nations will be found to result from the endeavors of land-locked nations to force their way to the open sea, and no military and no naval array have, in the end, been sufficient to prevent this. By virtue of this principle, by this necessity of communication, may the future of Russia, as of all great European nations be read, together with the impotence of the decree continually propounded to nations advancing by force of geographical position: thus far shalt they go but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed. The report of the ministers composing the Ostend Conference, which has just made its appearance, is remarkable for mainly confining itself in its recommendation of the acquisition of the island, to commercial considererations, and these not merely as respect the United States, but as the interest of the great European nations are supposed to be involved in the transfer. The self-interest of England France and Spain are appealed to, in the direct emolument that would accure to the latter power, and the encouragement of the shipping of the other States from the interior development of Cuba. Doubtless, its whole coasts would become a scene of unlimited industrial activity, and the covering its surface with the net work of railways, would secure such a rapid intercommunication as would afford in the rapidity and extent of its results, as compared to the means on hand, no parallel in the history of the world. In the last communication, the Government of Cuba was glanced at, and certainly a melancholy reflection suggseted that as a result of misrule and the disposition to inactivity this has engendered, this island should not have already secured to itself and to its own people, what perhaps fate has reserved to northern Saxon energy; that it should not have been made stronger by commercial greatness than granite forts and mounted regiments can render it. The report on hand proceeds on the assumption that the people of Cuba are ready and anxious for the proposed tranafer.

This we regard as unqualifiedly false. Hatred to republicanism, attachment to monarchy, is implanted in every Spaniard and Creole's heart; he will die for his chosen sovereign; let the throne itself but be in danger and he will gladly shed his heart's blood in defence of its existence though this involve all the oppressions under which he groans. There is but one mode of reconciling the contradictory statements as to the disposition of the islanders towards their local government and foreign rule, it is that they desire not so much a change of rulers as a more liberal policy. They are knit too, with the social institution of slavery, which must be more or less affected by annexation. For though the South may look to it, in the event of annexation as a counterpoise the free territory being acquired, politically, by the North, yet now when all faith in compromise measures has been lost, we can only expect to see it in that event the battling ground of contending political parties, the bone of contention to all and of advantage to none.

The Hon. Edward Everett, well nigh anticipated the commercial views expressed by the Ostend convention, in his able and well known letter to the British minister, rejecting the proposition for the Tripartite convention, when he says: "There is no doubt "were it peacefully conferred to the United States, a prosperous commerce between Cuba and Spain resulting from ancient associations and common language and taste, would be far more productive than the best contrived system of colonial taxation. Such, notoriously has been the result to Great Britain of the establishment of the independence of the United States." It has been remarked by Ballou, that "it is difficult for a Republic and a despotism, situated respectively like the United States and Cuba to live on neighborly terms." But as yet all the quarreling seems to be on this side; and we know of nothing in the Cuban character that should so interfere with neighborly feeling as to prevent a prosperous commerce.

In this country we believe there is an inherent antipathy to difference of race, spirit and language, exceeding in degree that which can be supposed to apply to any difference in social and political institutions. There exists in this country a certain tyrannous demand that all other people shall become assimilated to itself; whereas, out of political institutions, it cannot be said as yet to have any one distinct nationality. Like Russia, it is an assemblage of different people, gradually modifying and shaping each other into more uniform and more determinate elements; rising to further greatness, achieving new wonders, and constantly realizing more strength.

Then as to our actual dealings with Cuba. The Spanish officials of Cuba are, on the ground of mere punctilios of rank, mere precedents as to forms of action, from their assumption of superiority, and their inherent contempt for all engaged in business, and more especially for gentlemen hailing from United States ports, a constant source of annoyance to our merchants and captains—magnanimity and forbearance of spirit exercising no perceptible effect on their illegal extortions and delays. Containing a people with no representation, no utterance, no honor, no office, no emolument, no intercourse with other nations, how can Cuba, as it now is, discover its full capacity for commerce? Even its two hundred and fifty miles of seaboard are put to indifferent advantage, and though it has a free mercantile school, there is afforded no opportunity of seeing carried into practice the enlarged views which a knowledge of the true science of commerce suggests. The imports and exports of Cuba took thirteen years to double, and the imports from as well as exports to the United States, in Spanish vessels, constituting a mere moiety, foreign vessels have necessarily done all the business. The total number of arrivals from Cuba at Spanish ports have shown the same disparity. And yet, in the period to which we allude, Spanish vessels have been especially encouraged; for whilst the rate of duty charged on the importation of foreign produce and manufactures in foreign bottoms has been 24 and 30 1-4 on the tariff valuation of each article, the same articles in Spanish bottoms, from a foreign port, have paid but 17 1-2 per cent. Besides this, there has been an export duty of 6 1-4 per cent. on the cargo under a foreign flag for any port, so that with a more liberal or more illiberal policy, other nations will still do most profitably the carrying business.

We need not allude in extenso to the other commercial regulations made so familiar by late troubles to the public mind; how every master of a vessel, on entering port, is obliged to present two manifests of his cargo and stores; how every consignee is obliged to deliver a detailed invoice of his cargo consigned, within forty-eight hours after the vessel has entered port, heavy penalties being assigned for mere omission or inaccuracy; how the charges for tonnage duty, anchorage, free pass at the fort, health officer's fees, interpreter's fees, inspector's fees for sealing hatchway, the inspecting of the vessel's register, and costs of clearance, amount, with wharf charges, to such a sum as would soon buy an ordinary vessel up, did it long delay its departure. Now, were these charges in their multiplicity swept away, and a moderate sum, in simplified form, sufficient to cover actual expenses, imposed, how great would be the difference in the eouragement given to commerce!

In the warehouses on the north and south sides of the island we find piled up, ready for exportation, sugar in hogsheads, coffee in arrobas, (25 lbs. each,) molasses in hogsheads, rum in pipes, tobacco in bales, and cigars in boxes of 1,000 each; the ports on the north side are Havana, Matanzas, Cardenas, Sagua-la, Grande, Gibaro, Remedios, Neuvitas, and Baracoa; on the south side, Manzanilla, Trinidad, St. Jago de Cuba, Cienfuegos, and Santa Cruz. Some of these ports, like Santa Cruz, are now unimportant, but they are all natural outlets—St. Jago de Cuba is especially noble—and with the full loosing of industrial activity, would become so many points of light, so many centres from which the radii of intelligence and profitable speculation might diverge. Fifty million of dollars in imports, and the same in exports, is but a trifle to the commerce of Cuba if thrown open to the industrial activity of the world, sheltered by a policy that concerned only its own interests. So far back as 1834, imports and exports exceeded thirty-four million dollars.

Leaving the coast, let us strike into the interior, passing over its 43,380 geographical miles, glancing at the smaller islands, its dependencies, and mingling with its million and a half of population, we find in all 14,234,832 acres, of which 13,000,000 are uncultivated—that is, devoted to grazing, settlements, towns, occupied by mountains and forests, but for the most part what in this country is expressively denominated "wild." The cultivated acres may be apportioned amidst sugar cane plantations, coffee trees, the culture of tobacco, and other articles named as exports, and garden and fruit culture. The value of the lands, wild and cultivated, reaches, by the census, nerely $250,000,000; and the value of capital invested in buildings and utensils on them, $800,000,000. The different products of cultivation are not estimated any higher, so that we have here, on the whole, for Cuba, a dollar per acre per annum. Cotton is cultivated to but slight extent. Rice, Indian corn, the vine, wood and the products of wood, all flourish; the diversity of surface giving rise to all needed variations in temperature, gives opportunity to the cultivation of almost any vegetable product that might be desired. Cuba is rich with tropical fruits—fruits that seem to yield their fragrance to its warm, balmy and invigorating air. The "royal palm" is its king of trees, but it has also the cocoa-nut tree; it has a vast supply of mahogany and other precious woods, and interspersed with its lime hedges is to be found the fragrant aloe, of large and luxuriant growth. The climate, with its sense of ease, has been described by Ballou as making "the heart-blood leap more swiftly to the promptings of the imagination"—an effect that militates against the industry that another race would introduce, less poetical and sentimental than the Cubans. We have found works written on Cuba that make no mention of its mines of gold, silver and copper, its marble quarries, its streams in whose beds are found precious stones; the immediate self-interest of the islanders veils its worth; it waits to become the bosom of Atlantic commerce, when Cuba will become of more worth to the material advancement of the world, than if permeating all its mountains, covered all its surface, and reached to its foundations in the everlasting sea.

Crown Serfs and Slaves.—An exhibit of the whole system.—Russian Clergy.—Classes of the People, with their several distinctive characteristics.—The region between the Danube and the Caspian, and its inhabitants.—Russian Route to India.—History of the Crimea.—Sevastopol.—Simpheropol.—Balacklava and its people.—The Future of Russia.

THE Crimea being now a universal object of attention, a general sketch of the country of which it forms the most southern portion, a notice of its people, and of those points of interest which the present war has exposed to observation, may not be unacceptable. The commerce of the Black Sea may form the subject of a separate communication. And first, as to the system of serfdom concerning which so much inquiry is made, and so little known.

The slaves are divided into classes; those belonging respectively to the crown and to private individuals. The former are under the control of the ministry of the domains of the crown. By law they are required to pay to the crown a decapitation tax of fifteen rubles yearly for every male, but this tax is almost always raised to thirty or thirty-five rubles by the rapacity of the government servants. Besides these money contributions, they are subjected to giving certain days of labor each year to the repair of the roads and public works, and they may also be required to furnish means of conveyance and food for troops. For these latter services it is true they receive a nominal compensation in the shape of orders payable by treasury. Lastly, they are liable to military recruitment, which of late years has annually taken off six out of every thousand male inhabitants in the governments of New Russia.

In exchange for all these burdens, the peasant receives from the crown the land necessary for his subsistence, the quantity of which varies from ten or eleven acres, to one or two, according to the density of the population. Whatever may have been said on the subject, the condition of the crown serf is neither miserable nor destitute, but favorable to physical and animal life, the only life as yet understood by the bulk of the Russian people. Except in years of great dearth, such as often desolate the country, the peasant has his means of existence secured; his dwelling, his cattle, and his little field of buckwheat; and as far as freedom from moral and physical sufferings constitute happiness, he may be considered much better off than the peasants of other European States. With plenty of food, his dwelling well warmed in winter, his mind disencumbered of all those anxieties for the future that harrass our laboring poor, and endowed by nature with a vigorous constitution, he possesses all the elements of that negative happiness which is founded on ignorance and the want of an awakened sense of man's dignity. The slave besides, is so frugal, he needs so little to live, his wants and desires are so circumscribed, that poverty, as it exists in our civilized lands, is one of the rarest exceptions in Russia.

The crown serfs enjoy almost complete liberty. Simply attached to the soil, they are masters of their own time, and may even obtain permission to seek employment in the town, or on the estates of private landholders. Hence, were it not for the difficulties connected with the emancipation of private serfs, the crown peasants might be declared independent to-morrow, without any sort of danger to the empire. Their physical condition is in perfect harmony with the present advancing state of civilization, and in this respect the system established by the crown does not deserve the outcry raised against it. The penury and distress in which the imperial serfs are plunged in some districts are ascribable solely to the cupidity and corruption of the public functionaries, as to the want of outlets for the produce of the soil, and not to the laws regulating serfdom.

The condition of the slaves on seignorial lands is both morally and physically less satisfactory than that of the crown serfs. They are subject to arbitrary caprice and to countless vexations, particularly when they belong to small proprietors, or are immediately dependent on stewards. The private slaves who number about 30,000,000, pay a poll tax of eight rubles for every male to the crown, and many give half their time to their masters. They usually work three days in the week for the latter, and the other three for themselves. Whatever be the position of the serf, attained to by his talents and skill, he never shakes off his absolute dependence on his master, one word from whom, as Hommaire De Hell has remarked, may compel him to abandon all his business and his prospects, and return to his village. The same authority states that several of the wealthiest merchants of Moscow had been named to him, who were slaves by birth, and who had in vain offered hundreds of thousands of rubles for their freedom. It flatters the pride of the great patrician families to have men of merit among their serfs, and many of them send young slaves into the town, and supply them with all the means necessary for pursuing a creditable and lucrative calling.

There are in the Russian slave two natures essentially distinct; the one, destitute of energy, vitality, is the result of the servitude under which the nation has bent for ages; the other is a bequest of barbarism starting into action at the breath of liberty, is prompting to the most alarming excesses. A ukase of 1842 gave the government a direct influence conducive to a gradual emancipation of the population. Considerations connected with landed property will probably long defeat all efforts in this direction.

The clergy number 500,000, both males and females; they are notable for their immorality, and may be regarded as cyphers. Knowing nothing of politics and administration, having nothing to do with public instruction, and ignorant themselves, they have little influence and still less consideration, and are occupied almost solely with corporeal things. They are Orthodox, Greek, United Greek, Armenian, Lutheran, Reformed, Mohammedan, Mollars, Budhists, Lamas. From the priests we may go to the people; these are heriditary nobles, personal nobles, including the children of officers, subaltern functionaries, retired soldiers and their families, Cossacks—who are bound to military service, merchants of three grades, bourgeois and artisans, brokers, functionaries in service in the municipalities, inhabitants of town, and inhabitants of rural districts, and the various nomade races. The total amount of these, with soldiers and sailors, reaches twenty-five millions.

Glancing at the immense region comprised between the Danube and Caspian, we find to the East 40,000 tents of the Khirges, Turcomans and Kalmucks, robbed of all their ancient rights, or threatened with the loss of all yet left them of their independence. In the centre, 800,000 Cossacks bound to the most onerous military service, tormented by the reflection of their suppressed constitution, and detesting a government whose efforts tend to extinguish every trace of their nationality. In the South and West, the Tartars of the Crimea and the Sea of Azof, and the Bessarabeans, who are far from being favorable to Russia, and beyond the Caucasians restless populations, ill-broken as yet to the Russian yoke, and possessions with which there exists no overland communication, except over a dangerous route not to be travelled without armed escorts which mountaineers may any moment intercept. Here assuredly are causes enough of disorganization and ruin, that want only the occasion and a man of genius to set them in action. What wonder is it that with such contingencies to apprehend, the empire recoils from no sacrifice. As to the Crimea, Russia, coveting this fine country, took advantage of its continual revolutions, and sent a large army thither in 1771 for the purpose of putting a young prince in its own interest on the throne. In return for this, the prince ceded the towns of Kertch and other cities on the Dnieper. Then came the celebrated treaty of 1772, which conceded to her the free navigation of all the seas dependent on the Turkish dominions. In 1783, after some resistance, her absolute sway was established in the peninsula, and the Tartars submitted to the yoke against which they had so nobly but vainly struggled.

Sevastopol is too well known and has been too frequently described, to need comment here. Simpheropal is the capital of the government of the Crimea. It has a population of 8,000 souls, of whom 1,700 are Russians, 5,000 Tartars, 400 strangers, and 900 gipsies. Under the Tartars Simpheropol was the second town of the Crimea, and the residence of the Kalga Sultan, whose functions nearly equalled that of a Vice Khan; his jurisdiction extends over all the regions north of the Crimean mountains. Simpheropol was then adorned with palaces, mosques, and fine gardens, few traces of which now remain. The tortuous streets, high walls, and rose thickets of the old city have given place to the cold monotony of the Russian towns.

And now for Bagtcheserai, that ancient city, which previously to the Muscovite conquest might still vie in power and opulence with the grent cities of the East. Even now, though so much decayed, it is the most interesting town on the Crimea. It is enclosed in mountains, entered by narrow ravines and forming huge natural bastions. Every spot has interest. Aqueducts, bridges, and old ruined towers strike upon the eye in every direction, telling of ancient civilization. It has completely retained its national character in consequence of the ukase of Catharine II., empowering the Tartars to retain exclusive possession of their own capital. One might fancy himself in the very heart of the East, when walking through the narrow streets of the town, mosques, shops and cemeteries, so much resembling the old quarters of Constantinople. But it is especially in the courts, gardens and nooks of the harem of the old palace, that the traveller may well believe himself transported to some delicious abode of Aleppo or Bagdad.

Inkermann, which is reached by a road running parallel with a mountain chain, has remains of a once celebrated town, with subterranean edifices on its highest rocks, some of these presenting in the interior all the characteristics of the Byzantine churches. It was the seat of a little Greek principality dependent on the lower empire; it was taken by the Turks in 1475, and soon afterwards destroyed. Balacklava, the Cembalo of the Genoese, was till the British turned the Greeks out, the humble capital of a little Greek colony founded in the reign of Catharine II., and numbered several villages with 600 families. During her wars with the Porte, the Emperor thought of appealing to the national sentiment of the Greeks and their hatred of the Turks; the result answered her expectations, and Russia soon had a naval force that displayed the most signal bravery in all its encounters with the enemy. When the campaign against Turkey was ended, the Greek auxiliaries took part in the military operations of the Crimea, and after the conquest of the Peninsula they were employed in suppressing the revolt of the Tartars and striking terror into them by the sanguinary cruelty of their expeditions. After so many centuries of commercial connection with neighboring races, these Greeks yet retain the cheerful customs of their ancestors.

Correspondence.

From Our Cincinnati Correspondent.

CINCINNATI, March 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR—That a great and important crisis is approaching is evident to the mind of every reflecting man; not only externally, in the belligerent attitude of Europe, China, and other smaller powers, but also in our internal disunion and lack of confidence that seems to insinuate itself into all classes, upheaving, overthrowing and destroying all the ancient landmarks, and thirsting to deluge all nations in blood; and yet it would seem that the nations look on unconcerned, and treat it as a common affair: but what causes the people to be so dim-sighted as not to see the overwhelming dissolution that is approaching? In answer to this grave question, we say it is difficult to tell whether the spiritual dogmas or the temporal organizations are most in the way, perverting the sight and judgment. In relation to things as they really exist, spiritual dogmas, opinions and creeds are causing the nations to play a ludicrous and pitiful game at blindfold. The temporal governments and social organizations which are the product of these dogmas and opinions, are so many lofty superstructures; built upon sandy foundations, which are inevitably doomed to fall. The antiquity of these temporal institutions makes it painful to their friends to see them fall with such a smash; but fall they must, in order to make way for the reign of God among the nations.

The work of subjugating the earth is commenced, and will be carried on with a strong arm till opinions, precepts and human belief have ceased to exhaust their energies in organizing governments and social institutions upon the apostate and rebellious platform of mere human wisdom. The Angels of God are now being gratified in their long uttered desire to thrust their sickles into the harvest fields, and cut down the wicked nations of the earth, and bring in everlasting righteousness. The tottering fabrics of trembling kingdoms and governments are beginning to feel the battering rams of each other's wrath. Nation is setting in array against nation, and one and even many kingdoms are arrayed against each other; and those governments which are not already actually engaged in war are enfeebled by divisions and feuds, and quaking by fear, or flushed with pride, so as to be ready to leap into the yawning gulf of desolation. The latter is true of the government of the United States. In this government the spirit of division is becoming deep, systematic and determined.

The States lean upon their individual sovereignty in proud defiance of the acts of Congress, whenever these acts displease them. The war that now threatens to desolate Europe and make it one great sanguinary battle-field, must reach the United States before long, in spite of any principles of non-intervention that may be called up. The combustibles for a hotter fire, and the materials for a more destructive intestine and alien war, exist in this nation than in any other in the known world.

Every sort of human government has been tried in vain, from the most rigid despotism to the most liberal monarchy. And in this Western World the people have been their own rulers—free and tolerant to their utmost desire. The government they have instituted is like a garment already rent nearly into many parts. The people have proved themselves as unfit to govern as the most rigid despots. Now the result of all these things is, that God has proposed one of two alternatives—either that the nations shall submit humbly to his lawful dominion through the revelation of his prophets, or be made as stubble for the flame in the day of his wrath. This signal day for emptying the earth of its abominations all holy prophets have seen in vision, and foretold it with unerring certainty, and it must surely come. The Angels also have longed for the day of reaping down the earth, that it might no longer groan under the wickedness of its inhabitants, but have a day of rest and a day of righteousness. The universal abominations that prevail are and will be "causing the earth to become desolate and empty, when few men shall be left." The wickedness of the nations will be proved to a demonstration in the universal contention and awful slaughter they will be engaged in.

The virulence and excess of their hatred will not be satiated short of pulling down thrones and annihilating whole governments. And the work of pulling down thrones is an easy matter, when the fabric of every government is in a very tottering and dilapidated state. Such is the condition of all governments now in Christendom. They are just ready to fall if left to themselves; and how certain then is their fall when one nation is marshaled in war against another! Do the representatives and rulers of the United States duly consider that the nations of Europe are fighting for mastery or balance of power? Are not the United States fast approximating to the same bloody struggle? The lines of proximity and ties of brotherhood ought to secure peace to the family of Europe; but they fail to do it. The proximity and ties of these confederated States ought to secure peace and unity to this nation; but the history of the past twenty years proves that we are approaching the verge of a frightful cataract. We are in the circle where our progress to the centre of the Maelstrom is rapidly accelerated. The illusion consists in this: each nation or party only beholds the antagonist in the dangerous eddy, while the capacious mouth of the relentless whirlpool has all nations and parties about equally in its grasp.

The spirit of nullifying the acts of Congress commenced in South Carolina under President Jackson's administration. From that time it has continued to gain strength, with this modification—that it now assumes a constitutional banner, and avows to act legally. Defiance to the acts of Congress is now uttered boldly as a legal and constitutional right on either side of the Northern and Southern line. The spirit of "E Pluribus Unum" has thus abandoned its national citadel, and gone its several ways to the respective State sovereignties.

Religious denominations have long since refused any national cement to bind the North and South together; and education has followed its example, and commerce and trades are growling and snarling, and threatening what they will do, if certain evils are not remedied. Respectfully yours,

ORSON SPENCER.

MORMONISM REVISED.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

BOSTON, March 19th, 1855.

DEAR SIR—The Boston Herald of Thursday, 15th inst., under the above heading has the following: "On Tuesday morning last, Henrietta Podafew, a very little woman, was brought up before Judge Spooner, in Cincinnati, charged with having attempted to force herself into a 'permanent residence,' at the houses of four different married gentlemen. It appears that she has been the extra wife of each of the four gentlemen for some time, and has two children belonging to the quartette, and thinking it her right, she sought to establish her home in the house of either one of them; the four wives made a common cause of it, and united in a complaint against Henrietta, who was sent to the county residence, provided by law for offenders."

The writer must be wofully ignorant of Mormonism or being himself a Monogamist, of the kind specified in his article, shrinks from the responsibility of his darling institution, by making Mormonism his scape-goat. I would say to him don't take the advantage Mr. Herald of Mormon liberality, and ride to death the free "Pegasus." To show the writer his mistake, we will compare his notes with Mormonism, under the legal restriction of Monogamy.

One woman clandestinely becomes the dishonored wife of four dishonorable men. Mormonism unclandestinely makes four women the honored wives of one honorable man.

Monogamy keeps one wife in the house, and turns the rest out of doors to suffer unsheltered and unprotected: Mormonism provides for them all, and treats them kindly, and impartially.

Monogamy floods society with illegitimate children having no ostensible father, unprotected, uneducated, and unprovided for: Mormonism requires that every man shall provide for his own offspring, in every thing that shall qualify them to become honorable men and women in society.

Monogamy puts a Henrietta in the county jail, for claiming the support of her children, at the hands of their father, and allows the father freedom to continue his clandestine operations: Mormonism allows the right to a mother to claim the support of her children, at the hands of their father.

Monogamy owing to its narrow contracted matrimonial relations, on the one hand, throws the mantle of charity over Adultery, with great magnanimity, on the other. Mormonism, liberal in its matrimonial relation holds the adulterer, or adulteress to be worthy of death, (according to the laws of God,) but owing to the prejudices of the age, they are cut off from Mormonism, and permitted to depart immediately to those countries where the results of Monogamic laws make their cause more tolerable. If this brief contrast, meets the eye of the writer in the Herald, he will no doubt see his mistake, and if honest, will head his next article of like character, Monogamy Illustrated, instead of Mormonism Revised. A. R.

CARBONDALE, March 19, 1855.

DEAR BRO. TAYLOR—Your valuable paper, THE MORMON, comes regularly to hand. It gives me great pleasure to peruse its contents. We have been, as a people, misrepresented by the press long enough. It is full time now that we should be privileged to represent ourselves through the same medium. That part of our duty I believe is now well attended to. By the publishing of our papers throughout the Union, I hope the truth-seeking portion of the community will investigate our case, hear both sides of the question, then judge for themselves like men. No jury can give a just verdict on a case without doing so. Truth fears no investigations. If our doctrines are false and unscriptural, we should like to know it—at least I should. We are ready to receive and embrace all truth; so then let the strong-minded men of the age come forward and enlighten the deluded Mormons, as they call us, if they can. We are open to conviction on all subjects. The columns of our papers are free for discussion. If they want to convert us from the errors of our ways, why not avail themselves of the chance we give them to do so? It is most certainly their duty. If polygamy is wrong, if its practice has a tendency to demoralize society, let us know it. Polygamy exists in Utah, monogamy in New York; compare the condition of society in both places. We find fair Utah almost entirely exempt from crimes and prostitution, whereas in New York such things seem quite fashionable—quite the order of the day—according to all accounts. Facts are stubborn things. A word to the wise is sufficient.

I believe a number of our immigrating brethren would succeed in getting employment in this place and neighborhood, as there are several new shafts in course of being formed. Miners would be the best to come here, as mining anthracite coal is the principal business carried on here. The Delaware and Hudson Canal Company carry on a very extensive coal business in this place. They have their coal sent to New York by railroad and canal. A miner can earn on an average from ten to twelve shillings per day, this country money; payment sure; work from six to eight hours per day. This place depends principally on the mining operations of said company. It contains a population of from eight to ten thousand inhabitants; is pleasantly situated in a valley; it has nine churches, a city hall and jail, and a host of grog holes, of course. Scranton and Pittston, a few miles below here, are becoming places of importance. There is an extensive iron works in the former, and coal in the latter place. The brethren may be sure of finding employment in either of these places. I firmly believe there are many truth-seekers in this region. If I could only get a few of the Saints here, we could then sow the good seed among the people. I am all alone, and would like to have some kindred spirits to associate with. I am like a fish out of water, when not among the Mormons. If you think it best to send some of the immigration here, I shall do all that lays in my power to get work for them. If any of the Elders should come this way, I hope they will give me a call.

It makes my heart rejoice when I read of the progress of God's mighty work among the nations of the earth. I know it is His work, and that it will fill the whole earth. There is no power on earth, nor in hell, that can prevent it. It contains a power that will roll it onward and onward till it accomplishes its glorious mission. It is true its progress may be retarded for a short time, but what of that? "Truth crushed to earth will rise again," in spite of all opposition. I had the privilege of becoming a Mormon in Wales; am glad that many of my fellow-countrymen are embracing the truth; not only them, but some from among all nations.

Yours in the New and E. Covenant,

ESDRAS HOWELL.

From Utah.

UTAH, MY HOME, Dec. 10, 1854.

BRO. JOHN TAYLOR, Dear Sir: Agreeable to promise, I drop a line for you. Nothing of great and vital interest particularly strikes my mind, yet, at the same time, I wish to write on some few topics of interest to you, and me, as Mormons. The outsiders think we are fools and barbarians, but sir, no people in these United States would make the personal sacrifices that we have been called upon to do this winter. The number of soldiers and the strong probability of disturbance through liquor, induced the Mayor to call in the licenses of all venders which was cheerfully complied with, without a thought at refunding; hence we present something that your present home nor any other city boast of; no grog shops in all Utah. No Maine Law either, but the law of a determination that the poor soldier shall not say the liquor shops of Utah, caused him punishment, and further, that profanity superinduced by liquor might not salute our ears. Our theatre is open and under full sail, giving all a pleasant chance to spend a winter evening. But, sir, I purpose to confine myself to commercial matters. The great hue and cry was that Utah would be overstocked with goods; it is the very reverse. The market at this time is now as bare as last winter. Coffee none. Sugar almost gone. Domestic do. and calicoes scarce. The stock of J. M. Horner, costing $125,000 is now broken up and will not last till March, other merchants, do. They purchased Middleton & Riley's stock, at 40 per cent above cost, and have sold out to Messrs. Perry, at 60 per cent.

Produce fetches pretty good figures. Oats and Corn, 1.75 per bushel, Wheat, 1.50, Potatoes, 75 cts, Butter, 45 cts, Hay, $14, a ton, &c. I believe some merchants will quit going into the cattle operation, as they are increasing in California. Merchandizing will be better next year than this, and lucky the individual who can bring out a large or small stock of staple merchandise, for many will be here to buy all that comes. With about 10 new stores for good sized stocks.

Now sir, as time will not permit me to write a long letter, you must excuse this time. Please send to your Agent here, one copy of "The Mormon," and the pay I will give your family if you wish.

Wishing every imaginable good thing and the prosperity your soul desires, may attend your labors. I remain, &c., H.

Very Late from Utah Territory.

INDEPENDENCE, March 14, 1855.

THE party which went out with the Salt Lake mail in January returned yesterday. They report that Col. Steptoe, who was appointed Governor of Utah, has neither accepted nor declined that station yet. Brigam Young was stil Governor de facto.

They left Salt Lake City on the 8th ult. Snow was very deep on the mountains and difficult traveling. They met the party which went out in February at Scott's Bluff getting on prosperously. They met with no disturbance from the Indians. They report that several tribes are disaffected and threatened hostilities, but as yet no depredations have been committed. They passed through an encampment of about one hundred and fifty lodges of Sioux without molestation.

The mail party was conducted by Mr. Jesse Jones. Col. Bridges came with the mail from Fort Laramie, and also Mr. and Mrs. Barada, of St. Joseph.—[St. Louis Republican.

Powder Mill Explosion at Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, Del., March 9, 1855.

Three buildings belonging to Garelsche's powder mills were blown up to day at half past 2 o'clock, killing two men and fatally injuring two others. The explosion was terrific, and the shock was felt at the distance of several miles.

Another dispatch says one man—John Kane—was killed, and three wounded; two not expected to recover.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE VIENNA CONFERENCE.

BERLIN, March 1, 1855.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL arrived here yesterday forenoon. He waited upon Baron de Manteuffel in the afternoon. He had an audience of the king to-day. M. de Wedell, the Prussian Envoy, left Paris on Thursday night for Berlin. He will return to Paris on Tuesday or Wednesday next.

BERLIN, March 2, 1855.

The dinner at Court to-day in honor of Lord John Russell has been deferred.

Prussia has not yet joined the Western Powers and there are doubts of her minister being received in the Vienna Conference.

In a conference held at Paris on the 27th ult., between the Prussian Envoys Gen. Baron de Wedell, and Count Hadsfeldt and M. Drouyn de l'Hays, Gen. de Wedell has been designated to return to Berlin to receive personal intelligence from his Prussian Majesty.

The Leipziger Zeitung gives us the following version of the conditions under which Gen. von Wedell is authorized to conclude the said treaty at Paris:

1. No territorial diminution of the Russian Empire shall be demanded by the allied Powers.

2. All revolutionary elements are to be kept at a distance.

3. With respect to the guarantee to be demanded of Russia, the "four points" established by the Vienna conference shall not be exceeded.

4. With respect to the third of these "Four Points" (abolition of the Russian supremacy in the Black Sea,) only such demands shall be made as Russia, with due regard to her dignity and influence as a great Power, might be enabled to accept.

5. A plenipotentiary on the part of Prussia shall take part in the peace negotiations which are forthwith to be opened at Vienna with Prince Gortschakoff, the Russian plenipotentiary. In the event of these conditions being agreed to by the Western Powers, Prussia has offered to establish an army of 100,000 men on the eastern frontiers. The mission of Lieutenat-General von Wedell, it is added, was the immediate result of the King of Prussia's own order, and did not emanate directly from the Prussian Ministry. The latter will adopt the consequences of the said mission, if its objects be attained in a satisfactory degree.

FUNERAL OF JOSEPH HUME.

The Liverpool Times of the 3d instant has the following:—On Thursday morning the remains of this much esteemed and excellent gentleman were removed from his town house, Bryanstone-square, Marylebone (to which they had been conveyed from Burnley Hall by special train of the Eastern Counties Railway,) to Kensal-green cemetery, Harrow road, London, according to the wish of the deceased. The funeral arrangements were of a most unostentatious character. As the time for the starting of the funeral cortege drew nigh, the square was thronged with spectators. From an early hour in the morning the minute bells of the various churches in the neighborhood were solemnly tolled, and the trading establishments were partially closed. Numerous applications were made by several public bodies and private individuals for permission to evince their respect for the departed statesman, and their sympathy in the general grief for his loss, by attending at the funeral and forming part of the procession; but it was intimated that the body was to be followed to the grave only by the near relations of the deceased and a few of his particular private friends.

VISIT OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON TO THE CRIMEA.

A Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post, writing on Febuary 17th, says:—All doubts and hesitations as to the Emperor's journey to Sebastopol are now at an end, His Majesty will decidedly leave. Even the day is fixed for the departure—it will be Saturday next, or at the latest Monday, the 5th of March. What is more is, that the Empress will accompany his Majesty. A consultation of physicians has taken place as to whether or not it would be prudent for her Majesty to make the journey. The result is, that it has been declared, to her great delight, that, seeing that her health is exceedingly good at present, she may safely undertake to go with the Emperor.

The Emperor has nominated the personages who are to attend him. His chancellerie privee is thus composed:—M. Delmas, as chief private secretary, in the room of M. Mocquard, detained by the government; M. Chantepie, secretary interpreter; M. Cunnisse, redacteur of the chancellerie; and two employes. The whole of the famous band of the Guides, so well known, and so much admired at London, has also received orders to set out.

Another letter from Paris states that M. Galy, a steward of the Tulleries, specially attached to the service of the Empress, has left for Constantinople, in order to prepare suitable apartments for her Imperial Majesty in one of the summer residences of the Sultan upon the Bosphorus. The ladies of honor who accompany her have been ordered, it is said, to include their ball dresses in their wardrobe, the inference being that the Turkish capital is not the only one which is to be visited.

A telegraphic despatch had been received in London, dated in Paris on March 1, to the following effect:—No one now doubts longer as to the Emperor's journey. He will go at the end of this week, or at the beginning of next. He will be escorted by the Cent Gardes the guides and the gendarmes of the Imperial Guard. Some of these corps have already received their orders. It is further affirmed that the Empress goes with him.

COLOGNE, March 1, 1855.

Intelligence from Berlin states that Lord J. Russell is to remain here only two days. The opening of the Vienna Conferrence being so very near, it is doubtful whether Prussia will be represented there at the beginning. Baron Usedom and Count Alvensleben are designated as Prussian Envoys. There is a rumor that the negotiations have been interrupted through unexpected difficulties.

The French government still maintains that Prussia, as a preliminary condition to taking part in the Conference of Vienna, must engage herself to abide by the majority, whatever that may be, and Prussia, or rather Gen. de Wedell, declines that engagement, asserting that the point is one which is a proper matter for discussion by the Conference which he asks to be admitted to.

SARDINIA.

After a long debates, and the rejection of a great number of amendments, the Chamber of Deputies of Turin has voted the first article of the bill for the suppression of monasteries. This article, which comprises in itself the whole bill, is as follows:

All communities and establishments of whatsoever description of monastic orders, and of regular and secular corporations, existing in the State, are suppressed, and cannot be re-established, except by special law.

Are excepted:

1. The Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph.

2. Such of the communities of orders and corporations as are principally destined for education and public instruction, or for preaching and giving assistance to the sick, to be designated by name in a special clause approved of by royal decree, and to be published contemporaneously with the present law.

A BODY of Russians from 25,000 to 40,000 strong attacked the little Turkish village of Eupatoria. They were repulsed and left 500 dead on the field. The Turkish character for bravery is on the rise again.

KHOSREW PACHA, who died on the 3d ult., was the oldest servant of the Turkish Empire. He had served under five Sultans, and had filled in succession all the first posts in the state. He was very vain of having been born in the same year as Napoleon the Great, Chateaubriand, the Duke of Wellington, Marshal Soult, Mehemit Ali and other remarkable men.

Through from Burlington to Chicago.

WE are truly glad to announce that this city and Chicago are at last connected by a direct and continuous line of railroad. The cars which left here yesterday morning, went directly through to Galesburg where they connect with the train from that place to Chicago. Hereafter passengers and the mails will leave here in the morning and arrive at Chicago the same evening in time to take the night trains for any destination desired. We may now breakfast in Burlington and sup in Chicago on the same day, while the news which is found at their doors in Chicago on one morning will be found at our own on the next. Truly we have entered upon a new and astonishing but glorious era.—[Iowa Gazette.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

AN explosion took place at the Midlothian coal pits, in Chesterfield, Va. Thirty-four persons instantly killed, including twenty-eight negroes and six white men. Twelve negroes and five white persons were so badly burned that there can be but little hopes of their recovery.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL TO THE GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Friendship, Love, and Truth.

BY HANNAH KING.

THREE stars are shining on me from the West,
Three gifts of God! the brightest and the best;
Three strong impulses that have turn'd me round,
Three beacons standing on th' eternal mound.
Three guardian angels, pointing out the way,
Three voices urging me to "Watch and Pray;"
Three "single trumpets"—God's own heralds sound,
Three "muster rolls" that summon all around!
Three whispers, echo'd from the voice of God!
Three scourges ready, should I need the rod,
Three pearls dissolv'd in life's oft bitter cup,
Three sweets that urge me on to drink it up.
Three index-hands that point me to the goal,
Three magnets that attract and fix my soul!
Three paths that lead direct to Zion's hill!
Three alchymists that gold for me—distil.
Three messengers of peace that calm my fears,
And fondly urge me thro' this vale of tears.

THE CRISIS,—1855.

THE YEAR OF PENANCE.

Young America in the Park! "Great demonstration of the people!" "The land of the free and the home of the brave!" How many placards, announcements, calls and newspaper puffs have we not read, week by week and day by day, during an eventful twelvemonth! How many outbursts of Anti-Slavery, Whig, Democrat and Know Nothing enthusiasm have we not witnessed, in and around that "area of freedom," somewhat pent up now, and soon to be abridged, known to the boisterous groundlings as the Park?—How much Wolley Head, Silver Grey, Hard and Soft gunpowder has there not been wasted there, in vain, against the impregnable Sebastopol of political corruption and prejudice?—and all in the name of the poor people—the people still fleeced, and shorn, and humbugged as before. You will fail to remember the list, kind reader; but the din and noise of "the Captains," and the shouting, cannot have passed away from your bewildered memory. So many glorious victories—over what? so many splendid triumphs—for whom? have paraded it and pomped it there, the Star Spangled Banner waving over every one of them, that you, like the writer, may have wondered which was the true expression of the hopes and wants of the dusky mass who struggle through the mire of our streets, and are sometimes mythically appealed to as "the People."

Will you accompany us now, in fancy, "to the Park," there to be made acquainted with one face of that dim, popular eidolon. It is a late hour—an hour reputed dangerous to the happy and the wealthy, when they walk the streets—but one which has no physical perils, or rather holds out infinite consolation, to the wrecked in hope and fortune. In this case, be not afraid; you will meet poverty face to face, but beside it stands honesty, on guard, for you at least, however unavailing his efforts may have been for the aid and comfort of his friend.

The warning finger of time marks, upon the illuminated dial yonder, the first hour of a new day—the first of a new year. The city is not stilled in sleep; it stirs uneasly with the birth of fresh wetchedness, accumulating with the idle revel of the brief holiday; and there is a "demonstration" in the Park—a demonstration on the City Hall steps, and beneath the flag-staff. But no banner is flaunting to the breeze; no stirring cheers goes up from idle throats; no national hymn mocks, with a brazen boast, the misery whose consciousness it stuns; no well-trained band beguiles truth with artificial harmony; not even the trumpet of an "Angel" disturbs the calm of official dignity, or announces the down-fall of innocent great men. Nevertheless, there is "a demonstration," no less real, no less significant because it is held in silence, under the banner and canopy of the January storm, and to the music of the winter blast; no less powerful in its truth, because its members are represented by a unit from among the battling of Young America.

The speech of thousands against abuses and wrongs is silently pleading in one afflicted breast, and reflecting its eloquence in one careworn face, but the language will be audible and legible to you, and, we doubt not, will carry with it greater force than if thundered from the rostrum or paraded in the columns of every morning oracle, with the usual pauses and applause of the reporter, for it will echo some of your own secret thoughts and acquaint you with the depth of a truth which the severities of the winter and its disasters have but vaguely hinted.

Before you, crouched upon the steps of the edifice which, so often, rings with the pride of American self-gratulation, and so often shelters the elect of a free people, sits one of your own flesh and blood, one, born, like you, to all the promises that guarantee each man who inherits them, "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." He has struggled, like you, manfully, to realize these promises, and he, thus far, has failed, while honors and emoluments and comforts are heaped, in the very face of national distress, upon aliens to your blood, your language, your institutions and your liberal principles. Not that this expresses the complaint of misappointment against the meritorious stranger who seeks refuge in our country, but that it is a protest against unequal privileges and a claim for the just fulfilment of the pledges every Christian land makes to its own children.

This narrative and those that may follow it have nothing to do with restricted or bigoted views that exclude any from the pale of your benevolence, but it would teach the lesson that Charity begins at home, and that the members of our own family who are starving on the soil of their birth, in "this land of liberty," within the sound of our own church-bells, and under our own Cristians skies, should be sought out and comforted. They will not beg, but humanity, reason, decency beg for them, and when that voice is neglected by a people, when its doors are closed to the cries of its kindred, and its own sons turn away distrusting all its claims to greatness, and doubting all its professions of excellence, nay, even with curses in their hearts against the favoritism, the corruption, the jugglery by which it is ruled; when the anthem of freedom falls dead upon their hearts, pinched by all the wretchedness that depotism could inflict;—when any people is thus dragged down, we say, its ultimate degradation is not far off. Gold, a fair occasion and a bold usurper, will soon chain it in its place among the crushed and enslaved nations.

Such time has not yet come for us, nor, trusting in the destiny of this favored land, can we believe that it will ever come. Here the sorrow has only to be made known, and ten thousand eager hands are extended to the rescue. We seek to make it known, and, in so doing, to arouse a spirit that will conquer the life relations in our midst, whence such misery springs,—a movement among our population that will succor its own members without compelling them to feel degraded; that will apply a fraction of our accumulated wealth to cases which are not under the ken of vigilance committees, nor accessible to the branded, marked and ticketed bounty of Soup. This can be done; let it be done! We have combated and conquered vast social and political evils: can we not prevent pauperism? intelligent and dangerous because American pauperism—once deserving, now desperate.

But, meanwhile, it waits there in the January night, on the City Hall steps, shrinking from the gaze of even the foreign policemen, whose comfortable propriety and official suspicion struggle in his breast, against the natural kind heart that beats within, yielding, at last, the boon of undisturbed misery on that New Year's seat of stone?

Listen, then, to the mute demonstration. We will put his words into our own description: he will have it so, for he does not and cannot speak.

Here is an American, born where American enterprise most gallantly penetrated and embellished the wilderness. His predecessors planted the tree of your civilization among the weeds of the desert, and toiled long years to clear and cultivate the ground that it might grow. Their name was honorable in their day and generation, and his early nurture was some of their reward.

The Christian Church, the American School-room, the American fireside with their moral instruction, their kindly habits, and their pointings upward to worthy ambition surrounded his youth, with glowing expectations and intense love for the institutions and the sentiments of his native land. All these held out offers which he could not reject; they gave him aspirations for distinction in the career to which his mental formation seemed to call him. Some of his brethren, more fitted by nature to cope with the privations and exposures of a pioneer's life, wandered to the West, where a few have thrived and built new States, and may have toiled and died; some ramble with our Republican text-books learnt by note, through distant lands of pleasure or adventure; some man or guide our ships upon lake and ocean; some wrangle at the bar, plead in the pulpit, or hold listening Senates enchained by their eloquence, and some, at the busy desk, or in the dusty workshop, wield the practical implements, that move the machinery of society—but this one, reader—and do not too quickly dismiss it—we have types for all—is a wrecked voyager upon the sea of Fancy, and, is, likewise, a type.

Our country has claimed distinction in science, and art, and literature, as well as in material regions of exertion, and boasts a free untrammelled Press. Where, then, could the expectation based upon such boasts be more likely realized than in our great cities of the East? It is, hither, then, that all who, throughout the country, feel within them any preparation or fitness for useful service in the world of study and writing, first look for the chance to win a laurel, or at least, establish themselves in such employment of the kind that will give them respectable reward, or open the path to a similar career elsewhere.

There may be, nay, there is error to a large extent, in these anticipations, but all that is said and written, excuses the error in men who, unwarned and unprepared for what they find, are taught it only by a bitter experience—and such has been the case in the instance before us—an instance which gives us one who, overborne by the weight of established combination, the authority of influential names with employment given in time of plenty, only to be withdrawn in the hour of general disaster upon this or that shallow pretext, that served the turn of exclusion and proscription, finds the name, the honor, the faculty of an American belonging to a brotherhood that should be gentle, in word and thought and deed, insufficient to rescue him from suffering and shame.

Do not believe that this is an overdrawn picture, or that, altering the circumstances, it is the only one in our gallery. Far from it; we tear the veil from this, to let you know what there is in the depth of our city's distress. We have others in reserve, that may need all the language we possess to describe.

For the present, simply know that, in the dead chill of that hour which saw the old year pass, a gentleman, an American of education and refined accomplishment, whose predecessors battled with the weastern wilderness, and bedewed the young plant of your civilization with their fertilizing blood,—this man a husband, a father, a Christian, thanking the charity of a foreign policeman for his undisturbed seat, crouched, hungry, weary, and insufficiently clad, without a shelter he could independently claim, sick, shivering, and wretched, under the flagstaff and on the frosted steps of the City Hall, in the sight of Churches, Hotels and Printing Offices; and that such misery was more the result of wicked oppression and cold hearted unbelief, in many who claim your admiration and your suffrages, day by day, than of the miscalculation and folly, which to us the sufferer has most freely admitted.

It is unnecessary to go farther with this "demonstration." The man who reads these lines can follow out every thought it embodies, as, returning home, at evening, he draws a fond wife to his bosom, beside the comfortable parlor fire, and his little prattlers cling around his knees, impatient to receive their father's embrace. The gentle lady whose husband, far away, writes to her his words of comfort and hope, perchance, out of the gloom of night and across the winter fields, when his soul is fainting within him, and his fingers are cramped with cold, will read more than we express in the mysterious reasoning of her own anxious heart.

No matter, we have written fact, fact as certain as sorrow, as hard as the frost that binds the Kaatskills in ice. But remember, reader, that we twice or thrice mingled the name of Young America with this story of demonstration.

Young America, then, came to the rescue, with his great, generous bosom and his open hand. There was, speedily, warmth and light around the stranger, and tears of sympathy and words of manly encouragement. And, once more, under the frowning skies that parted while he was speaking, with the dawn of the new year—the year of penance and reform—he gave a solemn pledge that these things should be no more—that America effort should no longer be suffered to languish, be crushed out and die, where American opulence most challenges the world—that American feelings and principles, and hopes and aspirations, should be more cherished and sustained—and that, while the right hand of fellowship is extended to all the good and true who come to us, there shall be bread and work for every American mouth and every American hand. Then, pointing westward, while the brother he had aided followed, with brightening eyes far beyond, a dim vista of valleys and mountains, lay the home of his constant remembrance, he foretold comfort and happy days.

A mutual lesson, not to be forgotten by either him who suffered or him who relieved. One departs with steadier aim, fresh hope, and earnest purpose; the other labors this day to perfect a work that night began. Young America—he is by all your firesides, and you will assist him, in his turn, for he asks you now to visit and comfort and save his sisters who are in distress—your own poor girls, who shiver and pray to God for help, from the destitution and its horrible consequences which environ them on every side.

Let his summons be heard in your homes and beside your altars of worship; when you instruct and remonstrate against crime and vice, remember, even if but a little, the want and despair that lead them on to triumph over the society you uphold and extol. And be quick to the good work, for the cry of despair ascends to heaven, testifying to your indifference; hourly, the fairest and the gentlest are sinking, overborne and lost, in the black tide of doom, which flows through the gates of temptation. That you may the more readily do this, we will set before you some pages of the winter's record, and, with you, follow the poor girls into their miserable homes.

Young America has his own trials, but, never mind him; he has also the courage, the spring of his race, and while a rood of ground remains untilled, or a forest tree that blocks the light, stands there, in the West, to fell, or a sea invites his exploring sail, or great rivers that no man stirs, roll, in solitude, through fertile continents, he has a home, a guerdon a career. Give your charity to the feeble, the delicate, the helpless; to the little bees who have toiled in your hours of prosperous summer and idleness, yet have saved no honey for themselves.

This will restore a lovelier summer, and adorn with smiles our city and our land.

New Emigrant Law.

The Emigrant Passenger Law.

With the Amendments as it Finally Passed both Houses of Congress.

AN ACT to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no master of any vessel owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, or by a citizen of any foreign country, shall take on board such vessel, at any foreign port or place, other than foreign contiguous territory of the United States, a greater number of passengers than in proportion of one to every two tons of such vessel, not including children under the age of one year in the computation, and computing two children over one and under eight years of age as one passenger. That the spaces appropriated for the use of such passengers, and which shall not be occupied by stores or other goods not the personal baggage of such passengers, shall be in the following proportions, viz: On the main and poop decks or platforms and in the deck-houses, if there be any, one passenger for each sixteen clear superficial feet of deck, if the height or distance between the decks or platform shall not be less than six feet; and on the lower deck, (not being an orlop deck,) if any, one passenger for eighteen such clear superficial feet, if the height or distance between the decks or platforms shall not be less than six feet, but no as that no passenger shall be carried on any deck or platform, nor upon any deck where the height or distance between decks is less than six feet with intent to bring such passenger to the United States, and shall leave such port or place and bring the same or any number thereof, within the jurisdiction of the United States; or if any such master of any vessel shall take on board his vessel, at any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, any greater number of passengers than in the proportion aforesaid to the space aforesaid, or to the tonnage aforesaid, with intent to carry the same to any foreign port or place other than foreign contiguous territory aforesaid, every such master shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, before any Circuit or District Court of the United States, shall, for each passenger taken on board beyond the limit aforesaid, or the space aforesaid, be fined in the sum of fifty dollars and may also be imprisoned, at the discretion of the Judge before whom the penalty shall be recovered, not exceeding six months; but should it be necessary for the safety or convenience of the vessel, that any portion of her cargo, or any other articles, or article, should be placed on, or stored in any of the decks, cabins, or other places appropriated to the use of passengers, the same may be placed in lockers or inclosures prepared for the purpose, on an exterior surface impervious to the wave, capable of being cleansed in like manner as the decks or platforms of the vessel. In no case, however, shall the places thus provided be deemed to be a part of the space allowable for the use of passengers, but the same shall be deducted therefrom, and in all cases where prepared or used, upper surface of said lockers or inclosed spaces shall be deemed and taken to be the deck or platform from which measurement shall be made for all the purposes of this act. It is also provided that one hospital in the spaces appropriated to passengers, and separate therefrom by an appropriate partition, and furnished as its purposes require, may be prepared, and when used, may be included in the space allowable for passengers, but the same shall not occupy more than one hundred superficial feet of deck or platform: Provided, That on board two-deck ships, where the height between the decks seven and one half feet or more, fourteen clear superficial feet of deck shall be the proportion required for each passenger.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no such vessel shall have more than two tiers of berths, and the interval between the lowest part thereof and the deck or platform beneath shall not be less than nine inches, and the berths shall be well constructed, parallel with the sides of the vessel, and separated form each other by partitions, as berths ordinarily are separated, and shall be at least six feet in length and at least two feet in width, and each berth shall be occupied by no more than one passenger; but double berths of twice the above width may be constructed, each berth to be occupied by no more, and by no other, than two women, or by one woman and two children under the age of eight years, or by husband and wife, or by a man and two of his own children under the age of eight years, or by two men, members of the same family; and if there shall be any violation of this section in any of its provisions, then the master of the vessel and the owners thereof shall severally forfeit and pay the sum of five dollars for each passenger on board of said vessel on such voyage, to be recovered by the United States in any port where such vessel may arrive or depart.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all vessels, whether of the United States or any foreign country, having sufficient capacity or space, according to law, for fifty or more passengers, (other than cabin passengers,) shall, when employed in transporting such passengers between the United States and Europe, have, on the upper deck, for the use of such passengers, a house over the passage-way leading to the apartments allotted to such passengers below deck, firmly secured to the deck or combings of the hatch, with two doors, the sills of which shall be at least one foot above deck, so constructed that one door or window in such house may at all times be left open for ventilation; and all vessels so employed, and having the capacity to carry one hundred and fifty passengers or more, shall have two such houses; and the stairs or ladder leading down to the aforesaid apartment shall be furnished with a hand-rail of wood or strong rope; but booby hatches may be substituted for such houses.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every such vessel so employed, and having the legal capacity for more than one hundred such passengers, shall have at least two ventilators to purify the apartment or apartments occupied by such passengers; one of which shall be inserted in the after part of the apartment or apartments, and the other shall be placed in the forward portion of the apartment or apartments, and one of them shall have an exhausting cap to carry off the foul air, and the other a receiving cap to carry down the fresh air; which said ventilators shall have a capacity proportioned to the size of the apartment or apartments to be purified, namely: if the apartment or apartments will lawfully authorize the reception of two hundred such passengers, the capacity of such ventilators shall each be equal to a tube of twelve inches diameter in the clear, and in proportion for larger or smaller apartments; and all said ventilators shall rise at least four feet six inches above the upper deck of any such vessel, and be of the most approved form and construction; but if it shall appear, from the report to be made and approved, as hereinafter provided, that such vessel is equally well ventilated by any other means, such other means of ventilation shall be deemed and held to be a compliance with the provisions of this section.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every vessel carrying more than fifty such passengers shall have for their use on deck, housed and conveniently arranged, at least one camboose or cooking-range, the dimensions of which shall be equal to four feet long and one foot six inches wide for every two hundred passengers; and provision shall be made in the manner aforesaid, in this ratio, for a greater or less number of passengers; but nothing herein contained shall take away the right to make such arrangements for cooking between decks, if that shall be deemed desirable.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all vessels employed as aforesaid shall have on board, for the use of such passengers, at the time of leaving the last port whence such vessel shall sail, well secured under deck, for each passenger, at least twenty pounds of good navy bread, fifteen pounds of rice, fifteen pounds of oatmeal, ten pounds of wheat flour, fifteen pounds of peas and beans, twenty pounds of potatoes, one pint of vinegar, sixty gallons of fresh water, ten pounds of salted pork, and ten pounds of salt beef free of bone, all to be of good quality; but at places where either rice, oatmeal, wheat flour, or peas and beans, cannot be procured, of good quality and on reasonable terms, the quantity of either or any of the other last named may be increased and substituted therefor; and in case potatoes cannot be procured on reasonable terms, one pound of either of said articles may be substituted in lieu of five pounds of potatoes; and the captains of such vessels shall deliver to each passenger at least one-tenth part of the aforesaid provisions weekly, commencing on the day of sailing, and at least three quarts of water daily; and if the passengers on board of any such vessel in which the provisions and water herein required shall not have been provided as aforesaid, shall at any time be put on short allowance during any voyage, the master or owner of any such vessel shall pay to each and every passenger who shall have been put on short allowance, the sum of three dollars for each and every day they may have been put on short allowance, to be recovered in the Circuit or District Court of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the captain or master of every such ship or vessel to cause the food and provisions of all the passengers to be well and properly cooked daily, and to be served out and distributed to them at regular and stated hours, by messes, or in such other manner as shall be deemed best, and most conducive to the health and comfort of such passengers, of which hours and manner of distribution due and sufficient notice shall be given. If the captain or master of any such ship or vessel shall willfully fail to furnish and distribute such provisions, cooked as aforesaid, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, before any Circuit or District Court of the United States, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year; Provided, That the enforcement of this penalty shall not affect the civil responsibility of the captain or master and owners to such passengers as may have suffered from said default.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the captain of any such vessel, so employed, is hereby authorized to maintain good discipline and such habits of cleanliness among such passengers, as will tend to the preservation and promotion of health; and to that end he shall cause such regulations as he may adopt for this purpose, to be posted up, before sailing, on board such vessel, in a place accessible to such passengers, and shall keep the same so posted up during the voyage; and it is hereby made the duty of said captain to cause the apartments occupied by such passengers to be kept at all times in a clean, healthy state, and the owners of every such vessel, so employed, are required to construct the decks, and all parts of said apartment so that it can be thoroughly cleansed; and they shall also provide a safe, convenient privy or water-closet for the exclusive use of every one hundred such passengers. And when the weather is such that said passengers cannot be mustered on deck with their bedding, it shall be the duty of the captain of every such vessel, to cause the deck occupied by such passengers to be cleansed with chloride of lime or some other equally efficient disinfecting agent, and also at such other times as said captain may deem necessary.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the master and owners of any such vessel so employed, which shall not be provided with the house or houses over the passageways as prescribed in the third section of this chapter, or with ventilators, as prescribed in the fourth section of this chapter, or with the cambooses or cooking ranges, with the houses over them, as prescribed in the fifth section of this chapter, shall severally forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of two hundred dollars for each and every violation of, or neglect to conform to, the provisions of each of said sections; and fifty dollars for each and every neglect or violation of any of the provisions of the seventh section of this chapter; to be recovered by suit in any Circuit or District Court of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which the said vessel may arrive, or from which she may be about to depart, or at any place within the jurisdiction of such Courts, wherever the owner or owners, or captain of such vessel may be found.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Collector of the Customs at any port of the United States at which any vessel so employed shall arrive, or from which any such vessel shall be about to depart, shall appoint and direct one or more of the Inspectors of the Customs for such port to examine such vessel, and report, in writing, to such Collector, whether the requirements of law have been complied with in respect to such vessel; and if such report shall state such compliance, and shall be approved by such Collector, it shall be deemed and held as prima facia evidence thereof.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the provisions, requisitions, penalties, and liens of this act, relating to the space in vessels appropriated to the use of passengers, are hereby extended and made applicable to all spaces appropriated to the use of steerage passengers in vessels propelled in whole or in part, by steam, and navigating from, to, and between the ports, and in manner as in this act named, and to such vessels and to the masters thereof; and so much of the act entitled, "An act to amend an act entitled, 'An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled, in whole or in part, by steam, and for other purposes,'" approved August 30, 1852, as conflicts with this act, is hereby repealed; and the space appropriated to the use of steerage passengers in vessels so as above propelled and navigated, is hereby subjected to the supervision and inspection of the Collector of the Customs at any port of the United States at which any such vessel shall arrive, or from which she shall be about to depart; and the same shall be examined and reported in the same manner, and by the same officers, by the next preceding section directed to examine and report.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the vessels bound from any port in the United States to any port or place in the Pacific Ocean, or on its tributaries, or from any such port or place to any port in the United States on the Atlantic, or its tributaries, shall be subject to the foregoing provisions regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels, except so much as relates to provisions and water; but the owners and masters of all such vessels shall in all cases furnish to each passenger the daily supply of water therein mentioned; and they shall furnish a sufficient supply of good and wholesome food, properly cooked; and in case they shall fail so to do, or shall provide unwholesome or unsuitable provisions, they shall be subject to the penalty provided in the sixth section of this chapter, in case the passengers are put on short allowance of water or provisions.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the captain or master of any ship or vessel arriving in the United States, or any of the Territories thereof, from any foreign place whatever, at the same time that he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making report or entry of the ship or vessel, pursuant to law, shall also deliver and report to the collector of the district in which such ship or vessel shall arrive, a list or manifest of all the passengers taken on board of the said ship or vessel at any foreign port or place; in which list or manifest it shall be the duty of the said master to designate, particularly, the age, sex, and occupation of the said passengers, respectively, the part of the vessel occupied by each during the voyage, the country to which they severally belong, and that of which it is their intention to become inhabitants; and shall further set forth whether any, and what number, have died on the voyage; which list or manifest shall be sworn to by the said master, in the same manner as directed by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo, and the refusal or neglect of the master aforesaid to comply with the provisions of this section, or any part thereof, shall incur the same penalties, disabilities, and forfeitures as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo aforesaid.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That each and every collector of the customs, to whom such manifest or list of passengers as aforesaid shall be delivered, shall quarter-yearly return copies thereof to the Secretary of State of the United States, by whom statements of the same shall be laid before Congress at each and every session.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That in case there shall have occurred on board any ship or vessel arriving at any port or place within the United States or its Territories any death or deaths among the passengers, (other than cabin passengers,) the master or captain, or owner or consignee of such ship or vessel shall, within twenty-four hours after the time within which the report and list or manifest of passengers mentioned in section twelve of this act is required to be delivered to the collector of the customs, pay to the said collector the sum of ten dollars for each and every passenger above the age of eight years who shall have died on the voyage, by natural disease; and the said collector shall pay the money thus received, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury by general rules shall direct, to any board or commission appointed by, and acting under the authority of the State within which the port where such ship or vessel arrived is situated, for the care and protection of sick, indigent, or destitute emigrants, to be applied to the objects of their appointment; and if there be more than one board or commission who shall claim such payment, the Secretary of the Treasury, for the time being, shall determine which is entitled to receive the same, and his decision in the premises shall be final and without appeal; Provided, That the payment shall in no case be awarded or made to any board or commission, or association formed for the protection or advancement of any particular class of emigrants, or emigrants of any particular nation or creed; and if the master, captain, owner, or consignee of any ship or vessel, refuse or neglect to pay the collector the sum and sums of money required, and within the time prescribed by this section, he or they shall severally forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars in addition to such sum of ten dollars for each and every passenger upon whose death the same has become payable, to be recovered by the United States in any Circuit or District Court of the United States where such vessel may arrive, or such master, captain, owner, or consignee may reside; and, when recovered, the said money shall be disposed of in the same manner as is directed with respect to the sum and sums required to be paid to the collector of customs.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the amount of the several penalties imposed by the foregoing provisions, regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels, shall be liens on the vessel or vessels violating these provisions, and each vessel or vessels shall be libelled therefor in any Circuit or District Court of the United States where such vessel or vessels may arrive.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That all and every vessel or vessels which shall or may be employed by the American Colonization Society, or the Colonization Society of any State, to transport, and which shall actually transport, from any port or ports of the United States to any colony or colonies on the West Coast of Africa, colored emigrants to reside there, shall be, and the same are hereby subjected to the operation of the foregoing provisions regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the Collector of the Customs shall examine such emigrant ship or vessel on its arrival at his port, and ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time of sailing, the length of the voyage, the ventilation, the number of passengers, their space on board, their food, the native country of the emigrants, the number of deaths, the age and sex of those who died during the voyage, together with his opinion of the cause of the mortality, if any, on board, and, if none, what precautionary measures, arrangements, or habits, are supposed to have had any, and what, agency in causing the exemption.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect, with respect to vessels sailing from ports in the United States, on the eastern side of the continent, within thirty days from the time of its approval; and, with respect to vessels sailing from ports in the United States, on the western side of the continent, and from ports in Europe, within sixty days from the time of its approval; and, with respect to vessels sailing from other parts of the world, within six months from the time of its approval. And it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of State to give notice, in such manner as he shall deem proper.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the time that this act shall take effect with respect to any vessels, in respect to such vessels, the act of second March, eighteen hundred and nineteen, entitled "An act regulating passenger ships and vessels," the act of twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, entitled "An act to regulate carriage of passengers in merchant vessels;" the act of second March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels," and to determine the time when said act shall take effect;" the act of thirty-first January, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, entitled "An act exempting vessels employed by the American Colonization Society in transporting colored emigrants from the United States to the Coast of Africa from the provisions of twenty-second February and second of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels," the act of seventeenth May, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, entitled "An act to provide for the ventilation of passenger vessels, and for other purposes," and the act of third March, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, entitled "An act to extend the provisions of all laws now in force relating to the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels, and the regulation thereof," are hereby repealed. But nothing in this act contained shall in any wise obstruct the prosecution, recovery, distribution, or remission of any fines, penalties or forfeitures which may have been incurred in respect to any vessels prior to the day this act goes into effect, in respect to such vessels under the laws hereby repealed, for which purpose the said laws shall continue in force.

But the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, and upon such conditions as he shall think proper, discontinue any such prosecution, or remit or modify such penalties.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1855.

The Mormons.

WHY are the Mormons not like other people, is a question that is frequently asked. We might with as much propriety turn round upon our interrogators and ask, why are not other people like the Mormons? The last would be possible, the first impossible; for that strange personage, "other people," is a being of such singular mould, is so diverse, variegated, dissimilar, disunited, and is such a conglomeration of contrarieties, that you may as well attempt to catch an ignis fatuus, describe the color of a cameleon, lock up a shadow, or eat moonshine, as to attempt anything like a description of this evanescent personage. Other people! who are they? Turks, Indians, Chinamen, Hindoos, Greeks, French, English, Hottentots, or Americans? Philosophers—are they Materialists or Immaterialists? Do they believe in the doctrines of Confucius, Plato, or Bacon? Are they Etherial or Transcendentalists? Or do they believe in plain matter-of-fact demonstration? Politicians—do they believe in Despotic, Monarchical, Aristocratic, Republican, or Theocratic government? Are they Whigs, Tories, Democrats, Hard or Soft Shells, Abolition or Pro-Slavery, Nullifiers or Know-Nothings? Religionists—are they Mohammedan, Christian, Budhist, Pagan, Jew, or Greek? Christians—hold they that to the Greek, Catholic, Jumper, Methodist, Dunker, Presbyterian, Antinomian, Baptist, Universalist, or Church of England faith? Do they have a parson to preach for them, and a clerk to assist and say amen, or have they to "work out their own salvation?" Must they wait "till the spirit moves them," or thunder "in season and out of season?" Must they have the falling down power, or conduct themselves like good respectable Christian? Must jumping form a part of their religion, or shall they "approach the Lord with reverend song?" Shall they believe or disbelieve in the Trinity? Shall they send infants to Hell a span long, or will they pack off everybody to Heaven? Or will they separate "the sheep from the goats?" Are people to be roasted on gridirons, tossed by fiends with pitchforks, and stung with scorpions, in sulphureous flames, forever? Or will they be judged according to deeds done in the body?

Without describing the minutæ of the political, moral and philosophical absurdities of this singular personage, "other people," perhaps we have said enough to show that he would be a most difficult person to follow, his course is so erratic, his system so absurd and contradictory, that, take him either morally, religiously, philosophically, or politically, he is changeable as the forms in a kaleidoscope, as deceitful as a jack-a-lantern, and as uncertain a guide as a blind man in a desert. Why are not the Mormons like other people? Impossible! The moment they embrace any particular moral, religious, political, or philosophical creed, they disagree with a thousand others. And yet "somebody," who is first cousin to "other people," and next door neighbor to "they," is continually complaining that the Mormons are not like other people. Now if "they," "somebody," and "other people," only knew how ridiculous they look in the eyes of intelligent men, and what a motley, ricketty, vacillating, confused mass of contrarieties, corruptions and follies they are wallowing among, they would shrink from the exposed, indefensible position that they occupy, hide their heads in shame, or seek to take the "beam out of their own eye, in order that they might see more clearly the mote that is in their brother's."

Who are the Mormons? Men! Americans! Patriots! They believe in God, and in all constitutional laws, and they are at the defiance of Politicians to prove that they have taken one unconstitutional step; and they are as much at the defiance of religionists, of any denomination, to prove that they believe, or practise one principle, doctrine or ordinance that is not taught and sustained, by the scriptures of truth; and they are equally at the defiance of moralists or philosophers to prove that they are less moral than any other people, or that their system is less reasonable, scientific, intelligent, less conducive to the wants of man in time and eternity and that it is not based on as sound philosophy as any other system extant. We are not straightened or pent up in our feelings, we believe in research and investigation: we believe in "shaking all things that can be shaken," in testing severely every principle, "in proving all things, and holding fast that which is good." We believe in good sound healthy morals, in matter-of-fact philosophy, in politics uncorrupted, and that secure the greatest good to all. We believe in the God of Heaven, and certainty in religion. We believe in a religion that will make a man go down to the grave with a clear conscience, and an unfaltering step, and meet his God as a Father and friend without fear. Our religion teaches us to do good to man, to obey law, to love God, to work righteousness and to progress in all truth, intelligence, virtue, faith, purity, knowledge; and everything good pertaining to this world, and that which is to come. We have no craven fear of death, we are looking for life eternal, and an association with the Gods in celestial mansions. We are not ashamed of our religion, and we believe God is not ashamed of us. And concerning this nondescript "other people," we are quite as indifferent about their opinions, as they can be about ours.

Politically we conceive we have rights as men, and as Americans; the opinions of slabsided, contracted, exclusive, anti-American political and religious bigots, to the contrary, notwithstanding. There are two or three things that we assuredly shall do: one is, to worship God as we please, according to our conscience; another, we calculate to vote as we please, and further we shall assuredly contend for our constitutional rights, and those we shall have in spite of all the cant and croaking of knaves, hypocrites, and bigots. Honesty has not all left the nation, nor are there lacking many noble souls who will battle for the strong bulwarks and constitutional priviledges of the nation; and while virtue, patriotism, and intelligence triumph, Mormonism is safe. When the Goddess of Liberty falls God will take care of his people. Mormonism is present and future; it meets all contingences, surmounts all difficulties, will outride time, and triumph in eternity. It is the offspring of Heaven; is sustained by the Almighty, and will lead its faithful followers back into his presence.

The Russian Imperial Family.

AT a time like the present, when legions of armed men are in the field, when whole armies are at the disposal of one man, when the interests of many nations are at stake, and when by his word hundreds of thousands of armed men would rush into deadly strife or ground their arms in peace; when by the dictum of one man a war most bloody, destructive and general would be waged, or by the same word he could say to the troubled elements peace be still; when that man is suddenly called from the stage of action, and his voice and power is lost in death, when the mighty man that made nations tremble is now helpless, powerless, inanimate, on a level with the humblest serf, confined in a narrow space of two feet by six of earth, it is no wonder that a general lull should take place in the fiery elements of war, and that a universal excitement and anxiety should exist on the minds of millions as to the results of this sudden event, as to whether it will be the precursor of peace, or whether the gathering cloud on the Eastern horizon may not belch forth with redoubled fury under the administration of a younger, and perhaps less careful guide. It is a matter at the present time which certainly would be most difficult to decide. It is true that the belligerent armies are now making all preparations for war, and it yet remains to be seen whether the present diplomacy at Vienna shall be influenced by a peaceable, or a belligerent spirit. For the information of our readers, we give the following brief outline of the imperial family of Russia:

Nicholas married Charlotte, eldest daughter of Frederic William III. of Prussia, and sister of the reigning King. This may account for the evident reluctance manifested by Prussia to join the Allies, and for her desire in case of negotiations for peace to preserve inviolate the Russian territory, as well as her maritime, military and commercial independence.*

The Empress Charlotte still survives her husband, to whom she was much attached, and by whom she has had seven children, as follows:

1. Alexander Cesarewitsch, hereditary Grand Duke, was born April 29, 1818, and affianced Dec. 18, 1840, to the Princess Maximilienne Wilhelmine Augusta Sophia Marie, born August 8, 1824, daughter of the Grand Duke Louis II. of Hesse. They have at present four children, all sons, as follows: Nicholas, hereditary Grand Duke, born Sept. 20, 1843; Alexander, born March 10, 1845; Wladimar, born April 22, 1847; and Alexis, born January 14, 1850.

2. Maria, born August 18, 1819, and married July 14, 1839, to the Duke Maximilian Joseph Eugene Augustus Napoleon, Duke of Leuchtenburg, Prince of Eichstedt. This princess is not now living.

3. Olga, Grand Duchess, born Sept. 11, 1822.

5. Grand Duke Constantine, born Sept. 21, 1827.

6. Grand Duke Nicholas, born August 8, 1831, and died within a few years.

7. Grand Duke Michael, born Oct. 25, 1832.

The Grand Duke Alexander is the rightful heir; but Constantine has made pretensions to the succession, on account of being the eldest son of the reigning Emperor, in which it is stated the succession rests. It is supposed that Alexander was in St. Petersburg at the time of his father's death, by last accounts Constantine and Michael were in the Crimea. The laws of succession, however, have not been very rigidly observed in Russia; military power, might, often controlling; hence it is a matter to be decided, yet, upon whom the succession may rest. When Peter the Great died, his widow Catharine seized upon the throne, which legitimately belonged to Peter, his grandson, who only succeeded to the throne after her death, Peter II. died young, and a few of the leading officers of the army set aside his legitimate successor, Peter, son of Ann, who was a daughter of Peter the Great and conferred the throne upon Anne Duchess of Easerland. Anne was afterwards deposed and Ivan, an infant declared Czar, under the regency of his mother. Elizabeth, daughter of Peter the Great deposed the reigning Duchess, and imprisoned Ivan, who was afterwards murdered by Catharine "the great." Elizabeth was succeeded by her sister's son Peter, who was poisoned through the agency of Catharine, who seized the throne. Paul, the son, and successor of Catharine, was murdered by conspirators in his own palace, which were headed by one of his own sons. Alexander assumed the throne on the death of his father Paul, and died a natural death. Constantine was his legitimate successor, but voluntarily renounced his pretensions in favor of his younger brother Nicholas, the late Emperor.

It will be seen by the above that the claims by succession rest on a very uncertain tenor, and if the young Dukes are as difficult to please as some of their progenitors it may not be as easily arranged, for every reign, either at its commencement, or termination has been distinguished by a fierce struggle for supremacy or some great crime, and yet all these are kings by the grace of God the Anointed of the Lord, surely royal blood flows in curious channels.

Since writing the above we have learned by F. D. Richards to whose letter we refer our readers that Alexander is appointed Emperor of Russia.

"The Emperor's last words were spoken in the French language. Addressing the Empress, he said, 'Tell Frederick the (King of Prussia) to continue attached to Russia, as he has hitherto been, and never to forget his father's words.' This message, received by telegraph at Berlin, was instantly replied to, it is added, by assurance in the same sense.

"It is said that a few days before his death the Czar succeeded in effecting a reconciliation between his two eldest sons, Alexander and Constantine, who were at variance."

UTAH.

OUR news from Utah will be found to be very interesting this week; that far off singular people seem to be doing quite as well as some of the more pious, moral and consistent Gentiles, who have been raising such an outcry about Mormon evils; if Colonels, Judges, Secretary, Merchants and Mormons are any testimony, they are in a prosperous happy state, are progressing in manufactories, agriculture, education-buildings and improvements, dances, theatres, parties, balls, women and babies included. In everything they seem to be doing a little better then the orthodox, Politicians and Christians. The State House, about which there has been so much said, will be ready for the legislature next fall. The following from a Gentile Judge, Chief Justice John F. Kenny we think is quiet as strong argument, in favor of Mormonism, as some of our co-temporaries have brought against it.

"You do not wish to rule your people by law, you try to rule them by love. I speak this not merely to eulogize Governor Young, or his Council. Every thing in this valley bespeaks the enterprise, the industry, the refinement, and the intelligence of the people. Your fine settlements, unsurpassed in loveliness and beauty—your public buildings—your machinery, and the union and good feelings prevailing throughout your territory, are all monuments of the wisdom and power that influences and control every department. No stranger coming into this territory, but will be struck at the luxury, magnificence, symmetry, and ingenuity that exist throughout this valley. This cannot be ascribed to the wisdom of man—it cometh from the Almighty Creator of heaven and earth; I can account for it on no other principle. I shall continue to observe with interest the progress and development of the territory, while I may be with you, and that may be for all my life, for aught I know; and it is food for the mind. Although the inhabitants of this territory are from so many nations, governments and kingdoms, still there is no people more happy, more free and prosperous than this people. These are the words of truth, and it gives my soul delight to express them." * * * * * * "I have a wife and five children, a daughter grown to womanhood; and I can say there is less immorality, less drunkenness, less licentiousness here, than any where I have ever been."

Associate Justice I. P. Styles holds the following: "I have been to Iron county: I organized a Grand Jury with all the requirements and paraphernalia of law; I gave them a solemn charge, my advice to them was that they never should have Iron County tarnished with a law suit. There was no case for me to adjudicate.

Will our moralists here show us a better state of things? Or will our politicians or journalists point us out another county, outside of Utah, where a Grand Jury is empanelled and a court organized without having a case to try? We saw the same thing with Judge Snow in Provo Utah county, but never any where else. And yet these are the "Corrupt," "Turbulent Mormons."

The above is taken from the Desert News of Feb. 8, from speeches delivered at a Legislative party. We will give the speeches in full next week.

TOAST, by the U. S. District Attorney, J. Hollman:

"Gov. Young and Council—May their wisdom increase in the future as it has in the past."

Gov. Young's rejoinder—"May we all keep what we have already obtained, and add to the stock until our utmost satisfaction is obtained in eternal bliss."

The sugar works are not yet completed; but they are making good molasses. They can grind press and boil 1,000 bushels of beets in twenty-four hours, when in proper operation they will make from two to two and a half tons of sugar in twenty-four hours.

Rumours were in circulation about the appointment of Col. Steptoe for Governor; but nothing official.

It is thought by his friends he will not accept. He is spoken of very highly.

Mormon Meetings in Philadelphia.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS in Philadelphia hold their meetings every Sabbath in the MELODEON HALL, south-west corner of Ninth and Spring Garden street.

Preaching at 10½ A.M. and 6½ P.M. Sacrament meeting at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Conference Notice.

THERE will be a Conference held in Philadelphia on the sixth of April next. All the Elders who can make it convenient are requested to attend.

WE are much gratified in being able to lay before our readers a letter from President F. D. Richards; it is full of news and will be read with very much interest. We shall be pleased to hear often from the same source.

THE address of F. D. RICHARDS, is changed to 36 Islington, Liverpool, England.

THE Courts of Law of the State of California, have decided that Chinamen are not admissible as witnesses against "a white man" and that they are not entitled to citizenship, on the ground that "they do not belong to the Caucasian Race, who are alone entitled to the benefits of Naturalization.

MORE TERRITORY.—Report says that the Russian General Mausuroff, who has recently arrived at Brussels, is the bearer of the cession of the Russian possessions in North America to the United States for $30,000,000.

If the above is correct it shows, a strong desire at the present time to obtain resources for the war, and that the late Czar thought it better to trade off his northern Pacific Colony, then to part with his possessions at home.

WAR WITH CUBA.—A letter from Washington says:—It is rumoured that orders go out to Havana for the naval force there to seek reparation for the El Dorado outrage. The steamer Princeton, with ten heavy guns, is already there; the steamer Fulton, with five guns; the frigate Columbia, with fifty guns; and the sloop Falmouth, with twenty guns, are either there now or will be very soon. They are all under command of Commodore Newton. There is an additional force of fifty-four guns at Norfolk ready, if wanted, at short notice. The Administration is fiery, but I don't know how long it will continue so.—[N. Y. Herald.

NEW BULLET.—A bullet has been invented, by Mr. W. G. H. Taunton, which expands on firing to 24 or 30 inches, and acts as a sword cutting horizantally throughout the whole of its course. This projectile can be fired from any gun. The principle is applied to Cannon with fearfully distructive effect, when so used; the missive expanding horizantally from twenty to thirty feet.—[Millenniel Star.

THE ENLISTMENT FOR FOREIGN SERVICE.—The United States district attorney, John McKeon, has written a letter to A. S. Hollyer, Esq., the United States Marshal New York, calling his attention to the foreign enlistment, and expressing his determination to enforce rigidly the neutrality act of 1818, which provides that—"If any person shall, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, enlist or enter himself, or hire or retain another person to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince, State, colony, district, or people, as a soldier, mariner, or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque, or privateer, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned not exceeding three years."

EMIGRATION TO KANSAS TERRITORY.—Lexington, Mo., March 23, 1855. Ten thousand actual residents have gone to Kansas from Missouri, They will be there by the day of election.

ELECTIONS IN KANSAS.—Governor Reeder, of Kansas, has issued his proclamation appointing Friday, the 30th instant, for the election of members of the Legislature.

NULLIFICATION IN NEW YORK.—The select committee of the Assembly on the subject, have reported through Mr. Phelps, of Onondaga, a bill entitled "An act for the better preservation of the constitutional rights and liberties of the people of this State," which we re-publish to-day. As will be perceived upon looking into this measure, it is nothing more nor less than a bill to set the constitution at defiance, in the nullification of the Fugitive Slave law. The bill provides in behalf of fugitive slaves:

1.—The writ of habeas corpus.

2.—A trial by jury.

3.—Fines for the arrest of persons as fugitive slaves, who are not such.

5.—An interdict against all public officers of the State assisting in the arrest and restoration of fugitive slaves to their masters.

6.—A similar interdict to the State militia.

7.—Repeal of a conflicting law.

8.—Penalties to State officers who may prefer obedience to the laws of Congress.

9.—Expenses of this new law provided for.

This is clean work, and if this bill be passed there immediately arises a conflict between Congress and the State, and the anti-slavery agitation will receive the exciting impetus of open and defiant nullification.—[N. Y. Herald.

FOR THE MORMON.

Sandwich Islands.

Ecclesiastical Law—Christian and Brutalizing Legislation—The Hawaiian Chief Justice on Licentiousness—Causes of Crime—Past Population—Human Sacrifices—Natural and Artificial Resources—Languages—Effects of Official Use of Native Language—Missions, and what occurred before them—Declaration of Rights—Origin of the Present Government and System of Polity—Government College—Feudal System—Land Tenure—Commercial Views—Foreign Governments—Advice to Emigrants.

IN 1852, the amount raised by the Government on "adultery and fornication" alone, over the entire group of the Sandwich Islands, was $18,870. But neither fines nor imprisonments are equal to the punishments proposed by the professors of Protestantism. An instance of this fanaticism was given in a native newspaper called Elele, in an article republished in the Sandwich Island News, of March 10, 1847, wherein a missionary proposes that for the first offence of moikoloke (adultery) all the property of the offender shall be confiscated to the government, and he or she be flogged with a rope and confined in a dungeon; that on the second offence the offender be taken to the ocean and be dipped in the waters till he or she is as nearly dead as possible, then allowed to recover breath, and again submerged in the same manner, this operation to be repeated five times if endurable, and the convicted person be then banished to another land. For the third offence the offender shall be hung until dead, according to the commandment of the Word of God. The editor hereupon remarks that the experience of the last twenty-five years in respect to the Hawaiian race is sufficient to show that the heathen are not to be evangelised so. "To provide religion and its intellectual observance, to assure morality through all the social relations of society, is undoubtedly one of the highest obligations of a good government; but to compel men to a religious or virtuous life by statute laws, whose sanctions are addressed exclusively to the fears, is metaphysically absurd and practically impossible. The attempt to extinguish by the terrors of the law, however terrific, or greatly to restrain by such measures the animal passions of beings situated as the Hawaiians are, would be as useless as to attempt to send the stars to a grammar school, or to teach the planets didactic theology." The Chief Justice of the Hawaiian Kingdom in 1853 remarks: "In my opinion, licentiousness is so deeply seated in the heart of this nation, that no skill of the legislator can cure it, and it must inevitably destroy this nation."

A good portion of crime is attributed to the want of suitable prisons, the existence of dance halls, to adultery, to indolent habits, and to intoxicating drinks. Of causes lessening the population, the practice of infanticide must be added, as well as their superstition, which prevents them from using the proper means to preserve life when debilitated by sickness. A vast difference exists between the elements of the native and foreign character, and the two are likely to be antagonistic, although the major part of foreigners are equally as sensual and vicious; and so, on the whole, cannot elevate the native character. The Sandwich Islands everywhere contain traces of population far beyond the computation of Cook, and looking to the capacity of the soil to support thousands of times as many as he found there, it would be strange were it not so. We must look in part for this decrease to the custom of human sacrifices, as well as the immediate losses by continual warfare; the extent to which the former were carried may be judged by the following native tradition:

"In the days of Unim, after having been victorious in battle, the king sacrificed the most distinguished men of Hawaiia, who were captured at Waipo, where the voice of Kiahou, his god, was heard from the clouds, requiring more men; the king kept sacrificing, and the voice continued to call for more until he had slain all his men except one, whom, as he was a great favorite, he refused to give up, but the god being mad, he sacrificed him also, and the people likewise all they received, upwards of eighty men."

The rude, oracular rhyme of the natives is not wanting to glorify such scenes, but the only practical interest they seem to cherish is the culture of their taro plantations and of their numerous fish ponds. The taro is a succulent plant, growing in damp or marshy places; the plantations extend from forty feet square to three and six acres. Its greatest market is at Lahaina, where $30,000 worth is sold annually. Other productions may here be enumerated, as likely to give the emigrant a full conception of the variety of produce to be raised in this genial clime and in this rich soil, which, thousands of feet above the level of the sea, within the hollows of its hilly plateaus, contains all the elements of productiveness. Indian corn reaches to great perfection, and the potato is much cultivated—though a small caterpillar-like locust enjoys the privilege of biting at it. The natural resources of the soil afford materials for cordage, tanning, mats, linseed oil, sandle wood, fancy woods for furniture, also the bamboo, banana, plantain, guava, bread fruit tree, tamarind, lime, orange, citron; of these, several will probably become articles of export, more especially the timber, banana, and several kinds of bark. Other resources, more directly dependent on cultivation, are sugar, cotton, indigo, coffee, silk, rice, hemp, kalo, cocoa, tobacco; also yams, potatoes, grapes, pine-apples, articles of kitchen gardening, such as the cabbage, onion, cucumber, tomato, gooseberry, strawberry, papaya and fig. Cotton is easily raised on dry and rocky lands abounding on the leeward side—that protected them from the trade winds; the vine also there flourishes, and the grape is of delicious flavor; as to silk, the mulberry tree yields no less than six crops of leaves yearly. The coffee is declared fully equal to the Persian Mocha. The labor employed is cooley and native—the Chinese cooley—and is always to be had at the rate of twenty-five cents per day. The islands abound with excellent harbors, sheltered by rocky heights, and with broad, sandy bottoms. Honolulu has been chosen, not because the best port, but because the residence of the king. It is easy to see how annexation to this country would advance the interests of commerce in the Pacific ocean.

The French and English languages are spoken, but the proportion of French is but a slight per centage. Had La Perouse been the discoverer instead of Cook, this might have been different. It is strange that now for years the native language should have continued to be the vehicle of public instruction, no less than of political power. This has had its influence in aiding the exclusive and selfish monopoly secured by Protestant missionaries in all the public offices of trust, and which has enabled them to become the negotiators between the government and the people, and between the Hawaiian and other nations, in matters the arrangements of which they have not failed to pervert to their own aggrandizement, keeping their positions despite all their immoralities, and raising up a fabulous reputation abroad on the strength of having worked miraculous changes; such changes—what a satire this upon the actual results!—that the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, meeting in Cincinnati, October 7, 1853, passed unanimously the resolution, "That the Sandwich Islands having been christianized, could no longer receive any aid from the Board." They had succeeded in making their own ecclesiastical law paramount; but before Protestantism commenced missionizing, we cannot say proselytizing, the decree had gone forth: "Liholiho is King, the Islands are at Peace, the Tabu system is no more, the Gods are destroyed, and the Temples are abolished!" (The tabu was the setting apart of objects for the god, which imposed restraints on property, acts and words—such as were supposed to be consecrated to him; each house having its own room for the god, its own table for the god, its own food for the god. The wife and man lived in separate tenements, not daring to eat together lest the god should destroy them. Under that regimen, the head of the nation was the king and priest.)

The Declaration of Rights contains the enunciation, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth. God has also bestowed certain rights alike on all men, and all chiefs and all people of all lands. These are some of the rights which he has given alike to every man—life, liberty, freedom from oppression, and to the earnings of his own hand and the product of his mind, not, however, to those who act in violation of the laws. It is by no means proper to enact laws for the protection of rulers only, without also providing for the protection of their subjects."

The following is the official exhibit of the pedigree on which the present dynasty is founded:

"The origin of the present government and system of polity is as follows: Kamehameha I. was the founder of the kingdom, and to him belonged all the land from one end of the islands to the other; though it was not his own private property, it belonged in common to the crown and people, of whom Kamehameha was the head, having the management of the landed property. Wherefore there was not formerly, and is not now, any person who could or can convey away the smallest portion of land without the consent of the one who had or has the direction of the kingdom."

In addition to what has been previously stated as to the governmental system obtaining in these islands, may be added that the third and fourth articles of the Constitution give all men the right freely to speak, write and publish their sentiments on all subjects, and provides that no law shall be passed to restrain the liberty of speech, or of the press; that all men shall have the right, in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble without arms, to consult upon the common good, to give instructions to their representatives, and to petition the king or the legislature for redress of grievances.

The government at a cost of $6,000 yearly, and an expense to each scholar of $20, provides a college at Lahaina, in which the sciences are taught, especially those directly relating to commerce and the construction of edifices.

The old feudal system as to the tenure of land, the occasion of such a multiplicity of wars and of such cruelty to the captured, has been abolished, by means of a sort of free-soil system, so many acres being bestowed on each subject. Those who had long resided on undisputed land, or received it from their fathers, had it bestowed on them in their own right; and although disputes which arose notwithstanding as to property, and the delay this occasioned, the distribution was persevered in, and successfully brought to a close. Certain of the lands have been sold, and the proceeds applied to government.

In a commercial view, the value of these islands to any foreign power as an acquisition, is not to be measured by the mere 6,100 miles of surface, but by the relative geographical position of the islands, as these stand out in relation to the old and new world, the western shores of America, and the coasts of India and China. It is known that all the great maritime powers have there their claims established and enforced, but it is argued that the acquisition of the islands by the United States would involve no breach of friendly relations between this country and other powers, by reason of the large amount of American stocks held abroad, and other commercial considerations, which are allowed in this day so greatly to preponderate in the councils of nations. It is true that were the islands obtained by purchase, little ground would present itself for such interference, it being never possible to establish in this hemisphere the well-nigh exploded theory of a "balance of power," and the law of nations declaring that the sovereign authority that disposes of a part of its possessions, may dispossess itself, if it so chooses, of the whole. There appears, however, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, little chance of the island immediately passing out of its present rule; not only has the United States government made no formal offer for the purchase, however resident consuls may have sought to bring such an annexation about, but the King has lately made the declaration that France, England and the United States were the main supporters of the independence of his throne.

The intending emigrant, having learnt from what has been said the perfect independence, so far as not affected by ecclesiastical law, that reigns throughout the island, will do well to content himself with a consideration of the advantages there pertaining to agriculture, and not allow his interests to be influenced, and his action in taking possession of so fair a field of enterprise delayed, by any international question.

Correspondence.

ENGLAND.

From our Liverpool Correspondent.

LIVERPOOL, March 9, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR BROTHER TAYLOR: In answer to your esteemed request to send you occasional correspondence for the columns of THE MORMON, I will say that it will afford me great pleasure to do so, as far as my regular duties will allow me, and I feel that thereby I shall be helping to strengthen things all round.

The first number of the MORMON came to hand on the 5th instant. I was certainly pleased to see it. It is a bold-looking sheet, and I must express my satisfaction with the clearness of the type, and the quality of the paper. The vignette is very expressive and suggestive, beautiful too, and singularly appropriate. The contents are instructive and edifying, and it shall be my prayer that, under the inspiration of the Almighty, you may be able to make the MORMON a true reflex of "Mormon" principles, not only in regard to what are termed spiritual or heavenly things, but also in regard to what are called temporal or earthly things. I shall be happy to see the MORMON, under your able guidance, setting forth before Columbia's sons and daughters the way of life and salvation, physically and morally, socially and politically, for "Mormonism" is not like the religions of the day—too powerless or too mystical to be brought to bear on the course of every-day life. On the contrary, "Mormonism" is able to save to the utmost all who will come to it in an obedient spirit—it will bless them with a temporal salvation in the life which now is, and also with a spiritual salvation in the life which is to come, if there must needs be any distinction made. Truly has it been said that "Mormonism" embraces all truth, and quite as truly may it be said that it circumscribes and provides for every want of man.

With the MORMON in the East, the LUMINARY and the anticipated Cincinnati Journal in the West, and the DESERT NEWS in the lap of the mountains, laying down, so plainly that the wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein, the great principles which will save and exalt the nation—with all these reflectors of celestial light shining with undiminished splendour upon the American people, they will be blind indeed if they cannot see the path in which they must walk to maintain inviolate the principles of their glorious, heaven dictated constitution, and sanctify their country from the corruptions and abominations that now abound on its face.

"What shall be done with Utah?" appears to be quite a bewildering question to Uncle Sam. The wisest plan for him to follow, unless he turns to and good naturedly assists her to realize her high aspirations, will be to let her alone. But "fools will be meddling," and Uncle Sam cannot for the life of him keep his fingers out of the pie. He must and will have a grand flare up with somebody—not much matter whom. If he can't kick up a jolly row with a big power, he will with Mexico, or Cuba, or Utah. Failing there, he will fight the poor Indians sooner than give up the chance. A brave fellow he is—he seems to believe that it is his "manifest destiny" to fight somebody, and fight he will.

I was highly amused the other day in reading a suggestion, in the New York Tribune of the 19th ult., to settle the Utah question by breaking up the Territory and parting it between California, Oregon, Nebraska, and Kansas. Let it be done, and we will soon have a voice in the Legislatures of four sovereign States, and not only in them but in Congress too.

A copy of the New York Herald of the 14th ult., came to hand this week. The editor favours us with certainly quite a spicy article. He has drawn a graphic and prophetic picture, but he has not the key to it. He has clearer conceptions of the truth than many can boast of, but even he cannot comprehend the proper relations of the different parts to each other, and the exalted laws by which they harmonize as a great whole. Let him wait, and grow in the knowledge of the truth if he has a mind to. The time is coming when secret things shall be proclamed on the housetops. He may then be further instructed and edified among the rest.

The work of the Lord in Britain is growing day by day. The present winter has been a very severe one, and the poor have suffered great privations, owing thereto, and to the war, shortness of trade, high price of provisions, &c. In this, of course, the Saints have had to share, and consequently they feel more and more the necessity of gathering out of Babylon, that they may escape her plagues. I have already sent nearly as many Saints to America this season as went last season, yet I have now about fourteen hundred names for passage, and more come in every day. I have chartered the ship Juventa, to sail for Philadelphia on the 30th inst. I have not been able to procure ships so readily as I could wish, but I shall send off the emigrants as soon as I conveniently can. Ships for Philadelphia are very difficult to obtain.

Respecting the news of the day, there is abundance of it here, and of an eventful character, too. The death of Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, March 2d, astounded the people of this hemisphere, and as the papers say, all Europe now breathes more freely. The London Times of the 7th inst. says—"Throughout Europe the death of the Emperor Nicholas has been followed by an immediate rise in the value of all public securities, and by a feeling of increased confidence and hope." His eldest son assumed the reigns of government the same day, under the title of Alexander II. Nicolajewitsch. He is understood to be of a pacific disposition and the representative of the pacific party in Russia, while his brother, the Grand Duke Constantine, partakes more of the belligerent.

Great expectations are now entertained that peace will be concluded in the new Vienna conference. Meantime the war is pushed on without relaxation. An order of the late Nicholas recalls Prince Menschikoff from the Crimea. Prince Gortschakoff takes command of the army of the south, with General Ostensacken in the Crimea, and General Luders on the Pruth. The French Emperor orders the siege of Sebastopol to be pressed forward with vigor, and everybody says that he is going to the Crimea in person, and that the preparations are all made for that event. The Russian Crimean army is understood to amount to one hundred thousand men. The Allied army before Sebastopol is computed at one hundred thousand, the Turks at Eupatoria forty thousand, under Omar Pasha, making the Allied forces in the Crimea one hundred and forty thousand. Arrangements are being made to strengthen the English army there with ten thousand men from this country, seven thousand from India, fifteen thousand Piedmontese, twenty thousand Turks commanded by British officers, and whatever soldiers may enter the Foreign Legion. On the part of the French it is said that great activity prevails, and that not less than seventy thousand men will leave the ports of Toulon and Marseilles for the east before the middle of May. A grand attack on Sebastopol, it was reported, was to come off on the 25th ult., and the captains of all the transports had received an intimation from Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons to have their decks cleared and prepared for the reception of the wounded. The St. Jean d' Acre was reported as about to lead into the harbor, making a clean run at and over the barrier of sunken ships at the entrance. The Russians, having failed in their late attack on Eupatoria, are reported to have abandoned their position near that place, setting fire to the villages as they went.

Quite a stir has been recently made in the political world by the publication of a pamphlet at Brussels, or as some some say Paris, entitled, De la Conduite de la Guerre d'Orient, mémoire addressé aux Gouvernement de l'Empereur Napoleon III. par un Officier General, and said to have originated with Prince Napoleon.

The pamphlet professes to reveal some of the "secrets" concerning the origin and conduct of the war—how that it was the Emperor Napoleon who originated the Crimean expedition, how the allied generals and commanders disagreed at the Varna council of war when the expedition was decided upon. The pamphlet condemns the expedition, and speaks in favor of a Danubian and revolutionary campaign instead. The pamphlet was immediately suppressed by the French government.

Vast preparations are being made for the Baltic campaign this year. The English fleet is to consist of "100 pennants" including 5 12-inch floating batteries cased with 4 1-2 inch iron plates, 10 mortar boats, and 20 gun-boats all propelled by steam. The French are to send a large land-force and 50 vessels of war, including the same number of floating batteries, and mortar and gun boats as in the English fleet. An English firm have contracted to convey the French troops to the Baltic.

As if in harmony with the belligerent tone of matters, in Europe, from Australia come tidings of riot among the "diggers" and "indignation meetings" against the Government among the citizens; while from the Cape of Good Hope come rumours of another approaching Caffre war. Truly does it seem as if peace was taken from the earth.

PREPARATION FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF GOD.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

PREPARATORY to the undisputed reign of God over all that dwell upon the earth, is the removal of incorrigible foes. It matters not whether his hand is directly engaged in their removal, or whether mankind become the instrumentality of their own destruction. Both direct and remote agencies however will be employed until the earth is swept as a threshing-floor, and the chaff is separated from the wheat. But there is nothing transpiring in the cabinets of uninspired Potentates, that is in any true sense casual or accidental. The movement of warlike hosts is as much under His dictation as the counsels of his anointed prophets. The wicked are his sword and lawfully appointed in their times and seasons to slay the wicked. Many nations will doubtless be reduced in numbers to compartive handfuls, before those who remain will be sufficiently humble to receive more exalted principles. Hence the desolations which are taking place in the earth do not furnish so much cause for mourning, as does the wickedness which causes the desolation. The achievements which the Destroyer is making over mankind and will continue to make, when timely repentance does not precede, is only the guage, which shows how far justice is triumphing over crime, or, how far the retributive law of God is executed against evil doers. But with thousands that die in war under the agency of Despots, death is a release from the rod of the oppressor, and a multitude of sins are atoned for. But not exactly so, with ambitions despots whose broader responsibilities forbid such a limited atonement and suffering.

But when the wisdom of human Governments is confounded in their disastrous overthrow, then and not before, can the kingdom spoken of by Daniel be introduced with acceptance. There may be apparent exceptions to this idea, but the general proposition is correct. These exceptions however are more apparent than real. Two of the most striking illustrations exist in the case of two prophets, Joseph and Daniel. Joseph was a Prime Minister, under Pharosh, an Egyptian Monarch, and conducted the affairs of a great Idolatrous Kingdom, as much as Lord Palmerston or John Russel ever did the affairs of the British Government. And the nation prospered under his wise and wholesome administration. He did not meddle with their consciences or their personal rights of worship: neither did they interfere with his religion, so long as he administered equal justice, and secured sound prosperity to the Egyptian realms. Neither did they discard his laws and Institutions, because he was a servant of Cloheina, or an unhypocritical believer in the superintending wisdom and power of God. Neither did it seem to matter to them from what source he got his superior wisdom and power, provided his counsels and institutions produced union, stability and prosperity.

Now if some of the members of our modern Congress would take a few lessons from the old Egyptian examples of toleration and liberality, they would be none the less qualified to honor their constituency and preserve the Union of the United States. Some of these pious Congressmen almost persuade me that they wear their Bibles for Shoe-taps, instead of retaining any portion of them in the higher attitude of the heart, or head, when they talk against the familiar Institutions of God and his wisest Patriarchs, both as a novelty and an immorality. Doubtless they would shake with a holy abhorrence to see Brigham Young, or Heber C. Kimbal occupying a seat in the Senate Chamber, much as the lofty Pharisee did, to see the Son of God polluting Herod's Judgement Hall. But the progress of a few years may convince some of these gentlemen, that they "bark up the wrong tree" who utter contemptuous insinuations against the God of Abraham, on the score of immorality. This is an age of changes and calls for great men and good men, and men too, that have at least put off the dirty doubles of blue-bellied bigotry. It calls for men who have been long and faithfully proved, by integrity, virtue and patriotism, to be fit for great emergencies. Such men are Brigham Young and his council. And this sort of men we expect an intelligent people will honor by giving them equal rights in the Federal Union and an equal eligibility to the Presidential Chair. Men who have overcome greater difficulties than Columbus or George Washington ever did, and now sit in triumphant contemplation of systematized energies that ought to make this nation proud of their offspring; these men are fully reliable in any emergency and must and will be looked to, in the angry state, of her greatest troubles, to stem the surges of revolution and intestine war.

If Col. Steptoe has refused the office of Governor in the place of Brigham Young, which any highminded man like Captain Stansbury and Judge Read, would most promptly do, we trust that President Pierce will sanction the unanimous choice of the people of Utah; and enjoy the gratitude of a patriotic and lion-hearted people. The laws of New England whose ancestry constituted a portion of that valient band who first stepped upon Plymouth Rock, have been equal Pilgrims in planting the present organization of Utah. Let them enjoy then the boon of a Governor of their own unanimous choice. The man who like another Moses has led them through the Red Sea, and fed them on the richest viands in a dry and thirsty land.

What will the next generation say of a people and government that denied this small boon in a free popular government to such a Spartan band of lion-hearted sufferers?

But if sectarian bigotry and prejudice triumph a little longer against well earned merit, still, all is well, and God reigns and Brigham is his prophet: and Utah will grow fatter fed on pulse and lentiles, than blear-eyed demagogues will do on defalcations and abuses of power. But there is an honorable few among Editors and philanthropic Statesmen, who are not so sure that wisdom will die when they die, and are therefore willing to let the Mountain Baby, Utah, grow into manhood, that it may be seen whether Mormon principles can be successfully incorporated with civil and domestic institutions, under Federal Constitution. Is it not the very summit of cowardice for thirty-one confederated sovereign, populous States, to pitch in upon this Mountain Infant, and attempt to smother and stifle its breath for fear of its wild boyhood, or its giant manhood. Let Utah come into the Confederacy under just and equal privileges with her sister Territories and States; and if she lags behind or runs before her confederates whose business is it, so long, as peace union and patriotism crown all her acts. Let her earn all the merit and glory she can, in the way of wild doing, and if she fails upon fair trial to convince the Nation that her principles are correct, the failure of her experiment will be at her own cost. But if, the proscription of one eyed Zealots is to be the law and voice of Congress, and exclude Utah from the same race-course of other Territories, then, the religion of a people will constitute the test of admissibility into the Union.

When that day shall fully come that Utah, peaceful, patriotic and law abiding as she ever has been, shall once be denied admission into the Federal Union on account of her religion, then, and in that same day, victory will perch on the flag of Despotism, and every sort of religion and policy that is obnoxious to the dominant party will obtain a precedent for utter extermination, even to the death. The Catholic or the Jew, the Slaveholder or the Abolitionist, each in their turn, is liable to be victimized unto destruction. The moment that religion, of any kind, constitutes a civil disability, that moment a fatal step is laid on the stair-way to any conceivable degree of despotism. And it is in vain for the opposers of Patriarchal Institutions to undertake to gull the public with any other idea. When impartial toleration to Mahomedan or Jew, Mormon or Shaker, is forbidden, then, all, all, anchorage to the ship of constitutional liberty has ceased, and she becomes the speedy and hopeless victim of every gale however strong and fatal.

BRO. TAYLOR, Dear Sir: After leaving your place, on the 22d of Jan. last, I took the afternoon Express train of cars for Boston; we moved on pleasantly, until we got within nine miles of Worcester, Mass., when the cars run off the track, throwing one car over a bank some fifty feet into the timber, and the balance of the cars into a confused mass. No person, however, was seriously injured. I was seated in the back part of the second car and it threw me on my feet, to the forward part, without any injury. On returning to my seat, I found it in a mass of splinters. An express was sent to Worcester for an extra train of cars, which shortly came and relieved us of that unpleasant situation, and we arrived in safety at four o'clock, in the morning, at Boston. I left Boston in the afternoon train, for this State, the field of my mission. On my arrival in the north western portion of this State, in the County of Oxford, I found, to my astonishment, snow to the average depth of six feet, with good sleighing and abundance of cold weather. I have now entered fully upon the field of my mission; the Lord has blest me with his Holy Spirit and has opened the way before me, thus far, with peace and safety: He seems to be pouring out his Spirit upon the honest in heart in this part of his vineyard. I have organized a branch of eight members in the town of Mexico, and appointed Bro. Osgood Virgen to preside over it, and I have a number to baptize there in the Spring. I also organized another branch of nine members in the town of Newry, and appointed Bro. Josiah Smith to preside over them, and have some to baptize there in the Spring. Although gross darkness prevails over the face of the land, and men have fallen into a deep sleep of lethargy, many are inquiring the way to life and eternal salvation. I have spared no pains either day or night in laying before them the true principles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I arrived in this part of the State on Saturday evening last, and found two papers of your publication, THE MORMON. You have merited honor to yourself, and to the cause that you represent, to this Nation, and to others, with that beautiful sheet, so full of intelligence. I admire also its mottoes and heading! they are very significant, and I must say that, as a whole, it is worthy the patronage of the Saints, as well as all men that are seeking after truth, intelligence, and the true way to life and eternal exaltation. It is certainly the true representative of Mormonism.

E. B. TRIPP.

We are glad to hear of Bro. Tripp's success and pray that God may bless and prosper him in his mission. We shall be pleased to hear from him often.—[ED.

From our Utah Correspondent.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY, } February 7th, 1855. }

To the Editor of the Mormon:

HAVING commenced a correspondence with you, and continued it every mail since I first saw your prospectus, and as the Eastern mail arrived on the 6th, and leaves on the 8th., we take the hurried opportunity of again posting you up a little on Utah affairs. The Supreme Court has been in session for several days, Hon. Chief Justice John F. Kinney presiding. The question which has occupied its attention, is listening to the arguments of counsel, growing out of a question under the Fugitive Slave law. The holidays still continue. The Typographical Association of Deseret had a large party at the Social Hall, on Friday the 2d of February. The Mormon Battalion are enjoying themselves in a grand party, which commenced yesterday at 2 P. M. and is resumed again to-day; how long it will continue I cannot tell. It must be quite a change for the brave men, who marched on foot at their country's call, two thousand miles across the desert, sometimes ninety or one hundred miles without water; carrying their muskets, and an extra amount of ammunition; living mostly on half and quarter rations, and when their teams failed, drawing their baggage wagons themselves; and thus enduring toil and fatigue unparalleled in the history of military campaigns, and expecting most of the time to be attacked by a far greater number of the enemy. These gallant fellows are now participating with the society of their wives, children and friends in one of the most splended festivals ever enjoyed in this country; so the world changes, and it is right the brave fellows should enjoy themselves.

Indian Walker died on the 29th day of January, at Meadow Creek, near Fillmore City; fourteen horses, several squaws and prisoners were killed on the occasion, as an escort for the chief into the next world—rather a strange religious tradition to be sure, nearly as much so as burning candles on coffins of the dead, to light them through the middle state;—a quantity of valuable presents and a letter from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, which he had received the day previous, were buried with him.

The weather has been very fine all winter, with the exception of about two weeks in the fore part of January. The principal part of the winter has been occupied by the workmen laying the foundation of the Temple. The Endowment House is nearly complete; the laths are ready to be nailed on, to be followed by the plasterers and finishing workmen. The sugar works commenced their operations on Thursday last. Presidents Young, Kimball, and Grant, with myself and others, went down to see them, and in about five hours they rasped about four hundred bushels of beets into pulp, which will run through a very fine seive, and it is very evident that Elder Taylor has picked up some splendid machinery for these works. To-day they have sent up one hundred and twenty-seven and three-quarter gallons, to be distributed among Zion's workmen; and my clerk, Tho. Bullock, has been guaging a cask which will contain five hundred and twenty-four and three-quarter gallons, to be constantly on hand for distribution; this causes the men and women to smack their lips with the prospects of sipping the sweets of home manufacture. The public works distribute from four to seven beeves every week among the hands, and every family is pretty well supplied with potatoes, and other vegetables; so you will perceive they are in a far better condition for the comforts of life than they have hitherto been. The Presidency have directed that the big ditch on the North Temple street be extended to the river Jordan, that in case any more floods shall come down from the mountains, we may in a measure be prepared for them. The Dramatic Association have closed their proformances for a season, having performed several new pieces to the satisfaction of the play-going public. The brethren are now actively engaged in making a road past the Warm Springs, north, over the swamp, that many persons have fancied to be bottomless, on account of the difficulty they have experienced in crossing it. The United States dragoon horses have not eaten up the entire amount of grain raised last season, and and it is generally believed there will be sufficient to comfortably support the inhabitants until another harvest. The officers have experienced the most cordial feelings from the citizens and have often expressed that the Legislative party was the best and handsomest ever got up. They have frequently said they intended to reciprocate the favor, but that it was impossible to excel it. The weather has been exceedingly fine, with the exception of the first two weeks in January, and the health of the people in the valley is excellent. Elder B. B. Messenger is now engaged teaching the Clerks of the Historian's Office the Deseret Alphabet. Respectfully yours, &c.,

GEO. A. SMITH.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

RAILROAD IN CALIFORNIA.

By late advices from the land of gold we learn that they intend to put some of the precious metal into circulation. A company called the Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, are to proceed at once to construct a railroad nearly fifty miles in length. The route to be pursued is from Sacramento City up the south side of the American river for twenty-one miles; at this point (near Negro Bar) it is intended to cross the river, and to be continued in a northerly direction till it reaches Marysville, and from there to Tehama, on the Sacramento river, crossing the emigrant road through Noble's Pass, a little below the latter place. Robinson Seymour & Co., of this city have entered into a contract for its construction and are to ship the locomotives, cars and iron immediately.

Messrs. Robinson, Seymour & Co. are to pay every expense except the right of way and are to receive in cash and securities: $800,000 in full capital stock of the company at par; $300,000 in cash; $500,000 in first mortgage, ten per cent. bonds at par; and $200,000 in the promissory notes of the company, payable as following: $70,000 within thirty days after the track is laid on first twenty miles, $60,000 within sixty days, and $70,000 within ninety days after said track is laid.

From the great business transactions in Sacramento, and the amount of travel and transportation on this route, those investing expect to realize great profits. It is in contemplation to extend the road, as soon as practicable to Nevada; and from Sacramento to San Francisco Bay. The first twenty miles are expected to be in readiness by next July.

By the arrival of the George Law with dates of the 1st of March and 317,800 in gold, we have further advices, as to the state of finances.

The banking establishments now open are those of Palmer, Cook & Co.; Lucas, Turner & Co.; Tallant & Wild; Drexel, Sather & Church; Wells, Fargo & Co.; B. Davidson, and Sanders & Brenham.

The Banking house of Page, Bacon & Co. was opened the day before (Feb. 23) to special depositors, and to parties having property in their custody for safe keeping were allowed to withdraw it. The bank opens again to-day (March 1.) Adams & Co., have confessed themselves insolvent, and have applied for the benefit of the insolvent act.

RAIN.—The harvest of the miners had commenced and it had rained steadly for seventy-two hours. In El Dorado county alone it is supposed there is enough of dirt heaped up, waiting for water to wash out $8,000,000.

On the morning of the 18th, the St. Charles Hotel and Hillmans Hotel were destroyed by fire; estimated loss about $50,000. In Nevada sixteen houses were burned on the 10th; and in Stockton twenty-five houses were destroyed by fire on the 21st.

The Indian troubles in the vicinity appear to be increasing. Some ten white men and about seventy Indians have been killed.

The ordinance authorizing the funding of the city debt of San Francisco—$1,500,000, at 8 per, cent per annum—has passed the Common Council and is now before the Legislature.

The American Theatre, in San Francisco, was sold a few days since by the Sheriff for $30,000, a sum much below its orignal cost.

The Anniversary of the Birthday of Washington was celebrated in San Francisco by a general turnout of the Fire Department, and by appropriate cerimonies in the Metropolitan Theatre.

The native Californians have held several meetings in San Francisco, for the purpose of taking steps to emigrate to sonora.

Col. Walker has received a grant of fifty leagues of land in Nicaragua and will leave here in a few days to colonize the grant.

The grading of the Sacramento Valley Railroad is progressing rapidly. Several hundred laborers are at work, and it is believed the grading will be completed by the 1st of May.

Gov. Stevens of Oregon has made treaties with several tribes of Indians in that Territory upon terms satisfactory as well to the Indians as to the whites.

The Mint is answering the demand for coin as fully as possible. About $60,000 a day is turned out, and the coinage for the month amounts to $1,250,000.

The news from China is to December 10. The French had besieged Shanghai, and had destroyed a small fort near the east gate.

THE GRAPE AND WINE CULTURE AT LOS ANGELES.

To a gentleman who has been several years engaged in the grape business we are indebted for much valuable information. He estimates the number of vineyards in this county at 125, each producing at a fair calculation 70,000 pounds of grapes annually, making in the aggregate over 9,000,000, of pounds. The value of these grapes at the vineyard vary according to the time they mature and are in condition for shipping, ranging from 3 to 20 cents per pound. Three-fourths of the whole amount shipped, it is estimated, would not exceed 3 1-2 cents per pound. Large quantities are wasted from inattention and mismanagement, being often neglected until a heavy rain rendered them completely valueless.

From a rough estimate we put down one-half the entire crop as being manufactured into wine and brandy—one-quarter sold for shipping and one-quarter for domestic use, including the amount wasted and destroyed. Not far from 100,000 gallons of wine and brandy are manufactured annually in this county, which is valued at $2 per gallon. About $50,000 has been paid out by shippers for grapes the past season, far exceeding in amount the shipments in any previous year.—[Los Angeles Star.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ENGLAND.—The most curious feature in the situation of English politics, is the present position of the Sevastopol Inquiry; and the discussion as to promotion by purchase, which is easier to attack than defend.

FRANCE.—Two new armies are being drawn together; one at Lyons, to be called the Army of the South; the other to be designated, indeed, the Army of the East, but the main strength of which will be encamped in and about the neighborhood of the capital, and which will be, to all intents and purposes, the Army of Paris.

ITALY.—The Sardinian Chamber of Deputies has adopted the bill for the Suppression of Convents and other Ecclesiastical Corporations by a majority of 117 votes against 36.

BELGIUM.—There is a Ministerial crisis at Brussels. The Cabinet has resigned in a body. M. de Brouckere having failed to reconstruct the Ministry, one of a more liberal caste is anticipated.

DENMARK.—The King is reported seriously ill, and the symptoms considered alarming. The bulletins say that the cough is violent and fever severe, with great restlessness.

The Committee of the Volksthing has resolved not to admit the excess illegally charged on the national budget by the late Cabinet for military, naval, and other purposes. The ex-Ministers are to be impeached.

SWITZERLAND.—The Grand Council of the Canton of Geneva, has adopted the maxim that the Church shall be separated from the State, and a bill is provided accordingly.

PRUSSIA.—Things appear to be in a state more and more intricate. The negotiations with France are said to be temporarily interrupted by a new shuffle on the part of Prussia, and the Envoy to Paris has returned to Berlin.

AUSTRIA.—There are dates from Vienna to the 7th inst. Lord John Russell was present at the baptism of the young Princess whose birth took place a few days before. The Emperor had granted a complete amnesty to all those persons who had been sentenced by the Civil Courts for offences against his Majesty. The indictments for the same offences are also to be quashed.

CRIMEA.—Nothing new; more special details. Entire attention is directed to a pamphlet alleged to have been written by Prince Napoleon, exposing the animi and method of the war, as indicated in the private councils of the generals. The most important statements in it, as rumored, are that the expedition was suggested and planned by the Emperor Napoleon himself; that the plan was approved by the Courts of London and Vienna; that Lord Raglan at first opposed it, but was over-persuaded, not overruled, by Marshal St. Arnaud; lastly, that the French, wishing to assault Sebastopol immediately after Inkermann, were overruled by Lord Raglan.

CHINA.—The civil war rages as fiercely as ever, and the capture of Canton by the rebels, and a general massacre of the officials of the old dynasty, are events looked for hourly. Trade at Canton is almost entirely stopped. During the last five weeks not a chest of new tea has been brought into the market. The rebel chief has notified to the British and American naval commander-in-chief that Canton is to be considered as in a state of blockade.

AUSTRALIA.—The latest arrivals furnish us with alarming accounts of a serious outbreak at Ballarat. It originated through a body of the diggers refusing to pay the licence fee required by Government before commencing to work for gold, and who were proceeded against by the Resident Commissioner. These men, after having escaped the search of the police officers, took refuge in the diggers' camp, and on making their appearance the diggers en masse broke out into downright mutiny. Sir C. Hotham (the Governor) despatched Major General Sir R. Nickle to the spot with all the troops that could be immediately mustered, and was to follow in person with reinforcements, including a body of sailors and marines from a man-of-war lying in Port Philip, together with some field-pieces. The district was placed under martial law, all supplies were cut off, and communication of any kind forbidden.

THE OHIO RIVER.—Pittsburg, March 23, 1855. There are seven feet of water in the channel of the river, and the water is falling. The weather is cold and windy.

WHEELING, March 23, 1855. The depth of the river here is nine feet nine inches, and is falling. Freight is arriving freely for the East.

PITTSBURG, March 26, 1855. The water in the channel of the river at this point is now but five feet five inches deep. The weather is cold and cloudy.

Information Wanted.

A DAUGHTER of John and Ellen Foulstine is desirous to know of the whereabouts of her father and mother, if living. John and Ellen Foulstine left Blackburn, England, in the spring of 1854, and sailed in the "Windermere," for New Orleans, with the intention of going to the Valley. Any information relative to them, or a young daughter about nine years of age, will be thankfully received by Joseph and Anne Harrison. Address to this office.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We beleive that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

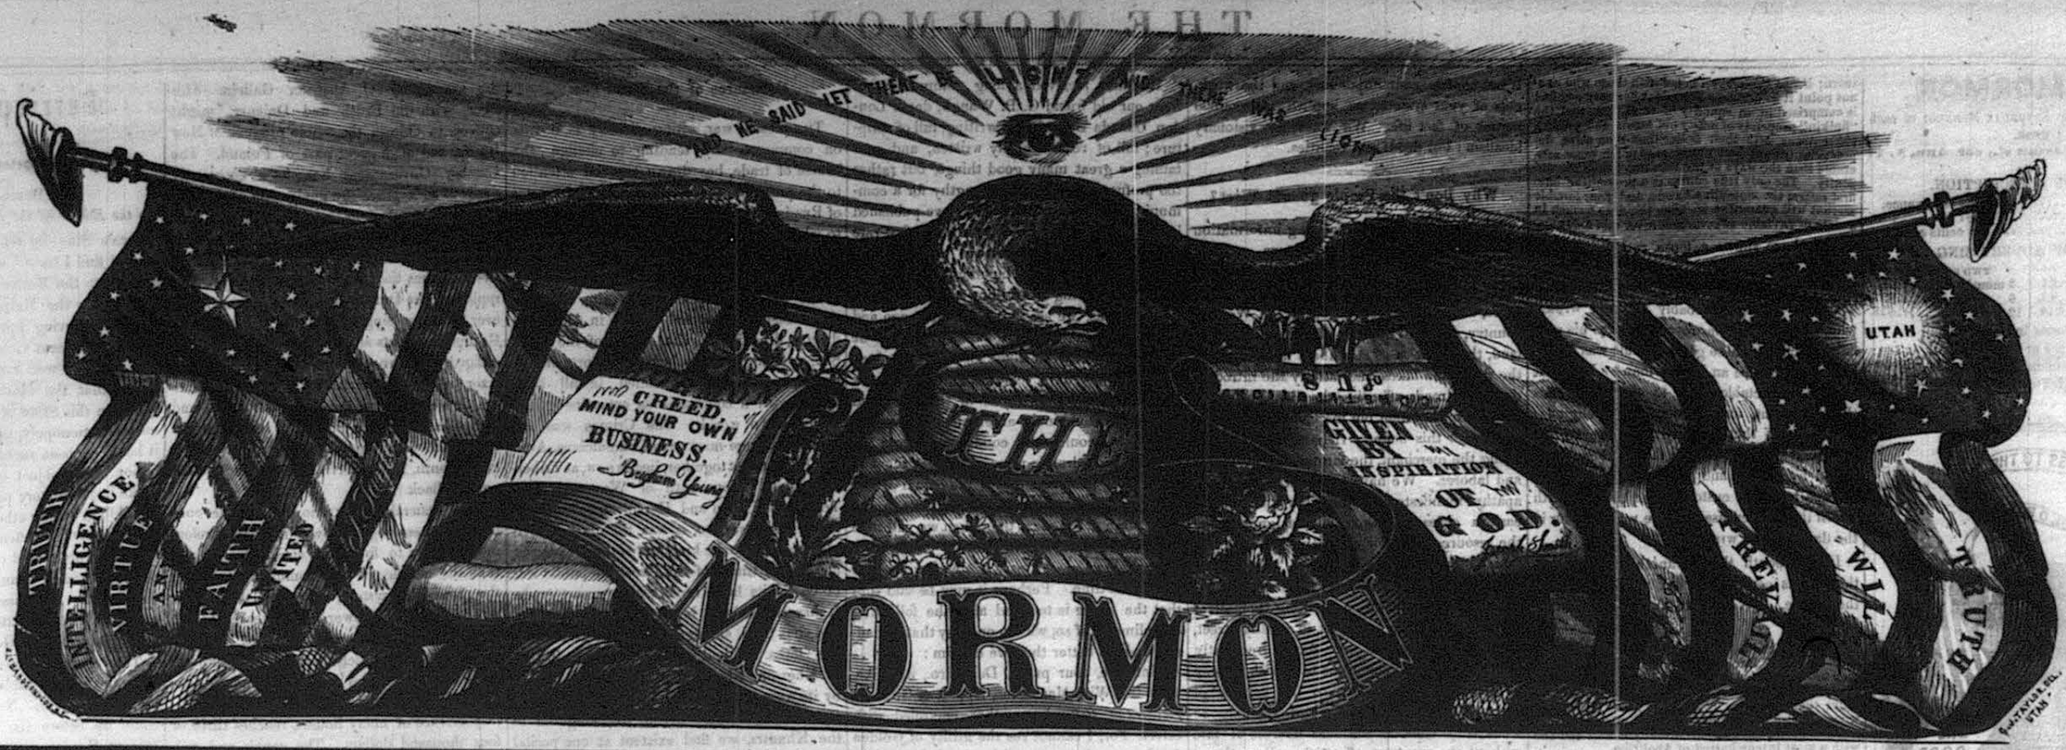
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Steel Engravings by Charles Fenn and Edwin Roffee:



New Orleans; Baton Rouge; Natchez under the Hill; Natchez on the Hill; Vicksburgh; Memphis; St. Louis; Camp at Keokuk; Nauvoo; Joseph Smith, the Prophet; Hyrum Smith, from an original portrait in the possession of his family; Willard Richards, from a daguerreotype; John Taylor; Carthage Jail; Room in which Joseph and Hyrum Smith were imprisoned; Well against which Joseph Smith was placed and shot at after his assassination; Lucy Smith, Mother of the Prophet; Ruins of the Temple at Nauvoo; Joseph Smith, Jr., David Smith, } Sons of the Prophet; Entrance to Kanesville; Council Bluff Ferry, and group of cottonwood trees; View of the Missouri River, and Council Bluffs, from an elevation; Elk Horn River Ferry; Loup Fork Ferry; Wood River; Chimney Rock; Scott's Bluffs; Fort Laramie; Independence Rock; Devil's Gate; Laramie Peak; Witches' Bluffs; Great Salt Lake; Great Salt Lake City; Heber C. Kimball, from a daguerreotype; Jedediah M. Grant ditto; John Smith ditto; President Brigham Young, also Governor of Utah Territory.

Wood Cuts by Mason Jackson:

The First No. of the above Work was published in Liverpool by Elder F. D. Richards, in July last, and will be continued monthly until complete.

Persons wishing to obtain them can leave their orders at our office, No. 102 Nassau street, corner Ann, Room No. 9. Immediate application should be made, so as to send our orders to Liverpool before the season passes for the Spring Emigration.

To the Mormon.

All hail! thou herald of brilliant worth,
Thou mirror of truth divine!
We hail thy sight with intense delight,
For the good thy folds combine.
Thou art welcom'd and conn'd by British Saints
For the truths thy columns tell,
And thus they shall prize the wide world o'er,
Where an honest people dwell.

We know thy purpose is nobly great,
Thy aim it is high and pure—
To cast truth's ray o'er the darken'd way
Of those that will light endure;
To scatter the seeds of truth afar
From worlds of celestial light,
And 'lumine the darkest spots that be
'Neath the starry infinite.

To set forth the claims of the pure in heart,
And tell what they tend to be,
In their mountain home, from the grasp apart
Of wrong and of tyranny;
And how they aspire to all of worth
'Neath the heaven's extensive span,
And cleave to the rights their fathers did,
For the happiness of man.

How they comfort the needy and poor oppress'd
With the good that right demands,
And heaven increases their power to bless,
And strengthens their willing hands;
How, their faith, restored from the worlds above,
Has a basis firm and sure,
And the spirit and feeling which bind them one,
Is powerful, free and pure.

Our character thus shall be maintain'd
'Gainst the blast of calumny,
For thy columns herald a righteous cause,
And represent the free;
And falsehood's hydra head shall cower
'Neath the power of thy truthful gaze,
And the mighty worth that thy page enfolds
Shall the honest world engage.

THE CRISIS.—1855.

NUMBER III.

THE KNOWN AND UNKNOWN POOR.

We have reviewed, for our readers, some of the causes to which the depression and ruin of this memorable winter may be traced, and by a single instance selected from among many noted on our repository, have endeavored to illustrate the general and sweeping character of our City's distress.

However, all that we have said, in our two preceding articles, was little more than introductory to the scenes we wish to depict, in order that real and substantial relief may come, and speedily come, where it is most needed.

There are still classes of sufferers, in the city at this very moment, enduring privations worthy of our deepest consideration; there are married men with families thrown entirely out of employment and compelled to solicit charity after having sacrificed to the heartless money-lender every available article, from the little comforts and adornments of a once happy fireside to the gifts and heirlooms,—tokens of friendship and family affection—nay, even to the portrait of a beloved child, and the Bible in which their marriage and its birth were fondly recorded; there are widows left to struggle alone with little children, against all the rigors of winter and its destitution; superadded to the usual disadvantages of a situation that, in the best of times, awakens the sympathy of every charitable heart; there are orphans of both sexes, and of tender years, cast almost upon the street in this labyrinthine and thronging city, without experience, without work and without friends; there are the maimed and sick of all occupations, ages and sex, lingering in downright misery, unable to raise a hand for their own succor, and, while enduring the absence of nearly every attention their case requires, left to gnaw out their own vitals with the reflection that they are burthening and pressing down the last kind heart that sustains them in their sore need; all these there are and many more by hundreds, swelling the ranks of such as, to the very last, will not betray their misery, until it has reached, the point of demonstration set forth in our second sketch; but of all, there is no class more entitled to our earnest, unhesitating commiseration and our active, persevering aid than the poor working girls—sempstresses, miliners, book-folders, binders and gold-leaf layers, tailoresses, flower workers, shoe-binders, and the countless other subdivisions of female tradesfolk who swarm and buzz all day, so cheerfully in this busy hive, when the sun shines, but, when the nipping frost comes, starve, sicken and perish, in sight of the very honey their own toil has gathered. Of these it is our present purpose, more particularly, to speak.

The lot of the sempstress has, everywhere, been hard, in these days of machinery, multiplied competition and diminished wages; the brightest and truest pages of modern continental literature have been written in their behalf, and their misery and their long endurence have been immortalized by the sweet poet who sang "The Song of the Shirt," but, until lately, we have been almost unconscious here, in our free and prosperous America, of the fact that there exist, in all our great cities, large classes of working girls whose condition is very little, if at all, better than the penury and manifold trials of their sisters across the broad ocean, where we see so much to find fault with, politically and socially, to the great glorification of our own national pride.

For a few years past,—but very few indeed,—the attention of New Yorkers has been occasionally drawn by kindly visitors to the condition of our sewing girls, and some relief has been the result of these desultory efforts, but, until the present season, there has been no comprehensive organized attempt made, upon a proper scale and under proper management, to rescue from destruction, and find place and occupation for an element of society so prolific of good or evil influences, and so precious, if correctly used and developed. During the present winter, as we are informed, a society of generous and Christian ladies residing in our metropolis, have undertaken to provide work and homes for destitute sewing girls, and we are happy to say, that in several instances, their aid has been most opportune and most beneficial in rescuing the meritorious from the depths of misery, and, perchance, of shame. Such attempts to stay the tide of wretchedness and vice, cannot be too highly lauded, yet, alas, so far as they have, hitherto, gone, they are insufficient; and we do not exaggerate, when we say that all that the most open handed and warm-souled among us can do to remedy the condition of our thousands of poor girls, now pining in the hovels and garrets of our back streets, will not be more than enough to meet their present wants.

In times of general distress, like the present, there are hundreds of cures suggested, each claiming to be infallible, each proffering a panacea for every ill, yet one is as ineffectual as the other, unless brought into operation with the rest. The columns of our journals have, from time to time, presented this and that recommendation to the public eye, but, while many a good idea has been, thus, added to the stock of the Philanthropist, a system of reasoning, or, rather, of unreason, has been inaugurated, that causes many a contribution of relief to be withheld from those who are in the direst extremity. Among the numerous measures advised by thought-contributors, to whom we refer, the exportation of our poor workingmen and girls to the country, where they stand better chances of finding homes and employment, is decidedly the best, but it is only practical, for general and quick, relief, when undertaken by the authorities, or by a Mass-society, corresponding with branch societies in various places where hands are asked for, and controlling very important means. While this species of relief is managed as confusedly and indiscriminately as it has, hitherto been, it will fail to effect its holy purpose, but will rather nourish a species of pauperism in our midst, that will soon eat up our charity and disgust even the warm American giver back into that selfishness which is the cornerstone of usurpation and absolutism in Europe.

The visitor who comes to this great mart of the New World, is accustomed to look upon its many-tinted life, chiefly through the vista of Broadway, or the West Side Avenues; and, even there, his eye seeks out only the storehouses, the palatial hotels, and the charming private dwellings, in which are displayed the taste and opulence of our wealthy classes. He has heard of the Bowery, and, perhaps, conjured before his sportive imagination the frolic forms of "Moze and Lize," and, on the railroad car or steamer that bore him hither, may have imbibed a yellow covered decoction of Division, and Centre, and Broome, and Grand streets, with sundry notions, more or less romantic, of the existence led by the thousands who populate those legendary regions. But, seldom or never, unless he be a prying and godless specimen of "this universal nation," or a savant from foreign parts, does he venture in person along these happy highways, or, if he should be so bold, the excursion extends no farther than the classic precints of the Bowery Theatre—hallowed to patriotism and peanuts.

Yet, in this over-prudence, the observing traveller loses much, for, upon the East side of Broadway from the latter thoroughfare to the river, there is a life far more various, more diversified, fuller of lights and shades, and contrasts rich and rare, in passion, and poetry than can be found in any other City on the globe, not even excepting dingy London, with its square miles of narrow alleys, or gay Paris and its Boulevards and Faubourgs. It is not our purpose to describe this life in all its phases; we have simply to deal with the one side of it, which especially relates to our present object,—a portrayal of the situation of hundreds upon hundreds of its youngest and fairest occupants.—[N. Y. Evening Mirror.

DISCOURSE

BY PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG,

TABERNACLE, DECEMBER 3, 1854.

There are two or three subjects that I wish to occupy a short time in speaking upon, and I will commence with observations upon spiritual gifts, applicable directly to "such as sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death," according to the words of the Psalmist.

In the scripture written by Job (or said to be written by him), you can read, "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding;" and in the New Testament, "In him (Christ) was life; and the life was the light of men." "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

We could turn to many other passages of scripture, alluding to what I have in my mind with regard to the inhabitants of the earth. It is believed, or has been, for I have often heard it taught by the elders of Israel, that every person of accountable age, who did not believe in the gospel of the son of God, as it is written in the New Testament, and practice it in their lives, would be damned; or in other words, if a person does not become a Saint, or what we call a Saint, he must be damned. According to the old scriptures in one sense, I can agree withathem with regard to the expression, and truly say that the inhabitants of the earth who have lived and died, and those who are now living, are all damned.

This idea brings to my mind so much not directly alluding to my subject, that I will break off, and say that we are now fighting the devils, in order to make a heaven of this earth.

Any person knowing and understanding the scriptures as they are, and understanding the mind and will of God, can understand at once that when he is shut out from the presence of the Lord; when he does not hear his voice; sees not his face; receives not the ministering of His angels, or ministering spirits; and has no messenger from the heavens to visit him, he must surely be in hell. Does the wrath of God rest upon all such? Yes, and we have plenty of it, just as much as we know what to do with. Are you not aware that the Latter Day Saints are realizing this, and saying "that it seems as though the devils are let loose upon the Saints?" Do you not know that they are liable to temptation? to feel wrath, malice, strife, envy, hatred to God, dislike to righteousness, and an inclination to dethrone the Almighty, and usurp his authority? If this is not being in hell, and if this is not the wrath of God abiding, to a certain degree, upon the inhabitants of the earth, we will wait until we find out what it is; but I cannot tell it any better in so few words.

The Spirit of the Lord, the light of Christ, and the inspiration of the Almighty, are given to every man to profit withal. All who understand the gospel of salvation, in reflecting upon the condition of their progenitors, as far back as they can trace them, have this consolation; if they were honest, if they were upright, if they lived according to the best light and knowledge they had, if they served the Lord according to all they could obtain from the priest, and other sources, and lived according to that light, are they damned? Yes, precisely as you and I will be.

It is understood, and is so written, that when the inhabitants of the earth pass through what is called the valley of death, that which is in the tabernacle leaves it, and goes into the world of spirits, which is called hades, or hell. The spirits that dwell in these tabernacles on this earth, when they leave them, go directly into the world of spirits. What! a congregated mass of inhabitants there in spirit, mingling with each other, as they do here? Yes, brethren, they are there together, and if they associate together, and collect together in clans, and in societies, as they do here, it is their privilege. No doubt they yet, more or less, see, hear, converse, and have to do with each other, both good and bad. Jesus himself went to preach to the spirits in prison; now as he went to preach to them, he certainly associated with them; there is no doubt of that. If the prophets went and preached to the spirits in prison, they associated with them; if the elders of Israel in these latter times go and preach to the spirits in prison, they associate with them, precisely as our elders associate with the wicked in the flesh, when they go to preach to them.

This is exactly what I wish to get before your minds, not but that many of you understand these principles, and again many of you have not had the privilege of hearing them. Brother Woodard, who spoke to you this morning, has been in Italy, and has never before had the privilege of gathering with the Saints. He first learned of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the restoration of the gospel, from the elders who traveled where he was, and by the Spirit of the Lord he understood.

Brethren and sisters, and all who preach the gospel of salvation, and, in short, all who inhabit this earth, I wish you to understand that the Lord has pleased to organize tabernacles here, and put spirits into them, and they then become intelligent beings. By and by, sooner or later, the body, this that is tangible to you—that you can feel, see, handle, &c., returns to its mother dust. Is the spirit dead? No. You believe the spirit still exists, when this body has crumbled to the earth again, and the spirit that God puts into the tabernacle goes into the world of spirits. What is their situation? Is there any opportunity for them whatever? Yes, there is; although there is a great deal of scripture which the priests have been pleased to make, without revelation, that contradicts this idea; and the traditions of the fathers contradict it, not the traditions of the prophets and apostles, but of our fathers, those who have lived in the dark ages of the world, and the great majority of those who live now; for I do not know of a darker period in the history of the world than that of the nineteenth century, apart from the light of the new and everlasting covenant. It is the ignorance and superstition of the people that contradict future progression in the world of spirits, for the gospel does not. There is an opportunity for men who are in the spirit to receive the gospel. Jesus, while his body lay in the grave two nights and one day, went to the world of spirits to show the brethren how they should build up the kingdom, and bring spirits to the knowledge of the truth in the spirit world; he went to set them the pattern there, as he had done on this earth. Hence you perceive that there spirits have the privilege of embracing the truth.

You may ask if they are baptized there? No. Can they have hands laid upon them for the gift of the Holy Ghost? No. None of the outward ordinances that pertain to the flesh are administered there, but the light, glory and power of the Holy Ghost are enjoyed just as freely as upon this earth; and there are laws which govern and control the spirit world, and to which they are subject.

Can we do anything for them? Yes. What are we trying to build a Temple for? And we shall not only build a Temple here, if we are successful, and are blessed and preserved, but we shall probably commence two or three more, and so on as fast as the work requires, for the express purpose of redeeming our dead. When I get a revelation that some of my progenitors lived and died without the blessings of the gospel, or even hearing it preached, but were as honest as I am, as upright as I am, or as any man or woman could be upon the earth, as righteous, so far as they knew how, as any apostle or prophet that ever lived, I will go and be baptized, confirmed, washed and anointed, and go through all the ordinances and endowments for them, that their way may be open to the celestial kingdom.

As I have requently told you, that is the work of the millennium. It is the work that has to be performed by the seed of Abraham, the chosen seed, the royal seed, the blessed of the Lord, those the Lord made covenants with. They will step forth, and save every son and daughter of Adam who will receive salvation here on the earth; and all spirits in the spirit world will be preached to, conversed with, and the principles of salvation carried to them, that they may have the privilege of receiving the gospel; and they will have plenty of children here on the earth to officiate for them in those ordinances of the gospel that pertain to the flesh.

Many people believe that the spirit of the Lord has not been upon the earth when the gospel was not among men in its purity; they believe the Spirit of the Lord has been entirely taken from the earth since the apostacy of the church. I do not believe for one moment that there has been a man or woman upon the face of the earth, from the days of Adam to this day, who has not been enlightened, instructed and taught by the revelations of Jesus Christ. "What! the ignorant heathen?" Yes, every human being who has possessed a sane mind. I am far from believing that the children of men have been deprived of the privilege of receiving the Spirit of the Lord to teach them right from wrong. No matter what the traditions of their fathers were, those who were honest before the Lord, and acted uprightly, according to the best knowledge they had, will have an opportunity to go into the kingdom of God. I believe this privilege belonged to the sons and daughters of Adam, and descended from him, and his children who were cotemporary with him, throughout all generations.

Men who are under the influence of their traditions and former notions, will desire to ask scores of questions upon this subject, but I think I can relieve your minds.

The Spirit of the Lord, in teaching the people, in opening their minds to the principles of truth, does not infringe upon the laws God has given to mankind for their government; consequently, when the Lord made man, he made him an agent accountable to his God, with liberty to act and to do as he pleases, to a certain extent, in order to prove himself. There is a law that governs man thus far; but the law of the celestial kingdom, as I have frequently told you, is, and always will be the same to all the children of Adam. When we talk of the celestial law which is revealed from heaven, that is, the priesthood, we are talking about the principle of salvation, a perfect system of government, of laws and ordinances by which we can be prepared to pass from one gate to another, and from one sentinel to another, until we go into the presence of our Father and God. This law has not always been upon the earth; and in its absence, other laws have been given to the children of men for their improvement, for their education, for their government, and to prove what they would do when left to control themselves; and what we now call tradition has grown out of these circumstances.

There is so much of this, that I hardly dare to commence talking about it. It would require a lengthy discourse upon this particular point. Suffice it to say, the Lord has not established laws by which I am compelled to have my shoes made in a certain style. He has never given a law to determine whether I shall have a square-toed boot or a peaked-toed boot; whether I shall have a coat with the waist just under my arms, and the skirts down to my heels; or whether I shall have a coat like the one I have on. Intelligence, to a certain extent, was bestowed both upon saint and sinner, to use independently, aside from whether they have the law of the priesthood or not, or whether they have ever heard of it or not. "I put into you intelligence," saith the Lord, "that you may know how to govern and control yourselves, and make yourselves comfortable and happy on the earth; and give unto you certain privileges to act upon as independently in your sphere, as I do in the government of heaven."

No matter whether we are Jew or Gentile, as the two classes of people are called; though Gentile signifies disobedient people; no matter whether we believe in the Koran as firmly as we now believe in the Bible; no matter whether we have been educated by the Jews, the Gentiles, or the Hottentots; whether we serve the true and the living God, or a lifeless image, if we are honest before the God we serve.

Brother George Q. Cannon brought me a god from the Sandwich Islands, made out of a piece of wood. If all the people bow down to such a god as that, so it is in accordance with their laws and ordinances, and their manner of dealing among themselves, the Lord permits them to do as they please with regard to that matter, and this illustration will apply to all the nations upon the face of the earth. People who fall down beneath the wheels of Jugernaut, and are crushed to death; who sacrifice their children in the worship of idols; if they act according to the best of their knowledge, there is a chance for their salvation, as much as there is for the salvation of any other person.

"Do you suppose the Hindoos have the light of the spirit of Christ?" I know they have; and so have the Hottentots, and so has every nation and kingdom upon the face of the earth, even though some of them may be cannibals, indulging in a practice the most repugnant to our refined feelings of any we know of among any people; yet that is a practice which the religious, refined and polished inhabitants of our lovely country shudder at. But let me place any member of this congregation, or the whole of them, in such a state of suffering, from year to year, that they shall never see one day or one hour's comfort, nor satisfaction of human life; when compared to a condition of that kind, the sin of killing and eating a human being would not be as great as many sins committed by the so-called Christian nations.

Can I refer your minds to circumstances of this kind among the people of our lovely country? Yes, brethren and sisters, ladies and gentlemen, scores of them. When a man has power over his neighbor, over his fellow-being, and puts him in torment which is like the flames of everlasting fire, so that he never dares to speak his mind, or walk across the street, or attend to any branch of business, without a continual fear of his oppressor, and of the rod hanging over him for punishment, it is worse than to kill and eat him. That is as the torment of hell, do you know it? Now do not be scared when you hear of the heathen engaging in loathsome practices, for I defy you to bring up a meaner or more degraded set than now exists among the so-called civilized nations of the earth.

When I heard Br. George Q. Cannon speak about the traditions of the people where he has been, I thought that some of their traditions were no worse than some of ours. They believe that no one is better capable of teaching the inhabitants of the earth than they; and I defy them to believe that stronger than we believe it of ourselves. It is what we have been taught, and what we verily believe; they have been taught the same idea, and believe it with all their hearts; then don't cast them down to hell for their honest belief.

But when the light of the knowledge of God comes to a man and he rejects it, that is his condemnation. When I have told all I have been authorized to declare to him in the name of the Lord, if he does not have the visions of eternity, it is all nonsense to him. To know the truth of my testimony, he must have the visions and revelations of God for himself. And when he gets them, and turns aside, becoming a traitor to the cause of righteousness, the wrath of God will beat upon him, and the vengeance of the Almighty will be heavy upon him. This comes, not because their fathers lived in darkness before them, and the ancestors of their fathers before them; not because the nations have lived and died in ignorance; but because the Lord pours the spirit of revelation upon them, and they reject it. Then they are prepared for the wrath of God, and they are banished to another part of the spirit world, where the devil has power and control over them.

Have not all our missionaries complained of hard times in their fields of labor? And some lately sent out are coming home. It is hard times for the brethren who are preaching in India. I understand the cause of it, and I wish to tell you, that you may understand it when you go there, or whether you go or not.

Take an artificial globe, and point out the spot where the Lord commenced to build up his Kingdom in the times before the flood: follow the history of that people down to the days after the flood; and find on the globe where their children settled, and where the confusion of languages took place; then trace the children of Israel from Egypt, follow their tracks along the sea, and in their wanderings through the Red Sea to the land of Canaan; then take the site of Jerusalem, where the Saviour was martyred; then follow the paths of the ancient Apostles of Christ, and see where they preached the gospel; and when you have followed their tracks throughout the extent of their labors, and come to those who did not reject the gospel, or had not the privilege of receiving it, you have come to the borders of the ground where the good seed can be received.

Jerusalem is not to be redeemed by our going there and preaching to the inhabitants. It will be redeemed by the high hand of the Almighty. It will be given into the possession of the ancient Israelites by the power of God, and by the pouring out of His judgments. The ground where you can sow the good seed, and where it will yield crops that you can gather, is outside of that where the ancient apostles and prophets labored. They had the light and power of God with them; and made manifest the hand of the Almighty in delivering the people, and working miracles, and saving those that were redeemed, and the people who are the most ready to receive the gospel are those who have lived without it from the days of Noah to this time.

If you can find an island upon which a portion of the people who were scattered from the Tower of Babel found a resting place, and whose inhabitants were never visited by any of the ancient apostles, and prophets, and where Jesus Christ did not visit, and who have not received any knowledge of the Father, nor the Son, from the days of the confusion, there is a spot where the Elders will reap the fruits of their labors more than any where else.

Previous to our receiving the Priesthood in these latter times, when we were members of the different sectarian churches, we used to read much about the Waldenses whom Bro. Woodward has been speaking about to day, and who inhabit the mountains, and vales of Piedmont, and from whom the Baptists say they received their authority, or priesthood. But their priesthood is no better than the Catholic priesthood. Do you think they as a people will receive the Gospel?

No. A few of them will. You recollect that Bro. Woodward said they were a mixed race, and are the descendants of those who heard, and most of whom rejected the Gospel. He said that but very few of them could read and write; and that the priest was ready to chastise those who could read, if they were known to use their knowledge. Now, they are only like the brute; they are not to blame for their superstition; and they are not the people to readily receive the Gospel. I may say, they have put their cast-iron creed into the centre of an iron casting; the creed, notions and superstitions of their fathers, their priests, kings, judges, and men in authority have been cast into one mould, and there they are stereotyped in cast iron. You may break their iron bands, and set them at liberty, and but few of them will receive the Gospel.

Why is this? Because their fathers heard the Gospel, and most of them rejected it; and the curse of the Almighty is upon them, and upon their posterity until they have wrought out their salvation by suffering; for the last shall be first, and the first shall be last. A nation which has had the privilege of receiving the everlasting covenant, and has rejected it, will be saved in the Kingdom of God, but it will be among the very last which will receive the Gospel. Perhaps you will marvel at this. It is no marvel to me, because I perceive natural principles, and sound reason for all these providences of the Almighty. All His providences to his people upon the face of the whole earth, are perfectly philosophical. Then recollect, there is a chance for all who are honest in heart. What shall we do with those who are dishonest? Let them remain with the good until the time comes to cast them away, and gather out the good.

We might say much on this point, showing you why things are as they are concerning the inhabitants of the earth receiving or rejecting the Gospel. Do you suppose they believe in Jesus Christ in Jerusalem? Can you make a Christian of a Jew? I tell you, nay. If a Jew comes into this church and honestly professes to be a saint, a follower of Christ, and if the blood of Judah is in his veins, he will apostatize. He may have been born and bred a Jew, have the face of a Jew, speak the language of the Jews, and have attended to all the ceremonies of the Jewish religion, and have openly professed to be a Jew all his days; but I will tell you a secret, there is not one particle of the blood of Judaism in him, if he has become a true christian, a saint of God; for if there is, he will most assuredly leave the Church of Christ, or that blood will be purged out of his veins. We have men among us who were Jews, and became converted from Judaism. For instance, here is Bro. Neibaur; do I believe there is one particle of the blood of Judah in his veins? No, not so much as could be seen on the point of the finest cambric needle, through a microscope with a magnifying power of two millions. This is a secret that you will perhaps find out, in a coming day, to your satisfaction. The Lord knew how to preach to the Jews, and told them what the truth was. You may as well undertake to command the most degraded of these Indian tribes, and give them arms and accoutrements, and try to put them through the regular military exercise, as to preach to the Jews to make them believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Jerusalem is not to be redeemed by the soft still voice of the preacher of the Gospel of peace. Why? Because they were once the blessed of the Lord, the chosen of the Lord, the promised seed. They were the people from among whom should spring the Messiah; and salvation could be found only through that tribe. The Messiah came through them, and they killed him; and they will be the last of all the seed of Abraham to have the privilege of receiving the New and Everlasting Covenant. You may hand out to them gold, you may feed and clothe them, but it is impossible to convert the Jews, until the Lord God Almighty does it.

We have this illustrated in the account of Cain and Abel. Cain conversed with his God every day, and knew all about the plan of creating this earth, for his father told him. But, for the want of humility, and through jealousy, and an anxiety to possess the kingdom, and to have the whole of it under his own control, and not allow any body else the right to say one word, what did he do? He killed his brother. The Lord put a mark on him; and there are some of his children in this room. When all the other children of Adam have had the privilege of receiving the priesthood, and of coming into the kingdom of God, and of being redeemed from the four quarters of the earth, and have received their resurrection from the dead, then it will be time enough to remove the curse from Cain and his posterity. He deprived his brother of the privilege of pursuing his journey through life, and of extending his kingdom by multiplying upon the earth; and because he did this, he is the last to share the joys of the kingdom of God.

Here are the Lamanites, another example—Their wickedness was not so great as those who slew the son of God. Jesus revealed himself to them after he was slain, preached to them the gospel. But in the fourth generation the priesthood was driven from their midst, and after that, the laws, ordinances, and power of the gospel ceased to be with them. Is their curse as great as that of those in Palestine? No, it is light, in comparison. They began to thirst for each other's blood, and massacred each other, from generation to generation, until they sunk into wickedness, and evil principles the most degrading, and have become loathsome and vile. Still, the curse will be removed from them before it will be removed from the children of Judah; and they will become "a white and delightsome people."

Bro. Ballantyne, and many of our brethren in distant lands write, "O how we would rejoice to have the privilege of visiting our mountain home." I would rather undertake to convert five thousand Lamanites, than to convert one of those poor miserable creatures whose fathers killed the Saviour, and who say, "amen to the deed" to this day. Yes, I would rather undertake to convert the devil himself, if it were possible.

Then I say to the elders in those regions, 'be not astonished if you see hard times,—and if I had a voice that would reach the ears of all those elders, I would say, "Leave them, and come home, the Lord does not require you to stay there, for they must suffer and be damned."

Now sisters, write to your husbands who are in regions where the gospel has been preached anciently to come home; and I say to all the elders who are in lands where the gospel has been preached previous to our day, "come away from the people, and leave them to live, and die in their sins, and ignorance." For the sins of their fathers are a sweet morsel to them, and they take pleasure in their wickedness; therefore, let them alone, and come home, and preach to the Lamanites.

There are many in this city who can bear witness to an incident I will now relate: Last Spring, when we visited Walker, the Indian Chief, he was dull, and sulky, and lay in his tent, and would not come out to meet me. I went into his tent, and the first thing he said was, "Bro. Brigham, lay your hands upon me, for my spirit has gone away from me, and I want it to come back again." He was full of anger, for his people had been fighting, and he did not know whether to turn on to the side of peace or of war.

We laid hands upon him, and he felt better. At his request, we sung some Mormon hymns, and, as we left his tent, he was full of the good spirit, and would not injure this people, no, not one particle. He was full of kindness, and love to God, and to all His works. He traveled with us to Iron county, and had dreams which amounted to revelations. If I could keep him with me all the time, do you suppose he would have an evil spirit? No, he would be filled with the spirit of the Lord.

Last Sabbath we had an excellent discourse from Bro. Aaron Farr; his spirit is good, and so is Bro. Washington L. Jolly's. Bro. Farr closed his remarks by saying, "that we were building fine houses, and neglecting the Temple of the Lord," and Bro. Jolly who referred to the same thing in his remarks. If it would not hurt their feelings, I would say, "It is none of your business if we do not build a Temple here for years." I know they feel anxious to have a place for us to administer the endowments in, and so do I.

Among those we administered the endowments to in Nauvoo, do you not think we administered to some who were devils, or in other words, full of the devil? You wish to see a Temple built, and, when it is done, some poor miserable beings will come up, and say, "we were baptized by bro. So-and-so; bro. Brigham is a charming man, and what an excellent woman his wife is! cannot we have our endowments this winter, bro. Brigham?" And they will plead with bro. Kimball, and sympathise for this, or that man, saying, "Do let him have his endowment, for he is so generous, and loving, he gave a sister a pair of stockings, and shoes; cannot he have his endowment?" Well, he gets his endowment, and what for? To go to California, and reveal every thing he can, and stir up wickedness, and prepare himself for hell.

I would rather see this people cleansed, and give the righteous their endowments, after they have waited awhile. Let the poor, and those who are humble before the Lord have the first chance. I shall not build a temple, nor commence to put one piece of hewn stone upon the foundation, or plane a board, or stick of timber for that building, until the Temple lot is fenced. If this people will pay one-fifth of the tithing that is due, we can build all that we wish.

I will venture to say that bros. Farr, and Jolly never counseled their brethren, where they have been laboring, to come up here, and pay their tithing; and yet they look to me and my brethren to do it all. To send the gospel to the nations, to build Temples, and watch night and day over the interests of this kingdom, and they have not even mouthed tithing; or, if they have, they have merely touched upon it, and when they get here, they whisper in my ear, "bro. Brigham handle them carefully on tithing, for they know but little about it."

I wish you to understand me. Wait until this people have paid their tithing, before there is any demand made on the Lord, or on His servants for a Temple. If this people rise up, and make demands on me for anything that has not been done; or complain about anything that they have done; I am ready to post up the books, and strike a balance sheet, and show whether it is you, or your president that is the defaulter.

If all the brethren understood, and would pursue a proper policy, they would do better than they now do. My policy is to get rich; I am a miser in eternal things. Do I want to become rich in the things of this earth? Yes, if the Lord wishes me to have such riches, and I can use them to good advantage. My policy is to keep every man, woman, and child busily employed, that they may have no time for hatching mischief in the night, and for making plans to accomplish their own destruction.

We see men in our streets employed only in plotting the ruin of this people. But men who are engaged in the kanyons, in stores, or in any active labor in the day time, when night comes they are glad to rest. Night is the time the idle and the indolent watch for their prey. My policy is to keep every body busy in building up this kingdom; in building houses; setting out fruit and ornamental trees; in breaking up land; in laying out fine gardens pleasant walks, and beautiful groves; and in building academies, and other places of learning.

There are hundreds of young men here who can go to school, which is far better than to waste their time. Study languages, get knowledge and understanding; and while doing this, get wisdom from God, and forget it not, and learn how to apply it, that you may do good with it all the days of your lives. May God bless you. Amen.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1855.

The Unfortunates.

VARIOUS arrests have lately been made of street wanderers, by the police of this city, by order of Mayor Wood. In the third and fourth wards thirty-five females were taken up, in one night, besides several lots from other wards and at other times.

Various have been the opinions expressed in relation to this matter, some contending that it is very proper and just; that these are nuisances that ought to be abated, others again thinking that, to the deceit and profligacy of the male sex, and to positive starvation, may be attributed the vast amount of prostitution and misery, that abound, and that the Mayor ought to strike at the root of the evil, and not persecute, as they would term it, the victims of heartless libertines and the indirect consequences of indigence and want.

Relative to the Mayor we would here express our opinion, he is properly the conservator of the peace, he finds certain evils in existence, he neither created those evils, nor made the laws that regulate the same. He did not make, but puts into practical operation the machinery that has been constructed for him; he, of course, has a certain amount of discretionary power, but cannot fulfill the duties of his office without abating all nuisances. It is the law that interprets what nuisances are, and not the Mayor. If these laws are wrong, they ought to be remedied; but he ought not to be accused of wrong for performing that which the law makes obligatory he can only be to blame in case he transcends the law.

On the other hand there is an evil, a dreadful, crying evil, pitiless, remorseless, cruel, heartrending; but it is found beneath the surface and has its origin in a perverted morality, a puerile rickety, sing-song, inefficient religion in a benumbed, seared conscience; and a hollow, unsubstantial, perverted society, an ephemeral philosophy, and a disregard of God. These shameless creatures are certainly a disgrace to their sex, deceived in many instances, it is true; inveigled, bartered, neglected, crushed; the victims of corrupt, heartless wretches; forsaken and desolate; seeking to drown painful remembrances in debauchery and carousing, until death frequently untimely ends their miserable career. Yet it is a foul blot upon society; a festering, deadly evil, that ought not to ride rampant in the face of decency and in broad open day, put to shame the last lingering remnants of delicacy, propriety, chastity and virtue.

What, however, can we effect, when such things as the following are countenanced by both male and female, in what is called polite, respectable, refined society. A correspondent of the National Democrat, in animadverting on the impropriety of taking up these unfortunate beings, says:

A man, a gentleman, a "nice young man," a "good young man," may ruin a score of young girls, and when money or convenience may incline him to marry, what says society to him for his villainy? She says merely, "Oh, what a rogue you have been among the girls!" "You've made their hearts ache!" "Oh, you naughty boy!" "But now your wild oats are all sown, and you've a dear, good little wife, be steady now, join the church, have your children baptized, pay your pew rent, and be as good as anybody." And now, if you please, audi alterem partem—what says society to the poor broken-hearted girl whose confidence has been abused, whose ears have tingled with delight from promises purposely made to deceive her? whose suspicions were lulled to sleep with a facility proportionate to the limits of her innocence and purity? whose confidence in her destroyer was solely governed and bounded by the unmeasured devotion of a faithful heart? Unmindful of consequences and unsuspicious of duplicity, she feels no wrong and suspects none; she feels the purity of her own promptings, and is governed in accordance therewith. What says society to her of the blighted heart? Society says, unmindful of charity and regardless of mercy, "Go to, thou harlot; no more shalt thou know a father's affection or a mother's love: no more shall a sister caress thee or brother embrace thee; the fondest ties of thy existence shall be severed, and the voice of wonted friendship shall be changed to Anathema Maranatha forever!" And thus the poor girl wanders forth, a fugitive from wrath, in the dread realization of that more than dreadful pleonastic curse held over the Israelites.

"Ye shall be sold for bondwomen, and no man shall buy you!" "In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning!"

"You shall pray for bread and receive a stone; you shall desire to do right, while an unyielding conventionalistic curse continually impels you to wrong."

The same cause which impels the forsaken to haunts of infamy, still operates to keep her there; she can endure everything rather than the finger of scorn; hence she seeks a home with those who cannot point it at her—she conceives her only comfort is comprised in an equality of condition; and the "finikin" propriety of musty old maids, and prudish old matrons, with their holier-than-thou-ative deportment toward her, would render her more miserable than the wiles of the wanton; hence the difficulty. The only true course is a preventive one; first reform the masculine bawds, and your humble servant will guarantee to keep the dear women in a state of enviable sweetness forever and a day.

The above shows a loose, reckless, corrupt state of society; how much better are the parties that wink at these things, than the heartless, corrupt, probably perjured wretch who, after having destroyed, forsakes his confiding victims, whose greatest fault was in believing him to be an honest man? Yes, that man is respectable, goes to church, attends the sacrament, and is moral and religious; but we say if there is a God in heaven, the mask will be torn from the face of these abandoned hypocrites, and the complacent, polite, corrupt, heartless customs—the cobwebs with which they are encased will be rent asunder in the day of God's wrath.

In the South there is another outlet; but the morals certainly as lax and debasing as the above. We quote from Mrs. Swisshelm:

"Experience has taught us that Southern women are more intensely attached to slavery than men are—that they will more bitterly resent any attack upon it, and are rather more likely to be cruel than the other sex. Find a Southern lady whose husband has a dozen black mistresses and any number of slave children, and you will find one with a most insane hatred of Abolition.

"A clergyman, of high standing in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, teld us he had heard young ladies talk, in one of Southern States. The conversation was upon beaux, when one, an heiress, belle and beauty, expressed her total disapprobation of a young gentleman, because he had no slave children. She did it openly and without a blush. He questioned her, to be sure that he understood her aright, and she assured him that it was customary for a young man, when quite young, to select some one or more of his father's slave girls, as mistresses, that their children were considered as belonging to him, and so, when he married, he had some one to wait upon his wife; and the fact that the young man in question had made no such provision, she held to be a good reason that he would not make a good husband.

"It is certain that Southern women do not all feel thus, and that many who do would not express the feeling to a stranger; but the publicity which is universal, about these illicit connections proves that the women of the South cannot be heartily opposed to them, for women do create, or at least sanction, the public sentiment of the society in which they move."

The first of these we have known to be a fact; we were scarely however prepared for such revelations as those made by Mrs. Swisshelm, but coming from an accredited writer and the words of a clergyman quoted, give it, at least a semblance of truth. What is the matter? There must be something decidedly, radically wrong in society, something at the very basis the root and foundation of society; these things are merely the excressences; the outward manifestations of a sickly, diseased, effete moral system the effects of a deadly hidden cause. The disease cannot be lopped off by striking at these unfortunate beings, you only remove a little of the outside evil, the mouth of a sewer is not the source of the filth that plows through it. A Farmer or Horticulturalist has weeds in his farm, or blighted fruit in his garden, he is intelligent he looks to the cause, that, he removes and the effect ceases. But it is natural—granted; but philosophers, religionist, moralists, philanthropist and politicians profess to control nature. It is natural for briars thorns and grass to grow, but the farmer makes corn, wheat, oats, barley and other grains, take their place; it is natural for thorns and briars to grow but the gardener controls nature and raises plants, flowers, shrubs and delicious fruit; it is natural in many places for waters to overflow lands and make them valueless; but man throws up embankments and redeems the land. It is natural for man to be wild and uncultivated; but philosophy, education, government and religion steps forward and redeems the man. We need not here say what science and intilligence has done. Who is there then that can stop this moral, and social evil; an evil that is entering into all the ramifications of life and assuming every variety of phase revolting to decency and injurious to health? an evil that is not found merely on the streets, but in the habitations, that lives not only in the dingy mould of cellars and craeking desolate garrets; but in rich saloons, gilded halls and stately palaces, it riots among wealth, creeps into schools and semineries, drags its loathsome festered body to the haunts of the forlorn and distressed, and frequently feeds upon poverty, necessity and wretchedness. It is principally from the last place that it overflows, and in its brazen impudent deformity, parades the street. In this shape Mayor Wood found it; but what of all the rest? It is for moralists philosophers, philanthropists, statesmen and ministers, to stop this evil, to search for its cause and provide a remedy. Why don't they do it? Can they plead an excuse?

They have talent, education and science at command; they have large moneyed institutions; they have the power of the press, the pulpit, the forum and the bench, even popular feeling, depraved as it is, would sustain an act that would ameliorate the awfully corrupt condition of the sexes. Is it not a shame that such infamy should exist in open day and no good Samaritan stretch forth a helping hand to remove this foul stench, this fearful desolating scourge, before whose withering breath youth beauty and strength, become decrepid haggard and loathsome? Where is Philanthrophy with all its empty boasts? Answer ye men who despise the fear of God and boast in your own wisdom. If ye know a saving elixir, if you possess powers of mind, intelligence, or influence, if you know how to stop this direful, crying, deadly evil, reach forth your hand. Is religion, morality, philanthropy, jurisprudence all silent? What has the philosopher to say? There is no need of shrugging your shoulders and saying it belongs to no religieux. No, it does not exclusively, it belongs to humanity, and they are human and so are you, and while you laugh at the evident folly of religionists, and their impotency and weakness walk up and do that which you declare him incompetent of doing. We want no theorising no abstract reasoning, no nice metaphysical disquisition. Millions of the fairest portion of humanity are suffering. Can you relieve it? If not confess your impotence, and the weakness of your systems, as applied to practical matter of fact life. We want no visionary idealism; but deeds and realities.

Why Don't the People go out West?

WE are continually receiving imformation from various parts of the Western country, in relation to agricultural, mechanical and other advantages. There is, and has been for years, a continual progression in the Western country, the vast amount of rich unoccupied land, the facilities of steamboat navigation on the rivers and lakes, and latterly the introduction of railroads affording the means of transport, not only of men, but merchandize produce, &c. render this country rich in resources inviting the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic and laborer. We have been surprised at the apathy manifested by many in these large eastern cities, and their evident ignorance of the resources of their own country, or that of their adoption. They seem to hang with a rigid tenancity to the misery, bondage and uncertainty of a city life, contenting themselves with a dingy room or garret in a filthy street, living on the worst of food, frequently adulterated and deleterious to health, a prey to sharpers and subject to the caprice of every petty tyrant; they bow supinely to what they consider the hard decrees of fate without an apparent effort to relieve themselves. They become the humble suppliants for labor, and only think themselves too happy if they can obtain it, when that very labor which is here a drug and goes a begging, would find an abundant outlet in our Western States, and where the laborer would be placed on a proper, remunerative and independant footing, and tend to enrich the parties for whom he labored. When we speak of the west we don't mean the large cities, we mean the country. In various parts of Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas there are villages, saw and grist mills building, farms opening, and improvements of all kinds making great demand for labor, and where the merchant, the farmer, the builder, &c., become the suppliants, where the earth is wasting for want of culture and every facility is offered for the honest industrious man.

We say leave your meager uncertainties and grasp at something tangible and real, for yourselves and families;—go out west develope the resources of the country and live like free men.

TEN THOUSAND LABORERS WANTED IN WISCONSIN.—A thousand good laborers can find steady employment and the highest wages paid among the farmers of this county. While the poor are starving and unable to get employment in the Eastern cities, it is next to an impossibility to find laborers at any price, to cultivate the soil of the West. We have no doubt but ten thousand more good laborers could find plenty of work in this State, at from $12 to $20 per month and board, throughout the summer. We have been requested by farmers from nearly every school district in our county, to send them laborers. —[Waukesha Plaindealer, March 12.

WE welcome the projected establishment of a new line of steamers between this port and Havre, under the auspices of that great commercial pioneer—Commodore Vanderbilt. The importance of steam lines as the enlargers of commerce, is happily beginning to be appreciated. The articles which France gives in exchange of our productions, may commonly be compressed into small compass, so that a powerful fleet of steamers are essential anxiliaries to the production of new activity in our carrying trade; but there is this besides, that by the greater knowledge more rapid communication induces between commercial men, that confidence is generated and increased in amount, and is the very source of commerce. The French themselves were the first to originate a line of trans-atlantic steamers; but their organizing genius forsook them as far as practical details were concerned; economy was overlooked, as well as the then relative existing industrial conditions of the two countries, and sailors, engineers and officers, in full complement, were so bedizened with lace, that passengers setting out from New Orleans could not distinguish the one from the other. The third day out, it was found there was no sugar, wherefore, after due consultation, the vessel was put about and returned to New Orleans for a supply. How was it possible, with the extravagant ideas then entertained, that an enterprise relying for success, on punctuality and economy, the best administrative ability, and unmeasured industry and foresight and not to blazon forth mere personages as commanders, or secure post of personal honor for their relations, could succeed? Nevertheless it is somewhat strange that the South hereto should have been unable to establish such a line successfully; that northern industry and enterprise in the establishment of means of transport should have so far preponderated over that of the South, applied rather to the development of western resources, as to throw all the foreign trade into our hands. Were such a line efficiently established, we would see the city of New York depopulated of half its brokers, who would go South in search of the per centage. We would have equalized, as far as possible, the advantages of foreign trade, and are satisfied that with the extension of the territory of this country the day will come when New Orleans' foreign exchanges shall be quoted on a par with those of New York, and when the two cities with Boston shall divide the chief commerce of this continent between them.

WE have later dates from Hayti. The impression is that the proposed treaty between the United States and St. Domingo would never, in its present form, receive the sanction of the Dominican Government.

WE have received a long communication from our old friend G. P. Waugh, dated London, Canada West, full of writing, full of scripture; full of reason nicely written, and containing a great many good things, but rather too profuse, particular, and lengthy for a communication or we would gladly have published it. Bro. Waugh is an old soldier a first-rate good feeling man and belongs rather to the Lord Raglan than the Napolionic school. He believes in having everything a la system ancien, whereas, we are living in a fast age and could have taken Sebastopol by a coup de main, and sent word home for further orders, we would not have sent for a Railroad, nor have let the soldiers die off in the mud and cold. He would make an excellent correspondent if he could only condense, squeeze his ideas in an hydraulic press, or subject them to a chemical analysis; but if the axiom really be correct that two bodies cannot exist in the same place at the same time, then we will take a little at a time, imcompassed. Come, Bro. Waugh, try the old fusee again it will go off right next time. Perhaps it may be said that that the above is too bad after the following compliment; if so, we can only say that he cannot wish us better than we do him:

Unto me, your paper, Dear Bro., was like, what the Wise Man terms, Apples of Gold (in pictures of Silver,) or rather, encircled with Silver. For, I cannot see the utility of Golden Apples merely portrayed in tinsel show—and can hardly believe the translator has elicited the sentence accurately, but, "Eternal Truth it shall prevail and triumph over the Powers of Hell!" And I pray that the God of Israel will bless the efforts of your Head, Heart and hands, unto stopping the mouths and pens of every Enemy to HIS own work, to which He hath set to His hands to gather the remnants of his people in these last days—even so, Amen.

Respectfully yours, &c., G. P. WAUGH.

To the British Saints.

WE find that we have been mistaken by some of our English brethren in regard to the terms of subscription. In stating that "no subscription would be received for a less term than six months," we referred particularly to those who paid in advance, and had the paper sent to their particular address; the agents can make arrangements, however, with parties who are desirous of taking the paper regularly, by having them pay for the paper and postage weekly, on its reception.

Good News from Salt Lake.

We condense the following from the Southern Californian:

The entire business of the Great Salt Basin will be hereafter carried on with the Pacific coast. It has been demonstrated that merchandise can be obtained on the Pacific fully as cheap as in Missouri. And now that the Military Road through the borders of this State is being put under contract, a perfectly feasible thoroughfare will shortly connect the Mormon settlements with our ports, at least four hundred miles shorter than the route to Missouri.

It is in contemplation to start a train of four hundred wagons to the Pacific, over the Southern route, as soon as Col. Steptoe has opened the road for which $25,000 was appropriated by Congress.

SAN BERNARDINO.—The Southern Californian has had advices from San Bernardino, which give flattering assurande of the peace and prosperity of that Mormon settlement. It appears that there are no gambling-houses, whisky-shops, rows, or riots, in that happy community. The people are peaceable, industrious, enterprising, and thriving. The Southern Californian says:

Extensive preparations are making for the approaching season; alresdy 8,000 acres of wheat have been put in, which will go far towards obviating the necessity of importing breadstuffs from abroad. Much attention is being directed to the curing of pork and bacon, and it is confidently expected that by another year a sufficiency of these articles will be made to supply the consumption of our people. The late discoveries of gold in the Kern river country are creating quite a feeling among these people. Possessing a short and easy means of access to the mines through the Cajon pass, they are already making large calculations upon diverting much of the mining trade to their city. Several parties have visited the mining region, some of whom have returned, bringing the most flattering accounts of their richness and extent.

This is the most important movement that has ever interested the people of this portion of the State, and is destined to wield a powerful influence in behalf of the prosperity and improvement of the South.

The supplies demanded by the large and rapidly-increasing population spread over the immense country of the Salt Lakes, will develop, by its prosecution through our borders, sources of wealth far surpassing any that has yet been afforded this portion of the State, and will have the effect of building up a business which will give importance to our harbors and activity to our cities, and furnish an outlet for the productions of our valleys, that at present, from the want of adequate markets, fail to bring a suitable return.—[Tribune.

A PREVENTION OF YELLOW FEVER.—It is stated by a Havana paper, that Dr. Wm. L. Humboldt, has discovered a means of preventing Yellow fever by inoculation; the operation is said to be similar to vaccination the virus being inserted generally in both arms, a few hours after, the symptoms of yellow fever commence and all the pathological consequences slightly follows there is nothing more than a slight feverish action which continues about 48 hours.

About 1000 of the newly arrived troops in Cuba have been inoculated by order of Government.

Commerce of the Black Sea.

THE present war, acting directly as it does on commerce, and tending to change the course of trade, has drawn especial attention to the ports on the Black Sea, the character of Russia's commercial policy and the extent to which the continental nations are involved in the products brought from every quarter to the markets on its shores, and which find an outlet by the Bosphorus, are after reaching the coast transported inland in the most diverse directions. The shores of the Black Sea, now dotted with but a few ports of any consequence, once resounded in all their length with a commerce as extensive as the then known world. The Crimea was the grand exchange mart where Phœnicians, Arab and Persian met together, just as now, at Tibersond, the nations both of West and East. Traces of Milesian and Heraclean colonies are found on its surface, it was the most important appanage to the kingdom of the Bosphorus, and in the times of the Greek Republic was noted for its large import and export trade. It has successively been under the Romans, and has been subjugated by the Alans and the Goths. It had its own Republic in that of Kherson, which subsequently was placed by its own citizens under the protection of the Byzantine Empire. Beside the kingdom of the Khazars, we find existent at one period in the one thousand and one hundred square geographic leagues which the Crimea comprises, the kingdom of Little Tartary, and in its history find written the rise and fall of its Genoese colonies, its state under the Tartars, its subjugation by the Turks and its conquest by the Russians. The Russian domination which has how reigned sixty-four years, has never had any resistance to encounter or revolt to quell, yet, notwithstanding the opening of the Dardanelles, the Crimea has, to this day, been unable to rise from the deep depression into which it was sunk by the political events of the close of the eighteenth century. The population vegetates in listless quietude, not only from the destruction of material resources, but from the extinction of all moral and intellectual energy. For three hundred years from the destruction of the Genoese colonies in the Crimea, the Black Sea remained closed against the nations of the West. After six consecutive campaigns, and butchery by land and sea, Russia obtained that entire control which secured it that immense influence in the east which has served as occasion for present war. Her treaty with the Turks received more ample extension, and all other powers successively partook in the advantages of the Black Sea navigation. Catherine applied herself to the foundation of a military and commercial port. Kherson was first chosen, situate at the mouth of the Dineper, one of the largest rivers of Russia, and then abandoned for Odessa, which was under the exclusive entrepot of sea-borne goods. An ukase of a later date even allowed transit free of duty, to all foreign goods not prohibited at Odessa. Previously they might remain inland eighteen months, a favor important on account of the distance of the capital and the extent of duties. The year 1817 brought increased duties; still Odessa was declared definitively a free port without restriction. The commerce of Southern Russia then reached its height. The wars of the French Empire, depressing Russia, made it necessary to have recourse to Odessa for corn. Dazzled by this commercial prosperity, the ministers of St. Petersburgh, imagining the necessities of the world would compel vessels to clear as heretofore for Odessa, suppressed the freedom of the port, demanded immediate payment of enormerous duties, four-fifths of which were to be paid on departure of goods for the interior. Though concessions were afterwards made, in consequence of ruin brought about, trade was diverted, and Odessa ceased to become one of the principal points of arrival and exchange for the produce of Europe and Asia. The merchants of Western Asia no longer took the Odessa route to make their purchases in the fairs of Germany. The Americans who had almost exclusively the traffic between Europe and the trans-Caucasian provinces, whose goods had been conveyed by land to Odessa, and there embarked, now avoided it, notwithstanding that the commercial franchise of the Caucasian provinces was suppressed, and the prohibition system rigorously enforced. Even the Persians forsook their former route, and received the yellow amber from Prussia by the way of Turkey. Then rose Trebizond, to its full greatness, as an English mart, on the opposing shores of the Black Sea—that immense entrepot where business to the extent of twenty million dollars yearly is transacted. To this point were gathered all the manufacturers for the provinces of Asia. Important commercial line, via Constantinople, were established. The lawful import trade of the Caucasian provinces was abolished, a profitable contraband system was established, by which manufactured goods were got from Trebizond. Foreign vessels almost entirely deserted the Black Sea. The comparative remoteness of the Black Sea, its severe winters, the doubtfulness of finding cargoes, elsewhere than at Odessa, and the possible necessity, of resorting to a Russian harbor for ballast, has with the exclusive system adopted by Russia, seemed to bring this about. Then again, Southern Russia has lost its agricultural importance, from progress of agriculture elsewhere. Though the soil of Southern Russia is cheap and the price of cattle extraordinarily low, and the system of serfdom is perpetuated, yet roads have been wofully neglected, and government, which must do everything in such a country, takes no steps to facilitate transports. Kherson situate in the midst of a fertile and productive region, is only an harbor of export, and its commerce connot possibly extend. Landholders must stop their produce, by communications utterly neglected, to Odessa, for sale. The mighty Dniester, the largest of Russia rivers, has only rafts of timber and firewood floated down on its bosom from the mountains of Austrian Galicia. This river, with the Pruth and Dnieper, might convey to Odessa the whole produce of New Russia, and of a great part of Poland. The Russian Government has been constantly desirous to improve the navigation of the first named river; but its intentions in all such cases are defeated by the cupidity of functionaries, which throws up estimates of cost at twenty times the actual needed outley. The rapids of the Dnieper ere as impracticable as ever. It is singular, however, that the German colonists situate below the rapids, are obliged to convey their corn to the Sea of Azor, to find any market for it. The peasants are thus sunk into the deepest distress, and compelled to make a journey of three hundred miles each year to earn a dollar and a quarter each month, in the service of the landholders, on the Black Sea.

This general survey shows that the corn trade of these regions owes its vast development chiefly to fortuitous circumstances, and that the absence of easy communication, and the prohibition system, both tend to bring it down lower and lower every year. To all these causes of ruin, are to be added the enormous charges to which merchants are subject; those of the first class pay three hundred rilles for their license, and the postage on yearly correspondence of many houses, reaches three or four thousand dollars. The canals and railroads of Germany are depriving it of all sources of prosperity. The principalities of the Danube have made immense progress in late years, in consequence of privileges secured by the treaty of Adrianople, and notwithstanding a tortuous navigation, masters of vessels prefer proceeding to the Danubian ports in consequence of their administration facilities. Another measure fatal to commerce was the decision of the government with respect to confiscated lands of the Poles, giving these to old veterans and public servants incapacitated as much for agricultural pursuits as for civil and military duties. Pillage and neglect are the the consequence; only the Crown is enriched. Let the corruption of public officers be added, the sad effects on the town of Odessa by the withdrawment of so much produce, and we have a key to the languishment of a commerce apparently open to the competition of the world, but so restricted by the peculiar policy of Russia, liberal as far as official enactments are concerned within her own dominions, but exclusive and restrictive to all without; a foreign policy re-acting with fatal influence on her own subjects, who have always had their interests sacrificed or rendered subordinate to the leading views of Russian statemanship, which, being carried out strictly with reference to those territorial acquisitions which have always been had in view by the sovereigns of that country, and which involve nothing less than the preponderance of Russian power in the world, are locally unjust and always arbitrary. The imports of Southern Russia as compared with those at the port of Odessa show the immense amount of contraband trade. The whole trade rests on no solid basis; its prosperity is due only to accidental circumstances; and the cultivation of corn in Egypt, as matters stood before the present war, would be enough to ruin immediately all the trade of Southern Russia. Then as to navigation: vessels are exposed to long delays in the Archipelago, and still more in the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus. From causes already stated, foreign vessels have not commonly paid by freight their ordinary expenses whilst in the Danube, particularly of late years, freights have been good. What activity has reigned, is attributable to the vast number of vessels belonging to the Mediterranean, which can be cheaply chartered and cheaply manned. The total imports and exports of Kertch, Theodosia, Eupatoria, Balaklava, we believe never to have exceeded for any one year twenty million of dollars. Caprice has mutilated the commercial propensity of Theodosia, situate the most favorable of all. The shores of the Black Sea need new elements of commercial activity, which the present war may perhaps bestow.

Trip to Little Soldier's Band.

MR. EDITOR,—Being requested by the superintendent to visit, in company with Wm. A. Hickman and Elisha Ryan, the Utahs near Ogden City, some complaint having been made by Major David Moore that the Indians were killing calves and burning fence-poles, &c. We left this city on Wednesday, the 30th of November last, and arrived at Major Moore's that evening. The next morning, accompanied by eight or ten of the citizens, with three or four wagons, we repaired to the Indian camp, three miles below Ogden City, on the south side of Weber river. They mistrusted that something was up, but could not find out what it was. They were on the look out, with sentinels posted on the highest points. We found them much excited, but told them our business, viz.—that they were to go and live with the whites, a family in a place, which did not suit them at all. Little Soldier said it was a day of gathering, and not of scattering; but he finally consented to go. The wagons and their ponies took all their effects to the settlements. They went over to the Mound Fort, and camped. The next morning, we went over to see them; they had concluded not to scatter, and had sent out for all the help they could raise, but we distributed them out, and disarmed them, and left them feeling comfortably. It was a new order of things to them, and they used every argument to stave us off, but we were determined to obey orders, and found Major Moore, and others of the citizens, ready to assist us,

Yours respectfully,

D. B. HUNTINGTON, Interpreter.

NEW CANDELS.—"Fish are caught in Puget's Sound, Oregon, which when dried and lit by the tail burn like candles."

Correspondence.

From our Boston Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 29th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR—By refering to my journal of items I find I have "a few more left" which I forward to the Mormon. The friends of prohibition or the Maine Liquor Law, in this State, are having quite a season of rejoicing, over their recent victory, in the Legislature. It is probably well known to your readers generally, that the Maine Law (so called) was passed in this State in 1852, but owing to the moneyed monopoly, opposed to its operation, it has never been successfully carried into execution. The object of the present Bill is to make its prohibitory provisions more effectual, by adding, among other stringent clauses, imprisonment of the offender. Ale, Porter, Wine, and Cider are placed on an equal footing with old "Cogniac" "Jamaica" and "New England." The Bill passed the House to be engrossed the 27 inst., 291 to 51 and only awaits the signature of the Governor to become a law.

The report of the Committee, on the Loring Case, lies on the table of the House, to come up in its order. Numerous petitions have come up before the Legislature during the present Session, praying that the Volunteer Militia of the State be dispensed with: these petitions, arose from the same source, and are nearly of the same character, as those for the removal of Judge Loring. The Massachusetts Militia is the grand auxiliary of the government to carry out, and maintain the law, when emergencies arise (similar to the one in the Burns riot) under the "higher law," or what is equivalent, the mobocratic spirit of the age. The committee to whom these petitions were refered, have given a number of public hearings, and the subject has been debated with much interest. If I may be allowed, however to be a judge, in the matter, the remonstrants, have had the advantage in the argument. The competency and efficiency of the eight thousand Militia of the State were shown to be as effective as a standing army of the same size; the former costing some seventy thousand dollars per year, while the latter could not be maintained in an expence short of two milions. It was argued by the petitioners, that the thirteen thousand dollars paid to the Military for the suppression of the Burns riot, was needlessly expended, inasmuch as the police they say, would have been amply sufficient, on the occasion. Whatever may be the fact, I find but few maintaining such a belief. The honorable Neal Dow has arrived in the city and will commence a series of temperance or rather prohibition lectures in this vicinity. He is direct from Maine, surcharged with electric fluid, and I purpose occasionally to go and hear him thunder. Good luck for me that I am a temperance man.

Yours respectfully,

A. ROBBINS, JR.

Arrivals.

NEAR N. ORLEANS, March 13, 1855.

MY DEAR BRO. TAYLOR:

I take my pen to inform you of our present position and circumstances, on board the ship Charles Buck, which left Liverpool on the 19th of January for New Orleans, having on board 400 saints, and a few other passengers. The company are in good health, good spirits, and are contented and happy. It is eight weeks to-morrow since we left Liverpool. Provisions began to fail two weeks since, and during the last few days we have been on short allowance of water. The voyage has been longer than was anticipated. Nevertheless, we have had no murmuring. The Saints have been patient and happy.

We are now in the Mississippi River, being tugged up to New Orleans in company with other three ships. We crossed the Bar this morning. Yesterday cast anchor, for the night, outside the Bar, where one of the sailors fell overboard and was drowned, and where at two o'clock this morning, an old Danish lady died. We buried her on one of the little islands at the mouth of the river. We have lost four children by death during the voyage: had one birth and five marriages. Three have been cut off from the Church.

We divided the company into four Wards, and each one appointed a President with his two Councillors, and two teachers. We had also a guard to protect property and virtue, which probably saved some from the evil power and influence of ungodly men.

Most of the company will sail for St. Louis. About 70 persons may be obliged to tarry in New Orleans to provide means for further progress. We would gladly have taken them all with us, but this is a poor company, and there is no means to help the needy.

A part of the company are Scandinavians. They are a good people, and Elder Eric M. Hogan has had the presidency over them.

I would say for the whole company that for the light they have attained they are as good a people as I ever associated with.

I hardly expect to see you before I return to the mountains, but if we had got here a little earlier I had entertained a hope of making you a visit, both that I might be refreshed with your company and counsel, and benefited in other respects.

We had a conference on board, a few days ago, which lasted two days, and we had a blessed good time. The saints were much refreshed and encouraged. Praying God, our Eternal Father, to bless and prosper you in your responsible calling.

I remain your brother in the Gospel,

RICHARD BALLANTYNE.

MARCH 19th, 1855.

I write this Postscript to inform you that after tarrying at New Orleans two days, the entire company was shipped for St. Louis on board the Steamer "Michigan." Last night we left New Orleans. On the previous date I said we probably would have to leave some at New Orleans; but through the liberality of the Saints themselves, and, the exertions of Bro. McGaw, together with aid which, he has liberally proffered, we took the responsibility of putting all of the Saints on board.

There was only one steamboat in port for St. Louis, and we had to pay $3,50 per head for passengers over fourteen years, and for children between one and fourteen years, we pay half price, infants free.

Before our people came on board, there were about one hundred and fifty other deck passengers on the boat, which makes it very unpleasant, inconvenient and unhealthy. But the Saints are generally in good health at present, and I trust through our efforts and the blessings of the Lord, not many of them will perish. R. B.

CARBONDALE, March 27, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR:—I am very much obliged to you for publishing weekly such an interesting paper, as "The Mormon." Although, I am not of the same faith, nor principles, yet I must confess that there are in your new issue, more sober truths and plain solid facts, besides being printed in a better style than any other paper which I have read or seen. And as I find that you are desirous of making your paper interesting, I will take the liberty of forwarding a few words on a subject, which I hope will be acceptable, viz.: The Comforts of Religion. There are many who have passed the age of youth and beauty; who have resigned the pleasures of that smiling season; who begin to decline into the vale of years, impaired in their health, depressed in their fortunes, stripped of their friends, their children, and perhaps still more near relations. What expedient can this world afford them? It appears dark, and a dreary waste, through which there does not issue a single ray of comfort. Every deceiving prospect of ambition is now at an end; long experience of mankind, an experience very different from what the open and generous soul of youth had fondly dreamed of, has rendered the heart almost inaccessable to new friendship. The principal sources of activity are taken away, when they for whom we labor are cut off from us; they who animated, and who sweetened all the toils of life. Where then can the soul find shelter; but in the bosom of Religion? There she is admitted to those prospects of Providence and futurity, which alone can warm and fill the heart. I speak of such as retain the feelings of humanity; whom misfortunes have softened, and perhaps rendered more delicately sensible; not of such as possess that stupid insensibility, which some are pleased to dignify with the name of Philosophy. It might therefore be expected, that those philosophers who think they stand in no need themselves of the assistance of religion to support their virtue, and who never feel the want of its consolations, would yet have the humanity to consider the very different situation of the rest of mankind; and not endeavor to deprive them of what habit, at least if they will not allow it to be, Nature, has made necessary to their morals, and to their happiness. It might be expected that humanity would prevent them from breaking into the last retreat of the unfortunate, who can no longer be objects of their envy or resentment and breaking from them their only remaining comforts. The attempt to ridicule religion may be agreeable to some, by relieving them from restraint upon their pleasures, and also may render others very miserable by making them doubt those truths, in which they were most deeply interested; but it can convey real good and happiness to no one individual. Yours, respectfully, W.

There are certainly some things worthy of attention in the above, but when we speak of religion, it certainly ought not to go a begging of Infidelity, that religion is too weak and sickly that cringes before a false philosophy, or bends to a corrupt, degrading, stoical insensibility. Philosophy professes to ameliorate the condition of mankind, that which only gives loose to the reins of vice and dissipation is as much a perversion of philosophy, as that religion is a perversion of the religion of Jesus Christ, which does not arm a man against the subtilties, and casuistry of false philosophy and infidelity. The religion of the Ancients and of the Apostles put them in possession of certainty. "I know," says Job, "that my Redeemer liveth," and farther, "I know that he shall stand in the Latter Day upon the earth—and these eyes shall see him, whom I shall know for myself," Jesus says, "Abraham saw my day and was glad." The Apostles and disciples saw Jesus not only before but after his resurrection. They had dreams too and visions, the ministration of angels and the gift of the Holy Ghost." They had "an anointing, which dwelt in them, which was truth and no lie, and needed not that any one should teach them save the anointing that dwelt in them." "He that believeth hath the witness in himself." There was certainty in all their moves, their religion being spiritual, they had spiritual communications, the Holy Ghost brought "things past to their remembrance, led them into all truth, and showed them of things to come." They had a hope that bloomed with immortality and eternal life, and were as far above sickly sentimentality, a weak, rickety, trembling, cringing religion, or the effects of a corrupt, degrading profligate stoicism, or infidelity, as the heavens are above the earth; we believe in the religion of the ancients, a religion of certainty, truth, intelligence, power, that hopes, believes and trusts in God; that gives revelation and removes doubt; it wants neither props, swadling bands, nor leading strings; it is strong in the strength of Israel's God, and defies opposition from whatever source; it is not a sing-song dreamy something, that we have to say to an Infidel, "now don't trouble me, I have taken a soporific draught, I have sweet and pleasant dreams of elysian fields, and I am afraid I shall be disturbed and my pleasant illusions vanish." Now we appreciate the feelings of all such; but their religion would not do for us; we want an every day matter of fact religion. If it can be shaken, let it be shaken. If infidels or anybody else have got any better principles than we have, we will embrace them, we want our religion and principles testing and proving, we want a religion that will stand the scrutinizing fiery test of every opposing principle, a religion that is wide awake, that will soar above every false principle and is envolved in light, truth and intelligence; that will stand the rude shock of conflicting elements here, and bear us in safety to eternal day. Having said so much we would state to those parties addressed by our correspondent, unless you have got a better philosophy than they have a religion, it is unjust and ungenerous to disturb them, never pull a man's house down, till you have a better to put him in; it may be poor, tottering, decaying and unsafe, but if you have no habitation don't invite him into the bitter elements, where he will have no shelter to screen him from the pinching cold the burning sun, or pitiless storm. It is a maxim of ours if we can't do good, at least, to do no harm.

WE are unacquainted with the writer of the following, there are some good ideas in it, we insert it, and as the writer says it is to be continued we shall reserve our remarks until a future time:

To the Editor of the Mormon:

"SIR! The advocates for existing family institutions have loaded the institutions of the primitive ages with such indefinite epithets as obscenity, pollution, and so forth; as if they had purer ideas of virtue than Christ who refers us to these very ages, as affording examples in this matter worthy of our imitation (Matthew 19th Ch. 8th v;) and an effort is made to support the stringency of modern laws by the authority of passages quoted from Paul's first Epistle to Timothy, advising him as to the proper character and family circumstances of certain officers in the Church. But this limitation may have been advised by Paul for reasons similar to those which actuated the head of the Church at a later period in forbidding ministers to marry at all, namely, that they might not be over burdened with family cares, but might give due attention to their flock without distraction; especially in the then infant state of the Church, and in the persecutions and distresses incident to that condition; to which distresses Paul alludes in the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians 7th Ch. 26th v; but it is very evident that it is as wrong to extend this limitation to the laity, as to extend to them the parallel prohibition of the Church of Rome against the clergy marrying at all; likewise this advice may be construed to mean that the ministers ought not to be single men, but ought to have one wife at least.

To the same effect a passage is quoted from Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, in which the Apostle is made to say, "let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband," is made to say, for to give the passage the air of a positive injunction the preceeding words "to avoid fornication," which are absolutely necessary to complete the sense, are omitted. The sentence being completed, it is evident that Paul has no reference here to the conditions of the family relation as to number, but merely to the prevention of fornication by marriage. Also this passage may, very fairly be considered eliptical the Apostle not choosing to make use of the clumsy law language, wife, or wives, but using the singular for both numbers. Eliptical expressions like this are very frequent in the books of the old law, one occurs in the 10th Commandment, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife," another in the 21st Chapter of Leviticus. He shall take a wife in her virgnity." It is evident therefore that if this passage in Paul's writings, limits the family relations to one wife, so do these passages quoted from the books of Moses: but we know that the Mosaic law allowed a plurality of wives, and therefore this argument proving to much, proves nothing. Some will say now if the word wife in this passage includes both numbers why not also the word husband? The reason is sufficiently obvious. The Apostle never treats the two parties to the relation as equals but invaribly gives the man the precedence; likewise, though the head may have many members, nobody can have two heads, neither can confidence have two advisers. The practice of the primitive ages in this respect was nearly obsolete in the days of the Apostles and of Christ yet instances of the like did sometimes occur, one of which is to be found in the Gospel of the Infancy, which, though it may be fairly regarded as aprocryphal, may yet be fairly received as evidence of the manners of the age; even acknowledged fictions fairly represent the manners of the age and country in which they were written. The reason of this custom becoming obsolete most probably was the example of the Roman people, and the power of the Roman law, which in those ages ruled the greatest part of the known world.—[To be continued.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 6, 1855.

WE received your letters of Nov. and Dec. to-day; the mail arrived last night, late from the East; there was an escort came as far as Bridger's with it, and than turned back to Laramie. It was the same escort that went from Laramie to the States with Mr. C. Kinkead, after the serious meeting with the Indians last Fall.

This week and next, there is to be a great many parties at the Social Hall. To-night and to-morrow night the Battalion "boys" are going to have parties, as it cannot accomodate all in one evening. The next evening the "Minute Men" are to have one, and on Friday night Capt. Hardy, with the police, will have their party. On the 22d of this month (Feb.,) Washington's birth day, Col. Steptoe is going to give a splendid party, in return, (I suppose,) for the one given by the Governor on the 1st of January last.

We still have beautiful weather, and they are going on with the public works; they are grading North Temple street, so as to admit of City Creek passing down to the river, on the occasion of high water, in the spring. The hands are engaged on the east side of the Temple, and are rapidly rolling down the immense stones from the Kanyon, for its construction. President Young has removed into his new house.

The California Mail started out yesterday noon, and Mr. Tracy and Major Raynolds started this morning to overtake it to send some matter through by that mail, that has been detained waiting for the eastern mail to arrive. Yours, JOSEPH H. FELT.

LATEST FROM CALIFORNIA.

THE Star of the West arrived last evening, with some two hundred passengers and $239,000. There were consignments of $70,000 to Drexel & Co., Philadelphia; $62,000 to the Metropolitan Bank; $20,000 to J. Cork, Jr.; $15,000 to Wells, Fargo & Co.; $18,000 to W. Seligman & Co., and $15,000 to Ross, Folkner & Co.

The Star of the West connected with the Sierra Nevada, which left San Francisco on the 9th and reached San Juan del Sud on the 22d.

The steamship Sonora, with the mails and passengers which left New York February 5th by the George Law, arrived at San Francisco on the 2d March, with 433 passengers.

A mob broke into the office of Adams & Co., at Sonora, on the 4th of March, and overpowered the sheriff and officers, then appointed a committee, who paid off all the depositors to the amount of their several certificates.

The rains have fallen abundantly of late, and all the streams are raised, and the miners are in high spirits for spring operations.

The Supreme Court of the State has decided that persons who inclose lands in the mining region cannot hold them against miners.

NULLIFICATION IN CALIFORNIA.—The Supreme Court decided a month or two ago, that appeals could not be taken from the State Court to the United States; and Judge Shattuck, of the Superior Court of San Francisco, disregarded this decision, and transferred a case to the U. S. District Court, when the Supreme Court steps in with a mandamus, but Judge Shattuck declares he will not touch the case again.

Despatches from Constantinople, of the 1st of March, says a shock of an earthquake had been felt there.

Broussa has been almost destroyed by earthquakes, and 2,000 lives lost.

Advices from Smyrna, Feb. 25th, state that 1,000 English sick had arrived in hospital.

The new Cunard steamer Etna, had sailed from Liverpool with artillerymen and horses for the Crimea, and the Cambria was fitting for cavalry, for the same destination, and the screw steamers Great Britain, Indian and Black Queen were also about ready.

The scale of distribution of the English patriotic fund for widows and orphans of the war, is announced, and varies from 3s. 6d. to 9s. 6d. sterling weekly for each family.

Address of the Emperor Alexander.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, March 4, 1855.

The following address to the army appeared simultaneously with the manifesto of Alexander II. to the nation:

I. Valiant warriors, faithful defenders of the church, the throne, and the country! it has pleased Almighty God to visit us with the most painful and grievous loss. We have all lost our common father and benefactor.

In the midst of his unwearied care for Russia's property and the glory of the Russian arms, the Emperor Nicholas Paolovitch, my most beloved father, has departed to eternal life.

His last words were: "I thank the glorious royal guards who, in 1825, saved Russia, and I also thank the brave army and fleet; I pray God to maintain, however, the courage and spirit by which they have distinguished themselves under me. So long as this spirit remains upheld Russia's tranquility is secured both within and without; then wo to her enemies! I loved them as my own children and strove as much as I could to improve their condition. If I was not entirely successful in that respect, it was from no want of will, but because I was unable to devise anything better or to do more."

May these ever memorable words remain preserved in your hearts as a proof of his sincere love for you, which I share to the largest extent, and let them be a pledge of your devotion for me and Russia.

ALEXANDER.

St. Petersburg, March 3, 1855.

II. Brave Warriors! Courageous participators in the deeds of your supreme military chief now sleeping in the Lord! You have sealed in your hearts the last words of his tender and paternal love for you. As a mark of this love to the troops of the guard, the 1st corps of cadets, and the grenadier regiment of the generalissimo, Prince Suvarov (Suwarrow,) I present to you the uniforms of His Majesty, those which the Emperor your benefactor deigned himself to wear. Preserve this pledge, which I trust may remain among you as sacred as a relic, and like an enduring memorial for future generations. Moreover, I ordain as follows:

1. In the companies and squadrons that have borne His Majesty's name, all the distinctive charges on the epaulettes and shoulder-knots shall retain the initial letter of the Emperor Nicholas I., so long as one of those registered down to March 2, 1855, shall continue in the companies and squadrons.

2. Those who were attached to His Majesty's person as generals or aides-de-camp general, or aides-de-camp adlate, will retain the same initial.

May the sacred memory of Nicholas I. survive among our ranks, as a terror to the foe, and for the glory of Russia.

ALEXANDER.

St. Petersburg, March 3, 1855.

Naturalization.

The following is the most concise and correct definition of naturalization that we have seen, and will be useful and instructive to our readers. We find it copied in the Boston Bee:

A foreigner who has resided five years in the United States and one in a State, may present himself before the authorized courts, and apply for naturalization. He must in the first place bring two citizens of the United States, to swear that he has lived five years in the country and one in the State, and that he is a person "of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." After which he must swear to the same facts subtantially himself. And if these oaths are falsely made, the naturalization is void, and the parties subjected to imprisonment for perjury.

In the next place, he must prove that it has been tor two years past his deliberate intention to make application to become a citizen of the United States. The only proof that will be accepted of this, if he was of age when he came to this country, is a written declaration of such intention made two years previous, before a Court, signed by its Clerk, and sealed with its seal.

The next thing required of him is to take a solemn oath upon the Bible, "to bear true faith and allegiance to the United States. and to renounce all allegience and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty whatsoever, and especially to such potentate as he had previously been a subject of,"(mentioning by name the Queen of England, Emperor of Austria, the Pope or whoever may be the sovereign under whose authority he lived.) Subsequent acts contrary to this oath are punishable by fine, imprisonment and death.

Finally he must renounce his order or title of rank and nobility, if he has any such, and resign his commission, if he holds one, under any foreign power.

He, his wife and children then become entitled to the rights of American citizens, so far as holding property is concerned. But he cannot hold certain offices without a still further term of probation. And none but a native born citizen can be President or Vice President of the United States.

The New Flying Machine.

THE Paris Patrie has the following: "The Academy of Sciences is a good deal interested by the invention of a flying machine, by Don Diego de Salamanca. With this machine, Don Diego's daughter, Rosaura, rose in the air, some time ago, at Madrid, to the great astonishment of the Spaniards, who are but little accustomed to this sort of miracle. Don Diego de Salamanca and his daughter are about to arrive at Paris, to show the effects of his marvellous invention. The machine is very simple; it consists in a case two feet long and one foot wide, adapted to a band of leather round the waist, buckled behind. The two iron rods, fastened to the case, support a small piece of wood, on which the feet repose. The case contains a simple and ingenious mechanism, similar to that employed to set an automaton in motion. The mechanism is worked by means of a handle. It sets in work two large wings, ten feet long, made of very thin caoutchouc, covered with feathers; and the wings may be so worked as to produce vertical, perpendicular or horizontal flying. The number of turns given to the handle determines the height to which it is desired to go. The handle has to be turned every quarter of a league, to regulate the distance; the operation of turning lasts a minute. Horizontal flying is the most difficult; the wings beat the air like the oars of a boat, or rather as the feet of a swan when it swims. By means of this curious machine, a man can go almost as rapidly as a carrier-pigeon from the Hotel-de-Ville to the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoille, in eight minutes, and in half an hour to Versailles. The experiments, which will be made in Paris, will be on a small scale, and the flights of Don Diego will not extend beyond the department of the Seine; but at a later period he proposes to go to Lyons, to Bordeaux, Toulouse, Marseilles, and Tours, and to take the lines of railway. He pretends that he can travel quicker than by rail. The price of each machine will not exceed 1,290f. for men, and 1,000f. for women. If the experiment succeeds, Don Diego will take out a patent, and will make the sale of the machines a branch of commerce. Although greatly astonished at this new invention, several members of the Academy have pointed out the inconvenience of bringing it into general use. In point of fact, there will be no security for any one, if by the aid of such machines, all our usages and customs be overthrown, and if malefactors can fly on the roofs of houses, afterwards get into apartments, and commit all sorts of depredations. It will be very curious to see policemen in France and England pursuing thieves in the air, in order to lock them up on earth. It appears that 1855 promises us all sorts of marvels."

N. N'ism up to the Handle.

ONE of the intensely zealous K. N's. of the General Court, writes to his Son John', a letter which, accidentally of course, got into the Morning Post, from which we make the annexed extract. American principals is looking up some here in Boston and we are going to discord all forign elements in our government (by the way have the barn door painted over with some other color besides Spanish brown. I don't like anything spanish.) The goverpor has made a lick at the forign malitia and disbanded all the cumpanies. (dont use any more British oil for your deefness for I have thrown away that box of Russia salve your mother put in my trunk to rub my rumatick leg with use American physic it is the best.) We are going to have the latin lingo taken off the state coat of arms and put plain yankee english in its place. We are going a head I tell you, and make a clean swoop of every thing of forign extraction I have visited no place of amusement excepting the live Buffaloe which is a regular native he looks very much like a hairy cow. Speaking of cows reminds me of our Durham bull you may sell him to Wade the butcher he is of forign extraction. A friend saked me to go to the Athaneum and see the libry and picture but I was told nearly all the pictures are painted by the old masters—and these I am told is without exseption all forigners beside many of the books are in forign languages so it is contrary to the sperit of prinsiples to visit such a place. I was going to see Banvards great painting of the Holy land which is making some stir but a native artist told me it was painted with Venetian red Dutch pink and Naples yellow while all the skies were Prussian blue too much of the forign element to be interesting to me.

By the way speaking of paint have the front blinds which I had painted with French green last fall painted some other color than I mentioned afore.

Give my Marseills vest to dick the plowman and tell him to stone Jip the Scotch terrier off the farm and to kill that Maltese cat, FALLING OF A LARGE PIECE OF ROCK ON THE HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD!—NARROW ESCAPE OF THE NOON TRAIN FROM NEW YORK!—The passengers by the noon train, Monday, from New York, due at 5:15 o'clock, had a narrow escape when near Rhinebeck. As the train was passing into a curve a piece of rock, at least two tons in weight, fell upon the track and rolled over so that only a small part of it lay upon the rail. The engineer fortunately saw it fall and instantly set about checking the motion of the train which was then going at full speed. So sudden was it checked and so quick the jerk that the passengers were all thrown from their seats, and for a time the utmost confusion prevailed. The cowcatcher hit the rock, which lay so nicely poised that the locomotive rolled it off without receiving any injury and with apparent ease. Upon learning the cause of the sudden stoppage the passengers became calmed down and in a few minutes the train was under motion. It was a narrow but fortunate escape. —[Albany Journal.

Information Wanted.

A DAUGHTER of John and Ellen Foulstine is desirous to know of the whereabouts of her father and mother, if living. John and Ellen Foulstine left Blackburn, England, in the spring of 1854, and sailed in the "Windermere," for New Orleans, with the intention of going to the Valley. Any information relative to them, or a young daughter about nine years of age, will be thankfully received by Joseph and Anne Harrison. Address to this office.

Chandlers Wick, Double and Twisted Yarns, Hatter's Cotton, and every variety of coarse Yarns, which he will sell at the lowest possible wholesale prices; or he will manufacture to order. The subscriber would state that as he has good machinery, experienced hands, and attends to the general superintendance himself, he is able and will manufacture as good and as cheap as any other establishment.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the [illegible] you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverous que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoilleront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained, three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connection with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one-fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained by certificates of postmasters, or the affidavits of other creditable persons, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office, for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract; for disobeying the Post Office laws or instructions of the Department, or for assigning the contract without the assent of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General may alter the schedule. He may also order an increase of service on a route by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay. He may also curtail or discontinue the service, at pro rata decrease of pay, if he allow one month's extra compensation on the amount dispensed with. No extra pay will be allowed for excess of actual over advertised distance, if the points to be supplied are herein correctly stated. The bids should be addressed to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, superscribed "Mail proposals in the Territory of Utah." The contracts are to be executed and returned to the Department by or before the 1st day of September, 1855. For further particulars as to conditions to be incorporated in the contracts, see advertisement for California, Oregon, Utah, &c., dated 13th October, 1853.

TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Steel Engravings by Charles Fenn and Edwin Roffee:

New Orleans; Baton Rouge; Natchez under the Hill; Natchez on the Hill; Vicksburgh; Memphis; St. Louis; Camp at Keokuk; Nauvoo; Joseph Smith, the Prophet; Hyrum Smith, from an original portrait in the possession of his family; Willard Richards, from a daguerreotype; John Taylor; Carthage Jail; Room in which Joseph and Hyrum Smith were imprisoned; Well against which Joseph Smith was placed and shot at after his assassination; Lucy Smith, Mother of the Prophet; Ruins of the Temple at Nauvoo; Joseph Smith, Jr., David Smith, } Sons of the Prophet;

Entrance to Kanesville; Council Bluff Ferry, and group of cottonwood trees; View of the Missouri River, and Council Bluffs, from an elevation; Elk Horn River Ferry; Loup Fork Ferry; Wood River; Chimney Rock; Scott's Bluffs; Fort Laramie; Independence Rock; Devil's Gate; Laramie Peak; Witches' Bluffs; Great Salt Lake; Great Salt Lake City; Heber C. Kimball, from a daguerreotype; Jedediah M. Grant ditto; John Smith ditto; President Brigham Young, also Governor of Utah Territory.

Fort Bridger; A Kanyon in the Rocky Mountains; Tabernacle, G. S. L. City; Joseph Walker, and Arrapeen, brothers, and Chiefs of the Utah Indians, from original drawings by W. W. Major.

The First No. of the above Work was published in Liverpool by Elder F. D. Richards, in July last, and will be continued monthly until complete.

Persons wishing to obtain them can leave their orders at our office, No. 102 Nassau street, corner Ann, Room No. 9. Immediate application should be made, so as to send our orders to Liverpool before the season passes for the Spring Emigration.

The Downfall of Tyranny.

BY JOHN HYDE, JR.

ADDRESSED TO THE OPPRESSED EVERYWHERE.

Laugh on ye tyrants who enslave
The noble, great, the good, the brave,
Enjoy your fleeting hour,
As drops each sand in Saturn's glass
So shall your rule as quickly pass
And with it all your power.
For the struggle of right
'Gainst pride and might
Shall wage the wide world over.

Enjoy your thrones soon doomed to fall,
Your pomp, your wealth, your state, your all,
For man the truth is learning;
Laugh on till woe shall wrest a tear,
Vaunt on till truth shall force a fear,
For man, for freedom's yearning.
For the struggle, &c.

The past has oft crushed manly hope,
And bravest souls have shrunk to cope
With your despotic power;
But friends of freedom soon shall see
That all your slaves at last are free,
And 'tis your turn to cower.
For the struggle, &c.

When hearts you've wrung have ceased to feel,
And iron hands are armed with steel
That tyranny denied them;
They'll hurl you shud'ring to those graves
You had prepared in thought for slaves,
And in yourselves supplied them.
For the struggle, &c.

I hear the small prophetic voice
That bids the crushed and bruised rejoice,
The cry of liberty.
The peeling note more loudly swells,
Till roused creation proudly tells Humanity is free.
For the struggle, &c.

In vain your sceptres, sway, and pride;
In vain the falchions by your side;
In vain your cringing courts;
In vain your hosts of sordid bands;
In vain your hired hearts and hands;
A tyrant's fierce cohorts.
For the struggle, &c.

Your soldiers lie on red fields strown,
Their doom is yours, your knell's their groan
While life is ebbing fast:
Enjoy your note ye tyrant slaves
And deeper dig your yawning graves,
Your rule shall soon be past,
For the struggle of right
'Gainst pride and might
Shall wage the wide world over.

THE CRISIS.—1855.

NUMBER IV.

EAST OF BROADWAY.

The Bowery, forming the great aorta of the city on the East, for New York is two cities in one, comprising New York on the East, and New York on the West—two settlements, a little less different from each other, perhaps, than the old and the new Manhattan, —this fabled Bowery flows, day and night, with a thick, hurrying, turbid stream of human beings, in whose current all nationalities, complexions, sizes, ages, sexes and tongues rush to that unknown laboratory, where they are fused together by the universal amalgam of American life and manners, into one parti-colored but harmonious whole, thence to be distributed, from innumerable receptacles over our vast interior, which, finally, assimilates and absorbs them.

Sometimes, in the "wee sma' hours ayont the 'twal," the Bowery rests, policemen, apple-women, rag-pickers, and tardy inebriates only are visible, to represent the lees of its daily circulation, when sleep has stilled its hubbub; but this quiet is rare, for it is seldom that the Bowery has not its reflex tide of "b'hoys and gals," pouring in, by all the Avenues, from Bloomingdale and Harlem, singing and whooping, with less music than whole-souled noisy merriment, as they batter homewards from rural sports; or its processions of ball-clad youths and maidens leaving or joining some festive scene, and drowning even the eternal roll and jingle of the City, New Haven and Harlem Rail cars, with their mirth.

This portion, the bright side, of that famous thoroughfare, has often inspired the sketchy pen of young men about town, over confidential in their reminiscences, and has made it glow in a light by far too roseate for present truth. But, there is another side, once bright too, now overcast with thick gloom, the Bowery current at morning and evening,—Broadway has its early current, too, and, from Park to Park, there are volumes of thought, every dawn and nightfall, stamped, and folios of pictures traced out by the hastening feet of our workingmen and women. But, the Bowery bears away the palm for variety as well as vivacity; you are there really among the people, and you see them on their own highway, free to express every emotion, and unawed by the presence of architectural splendor indicative of the authority and wealth of classes above them.

How brightly then the Bowery used to smile, in the spring and summer mornings of the past year, during the last thirty minutes that preceded the hour of work; everywhere alive with smiling faces and hurrying feet; the laborer with his lime-whitened boots and patched attire, his coarse shirtsleeves rolled up to the elbows, brushing past groups of spruce young clerks, "on a rush to open the store;" butcher-carts, milk-wagons, morning cars and stages dashing pell-mell along, now up, now down, over and across, into every possible corner, and out of every possible side street and alley, as if executing some weird cotillion, or emulating the gambols of Faust's witches on the Brocken; charcoal-men, chimney-sweeps, bread-boys, fish-venders, "winding the mellow horn;" all sorts of professionals, solemn and quizzical; all sorts of embodied noises, darting along and athwart each other —these, with innumerable side pieces, make the scene one of singular exhilaration; but where would have been its spirit, where its romance, without the working girls! Their absence would have left the rest dull and leaden; and the Hudson's banks had been garlanded with fewer of the poetic laurels that adorn them where they open with glad arms to meet the caresses of the sea. But, there were working girls, by hundreds and thousands, the dear, beautiful, but poverty-stricken daughters of our land, some born in humble homes of the great metropolis, and others nurtured in the villages that nestle among the hills of northern New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, with many from the towns and rural districts of Yankeeland, but all gathered to the once ample beauty of this manufacturing mart—the grandest centre through which the supplies of trade flow to and from the country. With what joyous faces and gay laughter they tripped together—the sidewalks alive with them as far as you could see, like moving parterres of living flowers—narrating to each other the sport of the past evening, and the hopes and fears of the coming day, if it was the morning work hour, or if at sunset, skipping along, delighted to be free, and chattering merrily their girlish anticipations of home —the temporary or real home, and some fond mother or sister, or kind father or brothers, or, perhaps, even with a blush, admitting some clever Frederick, or Will, or Charlie, who had promised them escort to the singing school, or a box seat at the National. If it was a week-day, such were the topics, intermingled with the chit chat of the workroom; if Saturday—a sort of festival anticipation—there would be the comparison and counting up of their little gains, and flattering plans for a walk to church and an evening courtship, on the morrow.

How lovely many of them were, too, these American working girls! How delicate, how gentle-voiced, bright-eyed and tender-hearted! Who did not love them, in their glee and innocence, and patient, unrepining toil? Who would not have felt relief, in turning from the musk and brocade and hollow state of the Broadway lounge to the untrammeled grace and virginical bloom and freshness of the poor girls on the Bowery—from the haughty mesdames and imposing misses of the merely fashionable range to Sis and Mary and little Sne!—the hazel and deep blue and black-eyed girls from our mountains' and rivers' sides! If you would have gazed at them with pleasure, then, dear reader, when they were glad, and thought it a boon that they had the privilege of slaving from seven in the morning until twilight; if you would have rejoiced in their joy and have been merry in their mirth, because it lightened and restored your own heart; because it taught you that there might be innocence and fidelity, and a sweet resignation almost like happiness in the very bosom of metropolitan toil and poverty; because it sustained your philosophical theories and illusions, and, by an outside constrast, made you, perchance, envy such a lot so full of fresh emotion; if you—and we cannot doubt it—would have smiled upon and sympathized with these poor girls, in their brief day of summer, you will not turn away from them, now, when their mirth has fled and their eyes are dimmed with care and suffering?

We have presented a rapid view of the Bowery, when enlivened by the morning and evening tide of workers—its pleasantest aspect—and with a brief tribute to the industry and beauty of its toiling girls, have hinted that their condition, following the decline of trade, has, in a majority of instances, become, not only much less endurable than it was, in its worst times before, but even deplorably wretched.

We shall now ask them to accompany us to the homes, or rather lodging places of the young creatures who are thus exposed by fate to the trials and vicissitudes of our City life; doing so, they will be speedily convinced of the unerring certainty with which those who fatten on the misery and degradation of their fellow-beings may calculate, when they are measuring the resources of vice and oppression. They will witness strange scenes, whose existence they had not fancied, in this metropolitan display of wealth and intelligence; they will hear heart-rending truths, which they would fain believe untruths, and learn that for some—the fairest and most defenceless portion of our own flesh and blood—liberty is proclaimed almost in vain, and gospel tidings of great joy in vain pronounced.

Mawkish prudery may shrink from the investigation, and sectarian or infidel malice may seek to sneer and contradict; but as every syllable we write is based on solid fact, we shall feel that we are not only serving the cause of justice, but absolutely discharging a duty we owe to ourselves and that cause, in making the revelations now ready to flow from our pen.

The public have, too long, been either indifferent to this subject, or misinformed regarding it. Great and holy principles of progress and improvement lie behind it, and we cannot hasten enough in furthering its discussion.—[N. Y. Evening Mirror.

LEGISLATIVE PARTY

In compliment to Judge Kinney—his Associates —other United States Officers of the Territory— and Lieut. Col. Steptoe of the United States Army —with the officers in his command.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

Heber C. Kimball, Lorenzo Snow,
J. M. Grant, H. S. Eldridge,
Samuel W. Richards.

House called to order at 3 P. M., by President H. C. Kimball, who remarked that the time had arrived when we should begin our party. He wished to give a little counsel first, and would be plain and distinct. It was understood that this party was got up by the Governor and Legislative Assembly, and we want to set an example worthy of imitation for generations to come, to keep good order; and when there is dancing and music playing, no conversation nor disorder, but every man behave like a gentlemen, and every lady like a lady. We do not wish any of the gentlemen or ladies to go down to the lower room, until they are invited. We do not wish whiskey or brandy to be brought to this party, and desire that none who are invited here should go out and get it; if this is done, we will consider it an insult. This is a total abstinence party; that is, the total abstinence of all spirituous liquors. We will introduce the cold water system unto the table, then tea and coffee, if you please. The room where you came in is the ante-room: gentlemen and ladies will there wait on you, for we wish perfect order and perfect harmony, that the angels who are sent to administer to us, and in connection with whom we hold the keys, may be well pleased with us, and touch us all with the power of God, that we may act well our parts, and that our musicians may be touched with an holy touch, that their instruments may inspire and exalt our feelings. We will dedicate this party, ourselves, and the music to the Lord. If these are your feelings, hold up your right hands to heaven, and say Aye (which was unanimously done.) No person has been invited here whose name was not on the list. This is the order of the Governor. His health is poor, and he does not know that he can come here, but I wish him remembered in our prayers, that God may touch him with an holy touch, for I desire that he shall be here to see us during this evening. The gentlemen, with their ladies, who are strangers to you, will be duly introduced.

President J. M. Grant then offered up prayer to the Lord, dedicating to him the assembly and the evening's proceedings.

After which, President Kimball organized the room with cottillion sets; and at the word "all ready," the lively strains of music filled each heart with the spirit of the dance.

The orchestra was occupied by musicians (playing six first and second fiddles, a violincello, double bass and flute), with a boy at each side in Gælic pastoral costume holding his crook in hand.

At 4 P. M. Col. Steptoe and Miss Kinney were introduced by the Hon. H. C. Kimball, and soon thereafter his Hon. Chief Justice J. F. Kinney and lady; also Mr. McLure and lady; J. H. Holman, Esq., United States District Attorney; Lieut. Tyler, Mr. W. G. Rankin, and the Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Sec., and lady, were introduced by the Hon. J. M. Grant.

Cotillion followed cotillion in quick succession, all being order and quietness inside during the dance, although outside the tempest was howling, and the wind was blowing a perfect hurricane from the south, and had been during all the day.

At half-past 5 P. M., Major Reynolds, U. S. Army, Major Rose and lady, and Marshall J. L. Heywood were introduced by Hon. J. M. Grant.

Hon. H. C. Kimball stated to the assembly that he had just received a communication from the Governor, which he would take pleasure in having read.

NEW YEAR'S, 5 P. M.

Governor B. Young respectfully tenders his highest regards and the compliments of the season to the ladies and gentlemen who assemble in the Social Hall, this evening, and regrets exceedingly that his health, which will not permit him to venture from his room, should so inopportunely debar him the pleasure he anticipated in meeting his friends and participating in the joyous dance on this happy festive occasion. Trusting that the company will enjoy themselves to the fullest extent, and asking that the blessing of Heaven may rest on the evening's recreations, he bids one and all, a very, very good night.

At 6 P. M., Capt. Ingalls, Lieut. Mowry, and Hon. Judge Stiles, were duly introduced by the Hon. J. M. Grant.

At 7 P. M., Joseph Greene, of the firm of Kinney, Greene & Co., and Lieut. Alston, were introduced by Hon. J. M. Grant. After the floor had been formed for a country dance, at a quarter past eight, P. M., dinner was announced; whereupon, beginning at No. 1, until No. 43 were severally called on the floor with their respective partners, and in order were introduced to the lower room. Upon all being comfortably seated, President Kimball asked a blessing upon the bounties and luxuries spread before them, and gave thanks to the God of our fathers.

As I was unable to remember the dishes, dainties and varieties offered on the occasion, I here copy the bill of fare which was laid below each plate on the table:

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 1, 1855.

The several courses were announced by ringing of the bell. The waiters, who were gents, were all uniformed alike, having white jackets and aprons, with black pants; and, although the courses, dishes and dainties presented on the occasion called forth the wonder and admiration of all present, especially the strangers, yet it in no ways superseded the taste, skill, magnificence and ingenuity displayed in fitting up the apartment for the occasion.

The walls were beautifully studded with fir boughs, flags, banners, emblems, mottos and paintings—on the south wall the words "Peace to the Stranger," on green silk, was neatly executed in large capitals; and on the north wall, "Union is Strength," was executed in the manner. Our national flag, the stars and stripes, adorned the west wall; on its right a beautiful painting of the Pioneers crossing the upper Platte—the animals swimming, wagons rafting, a second raft building, and waters flowing. On the left of our national flag was that of the Nauvoo brass band, and the elegant banner of this city, whereon is inscribed, "Municipality, Order, Justice, G. S. L. City." On the east wall was extended the flag of the Life Guards, with the stars and stripes, whereon is represented the beehive, with bees swarming round. Above is the eagle, with the motto "Unum," and below is a black bear, with the motto, "Always ready;" on the corner are the words, "Life Guards." On the same wall a banner is extended, whereon is represented a lion, the king of the forest. Four small banners projected near the ceiling in each corner, on which were respectively subscribed, "Purity," Virtue," "Truth and Justice," and "Wisdom," executed in elegant style.

On the posts around the building, near the top, were fastened fir tree branches, and on each side of the posts hung out from the branches the flags of all nations. Below, the posts were wreathed with roses, with base of broad green silk ribbon; thence downwards were serpentinely wreathed with fir boughs.

The columns or posts in the centre of the building were artistically decorated in the same manner, and from column to column was extended green silk ribbon on both sides, whereon flowers and evergreens alterated the whole length.

At 9 1-2 Lieut. Livingston was introduced by Hon. J. M. Grant.

During the first table the musicians were engaged and the balance of the party were enjoying themselves in the dance.

After the first table had arose they proceeded and joined in the dance until the second table was called by No. as the first; in this table the music joined.

Pres. Kimball then called the remaining audience to attention, and introduced Mr. Henry Mabin, who sang "The Man who could not get Warm," "The Good St. Anthony," and a Mormon song, in his usual chaste, bold and comic style, which gave much satisfaction.

An address from Elder Orson Hyde being announced, he rose and said:—I have been made happy on this occasion, and am joyful this evening, amidst the circumstances that surround this people in these valleys of the mountains. My heart is grateful to the Dispenser of all good gifts among his creatures, the children of men, for what my eyes behold and my senses enjoy this evening, and during my happiness I have been led to think on the scenes of the past. My mind has ruminated over the changes of this people. But a few years and we were fleeing from the hand of persecution, which had been outstretched to crush us; and not knowing whither we went, tracked the prairies in search of a home; but by the over-ruling hand of Providence were we led in safety to our mountainous home, in the midst of a poor, degraded nation of Indians, who looked upon us with a jealous eye. Our all was in our wagons; the country was untried. Mountaineers who had lived here told us we could not raise an ear of grain; indeed, so confident were they, that they offered $1,000 for the first ear of corn that could be raised here. Yet in the midst of these discouraging scenes they went to work, and when the ground was prepared, the seeds put in. Insects innumerable came down from the mountains to destroy the grain, but a devourer was prepared, and while the crickets would have swept every green thing before them, behold the gulls came and labored incessantly from the sun's first rays on the mountain tops, till she gilded the western horizon, eating the crickets and vomiting them, this we regarded as the same hand of Providence that had mercifully encircled us all the time. But amid all this you can discover we have arisen to our present enjoyments, while we have been living, not knowing the moment when the war whoop would be sounded in our ears, and we called to arms to defend our wives and children. But what is now our condition? Let this evening speak. I have been in almost every State in our Union, and in the states and kingdoms of Europe, from the mouth of the Rhine to the mouth of the Danube, in Asia and in Africa, and I have not seen anything that equals this occasion. It may have been equaled, but my heart has not participated in it—my eyes have not seen it. Let the world who look for a miracle, look here. And while to night I have been associating with you, my mind has been contemplating the elements around us in their fury, while all is calm and pleasant within these walls. May God grant, if the world like the elements without should rage in turbulence and war, that our people may continue in peace and harmony, as is typified within this room to-night, and that it may be so my efforts during the remainder of my days will be unceasing. I wish you all a happy new year, and God grant that it may be so is my prayer—even so. Amen!"

An address from Hon. J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice United States Supreme Court, Utah Territory, being announced, he arose and said, —"This is to me an occasion for rejoicing—this a time when the mind will reflect on the past history of this country. I can scarcely realize that we are here, ten or fifteen hundred miles from civilization, and yet we are in the very midst of it—not only civilization, but the most perfect refinement. I am reminded of the words of Daniel Webster, on an occasion of celebrating the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. The same heaven, he remarked, is over our heads, the same earth under our feet. But all else how changed! the same remarks may appropriately be applied to this Territory. When we consider only seven years have gone since this people landed here without food to support them, living on herbs and roots, and behold now the splendor, the magnificence, and the taste that has been displayed here, we may wonder and be astonished; and yet my soul ascribes it to the providences of that Good Being who controls all things for his glory, and the well being of his creatures. I rejoice in my heart that there has been such good feelings maintained here since my arrival among you. We are all brethren. We meet here on the same platform. We are all on the same level—all travellers together to the same unknown country, and it is my desire that the same kind, good feelings may always be here and exist—shall I say between both saint and sinner?—and continue, that has existed and been maintained since my arrival in this city. I wish you all a happy new year. May we all be found promoting the union that prevails here throughout the valley.

On the music returning from dinner, the United States officers present resumed the dance by waltzing and dancing the polka, and all seemed to enjoy themselves; indeed, so far as we could judge, there was no restraint on the feelings of any, but the spirit of order and of the meeting perfectly controlled all present.

Opportunely, the company were waited upon to ice cream.

Half-past twelve A. M., the company partook of supper in the same order as dinner, President J. M. Grant acknowledging the Lord.

The hall was fitted up with much elegance for the occasion, and the general arrangements of the evening reflected great credit on Mr. Candland's judgment and taste.

The invitation cards were of a unique and superb description; the paper was small note, ornamentally embossed and fringed, headed New Year's Festival, under which was the eagle beautifully bronzed, semi-circled by bronzed stars, representing the States in the Union, and at both sides of the eagle were bronzed stars, representing the Territories. Where, by whom given, and to whom, with names of the committee and date, followed in different type, ornamental, but chaste, with occasional bronzing.

At a quarter past one A. M. President Kimball called the house to order, and said: "We should, before dismission, as we always do, acknowledge the name of the Lord, that his blessings, which had been over us while we had been together, might go home with us."

Benediction by Orson Hyde.

THEATRICAL REPRESENTATIONS.

The Deseret Dramatic Association volunteered their services for the opening performance of the season, which came off on the evening of Saturday, the 2d of December, with "All is not Gold that Glitters," and sentimental and comic songs. Governor Young extended invitations to his councillors, to the Quorum of the Twelve, to the clerks in the different offices, to the heads of the departments, and to many others, all of whom attended with goodly portions of their families, filling the hall with an audience whose countenances beamed with joy, not only from the delight arising directly from the occasion, but from the associations and pleasing recollections of the past. As the play progressed the audience gave vent to their gratification in smiles and heartfelt laughter. The following is the cast of characters in the play of

ALL IS NOT GOLD THAT GLITTERS.

Toby Twinkle.....Mr. H. B. Clawson.
Plum.....Mr. H. K. Whitney.
Stephen Plum.....Mr. P. Margetts.
Martha Gibbs.....Mrs. Clawson.
Lady Leatherbridge.....Mrs. Cook.

The News says: There was no stamping of feet, thumping of canes, clapping of hands, nor any other uncouth, uncalled for, and inappropriate noises, and thus may it ever be at our theatre, let who will compose the audience: please remember this, and conduct orderly lest these amusements be closed upon you.

On the 29th of December the Dramatic Association performed for the second time, the melo-drama entitled the "Writing on the Wall." The cast of characters was excellent, and it would only be tedious to particularize where each one acted so admirably. Suffice it to say that Mr. B. Snow most characteristically represented the spirit and action of Richard Oliver, and Mrs. Wheelock that of Margaret Elton; and the same remark will apply with equal justice to every one in their respective roles. The evening's entertainment concluded with a sentimental song by Mr. J. R. Clawson, a hornpipe by Mr. Poulter, "The Old House at Home" by Mrs. Margaret Cook, a comic song by Mr. H. K. Whitney, and "The Banks of the Blue Moselle" by Mrs. Margaret Cook.

As usual, the orchestra under the leadership of Mr. John M. Jones relieved the tedium of the interludes by most scientifically executed music of varied character, including a tastefully arranged original tune by Orson Pratt, Jr.

MILITARY BALL.

Kinney, Green & Co. gave a complimentary party to Col. Steptoe, his officers, and citizens of G. S. L. City, at the Union Hotel, Tuesday evening, 7 o'clock, December 26. We are informed that, in addition to a full attendance of the complimented guests, his Excellency Governor Young, Presidents Kimball and Grant, those of the Quorum of the Twelve now in this city, the United States civil officers, and a large number of our prominent citizens were in attendance with their ladies. Music and the dance enlivened the very social interchange of free remark—the supper was sumptuous, abundant, and elegantly served—and all participants highly enjoyed the splendid entertainment.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ASSOCIATION.

On Saturday evening, 13th of January, according to previous appointment, the printers of Salt Lake City, convened in the office of the Deseret News, and organized the "Typographical Association of Deseret." President.....Phineas H. Young.
First Councillor.....James McKnight.
Second Councillor.....Brigham H. Young.
Clerk.....George Q. Cannon.
Assistant Clerk.....John G. Chambers.
Librarian.....John B. Kelly.

Hon. Albert Carrington, editor of the Deseret News, and eleven others, were chosen honorary counsellors.

The organization of this association, we trust, will prove an important auxiliary in securing to the typographical fraternity of this Territory an elevation of character worthy of their profession.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1855.

Transplanting Oysters.

WHILE on our way from New York to Philadelphia last week, we took the Camden and Amboy route, for the purpose of enjoying the rich scenery along the shores of Jersey and Staten Island: we sailed in a magnificent steamer belonging to that company. In passing through the sound, we were attracted by a number of stakes that were stuck, both on the land and in the water, apparently as land, or rather water-marks; we saw also, in the same vicinity, numbers of men in small boats grappling for something under water. Upon making inquiry of a fellow passenger what these men were doing, he told us that they were taking up oysters; he further stated that the oysters for which they were grappling were all planted by the oystermen, who owned their own grounds or water privileges, and that those stakes that we saw were the boundary lines of the various oyster beds. It has been the opinion of some of our eastern men who reside in the valley, that oysters could be transplanted to Salt Lake, and that we could raise them there as easily as they do East, and some of our epicures smacked their lips, and their mouths fairly watered at the idea of oysters in the valley, on the tops of the mountains, luxuriating, spreading, multiplying, in the briny waters of the Salt Lake; in prospective they already saw, in addition to beef, trout, deer, bear, mutton, lamb, &c., &c., large piles of Oysters. They imagined they heard the cry of OYSTERS! They saw, among other places of resort, oyster saloons; and gazed upon oysters raw, oysters stewed, oysters fried, and oyster pie, until they imagined they had hold of the precious morceau, when lo and behold! it was a dream. We are free to confess that we had participated, more or less, in these dreams; we don't, by the by, have any particular relish for the live critters, but think that a good oyster stew is passablement bien. Under these impressions, with a little of self, and a little desire for the advancement of our infant colony, we pursued our inquiries, upon which our new friend introduced us to an oysterman, who was very courteous, affable and communicative, and from whom we obtained the following:

The sound up which we were passing separates New York from the State of New Jersey. The New Yorkers claim the New York and the Jerseyites the Jersey side; the channel is the dividing line between them. The oystermen have from ten to twenty acres of space in their water lots. These lots are merely claims, something after the squatter system; pre-emption right, we presume. Any Jerseyman has a right to put stakes down where there is a vacancy on the Jersey side, and so with the New Yorkers on their side; but a residence in the neighborhood is necessary to protect them from marauders, pirates, or thieves, we don't know which term to give such gentlemen. The oysters are obtained from the natural oyster beds where they breed; they are there obtained in great numbers, and about the size of a two shilling piece; they are then taken to the waters designed for their future growth, and dropped down, or planted as they term it, as corn, until the whole vacant ground is planted; it then takes from three to four years for them to be perfected and ready for taking; they have therefore yearly crops always to gather, the limits of which are designated by stakes; planting a fourth of their space, and gathering another fourth, thus always having a crop to gather in the season. A great number die, which is a source of loss, otherwise, if all lived, it would be very profitable. Upon asking him for the necessity of this yearly transplanting, and if they could not more readily propagate them where they were, he stated that this had been tried in a great many places without success, and he had never known one instance where it had succeeded; furthermore, that there were only some peculiar locations where they would live, and that close to the neighborhood of the oyster beds, in the sound, they would not; that if the sand shifted, and they were covered, they would die; that they spawned in their new locations, but the young never lived. Of course our hopes began to fail about oyster suppers in the valley, until at least we can have a railroad, either to take them out alive and kicking, or to take the young fellows and give them a dip in Salt Lake.

We were not a little amused at the manner of the oystermen in administering law. Upon asking our friend if they ever had any stolen, he stated that they had sometimes; but very quaintly remarked that they are welcome to what they get if they are not catched at it. What do you do if you do catch them—do you deliver them to an officer? No, sir; he gave us to understand that they took them and their boat, that they rode them in their own boat through the town, Perth Amboy; that they honored them, as they passed along in their triumphal car, with various kinds of instrumental music of a primitive invention, such as pots, kettles and tin pans, with an accompaniment of vocal music from boys, girls, men and women, with screams, yells, jeers, and other very significant gesticulations. The most feeling part of the ceremony was, however, that of some stout men who belabored the body of the hero with wooden instruments in unison to the tune of the serenaders; that after they had performed the boatal honors they made a burnt offering of the boat, and then raised their hero on a rail and subjected him to another more elevated honor, performing other gyrations and manipulations. At length, after having fully propitiated the oyster god, he was turned adrift to his own people. Upon suggesting to our friend the propriety of using law, he said that while the law was very uncertain and very inefficient, with the above treatment they never returned a second time. We of course believed him.

The Maine Liquor Law

HAS passed both Houses of the Legislature of New York, and received the signature of the Governor.

We are hardly prepared to advocate the wisdom of a measure so stringent, and freighted too with so many and varied interests, and large investments of capital, in so short a period allowed by the law for the holders of these investments to withdraw their capital, and place it in other channels more beneficial to the community at large.

Like the reduction or increase of the tariff, it agitates through all the ramifications of society, and requires calm and serious consideration, not merely in a pecuniary, but in a moral point of view. We fully appreciate the motives, and heartily concur in the necessity and importance of a reform; but the question naturally arises in the mind, whether a reformation is really effected by the stringency of coercion that is necessarily the result of this law, relating as it does immediately to the appetite, as well as the purse. There are some men true, who think this to be the only remedy, while others view it as marring the bright, pure flame of patriotism that should burn in the bosom of every freeman, not referring merely to the sot that deluges himself in the dens of infamy, or reels about within his own gilded halls, but to the millions whose highest pride is the freedom of his own agency, and the liberal platform of his own country. Again, we question not merely the bearing of this law upon the sellers or manufacturers, but its effect physiologically upon the community in its reaction, in greater intensity and more ungovernable appetite for strong drinks; and our greatest physiologists assure us these results are developed with much greater power in the generation that follows.

It seems to us that a measure fraught with so much consequence to the well-being of the community, should not be acted upon alone by a body of men who are yearly gathered up for the usual legislative purposes, hurried amidst the variety and limited in the time for business as they are, but a committee selected, whose duty it should be to give their exclusive attention, and with close, calm, unbiassed and deliberate investigation, seek for a remedy that shall apply as well to the rich as to the poor, and not merely for a year, and then to be repealed; laws never should be enacted that cannot be fully enforced, but a well-digested system, consistently and permanently applied in accordance with the circumstances that surround us; for, like water suddenly obstructed, they will seek another outlet, and although the power at first may be feeble, yet as it swells and gathers force, it will break down every artificial barrier in its turbulant, headlong, onward course. Wise legislation dictates moderate reforms and cautious but permanent advances; it also adapts its reforms to the condition and wants of the people. Winter is not changed to summer at once, nor does the sun obtain its meridian instanter—we have the bud and blossom before the ripened fruit. These sudden moves may please the sanguine minds, but can yield no permanent good.

In Utah we have no Maine Law, yet temperance prevails. We wait the result.

Philadelphia Conference.

A CONFERENCE was held on Friday last, April 6th, and continued till Sunday. A number of Elders from different parts of the country were present, among whom was Elder Samuel Woolley, lately returned from a Mission to Hindostan, East India, who delivered a very interesting lecture upon the habits and customs of the Natives of that country, "and the curious Missionary" proceedings of the various denominations in prosolyting the Natives, somewhat after the order of "auction sales," of the highest bidder. We have the promise from Elder Woolley, of a communication containing the details of his travels while in India, which we expect to be able to lay before our readers.

During the Conference, the Brethren were called upon to know if they were willing to fulfill the Law of Tithing. Upon a vote being called, it was unanimously agreed to—indeed a disposition was manifested to fulfill all the requirements of the Gospel; the spirit of God was in our midst, and all seemed to rejoice in the work of the Kingdom of God.

The Other Side of the Question.

UNDER the above title, we have seen going the rounds in several papers, Chief Justice Kenney's testimony in relation to the good moral character of the Mormons, their order, undustry, and general prosperity. We think it would be an act of justice in some more of our cotemporaries, who have been heralding forth every fictitious rumor, to tell their readers that there is actually another side to the question, and that Judge Kenney, an eye witness, might probably know the position and character of the Mormons fully as well as those who have not been there and who have nothing but their imagination to draw upon.

THE St. Louis Times, states that there is every prospect of difficulty with the Indians, on the Santa Fee route. The mail had passed without difficulty; but that the inhabitants of Santa Fee were organizing volunteer companies, for defence in anticipation of an outbreak.

WE learn from the St. Louis Luminary, that "our agent," has located four claims about four miles from Atchinson which is to be the place of outfit for the Saints. We think Atchinson a good point to start from. On Monday March 12th, one hundred and seventy-five Danish Saints were shipped in St. Louis, on the Clara, destined for that place. Elder Ballantynes' company had arrived on the 27th about two hundred and fifty of which would be shipped as soon as possible to Achinson.

IN a letter from Dan Jones, to the Luminary, we learn that great numbers of the Welsh people were enlisting for the Crimean War, that in one village they had gone at the rate of one hundred per week, that there had been a slight shock of an earthquake.

From the St. Louis Luminary of April 7th.

Elder Ballantyne arrived in St. Louis on the 27th ultimo, and on Sunday the 1st inst., gave a very interesting and descriptive narrative of his late mission to Hindostan, to a large and deeply interested audience.

In consequence of the rivers being low, boats were scarce, and fares high, and it was with considerable difficulty that we finally succeeded in shipping the company to Atchison, the point of outfit. The unprecedented rush to Kansas and Nebraska has materially increased the rate of fares, and the difficulty of shipping to the upper country.

On Saturday, March 31st, we shipped on board the "Admiral" forty Danes, under the presidency of Elder Hogan.

On Tuesday, April 3d, we shipped one hundred and ninety-one souls of the same company, in charge of Elder R. Ballantyne, with instructions to land at Atchison, and to take the general charge of the P. E. Fund passengers now under his charge, and those that may be hereafter shipped to that place.

Conference of the Latter Day Saints was held on the 6th of April in their church on Fourth street.

Death of Judge Reid.

The Steuben Advocate of last week announces the death of the late Chief Justice of Utah, Judge Lazarus Reid, at his residence in Bath, in the 40th year of his age.

Judge Reid was highly esteemed by the people of Utah, for his upright, unprejudiced, frank and manly course pursued in his official capacity and courteous bearing as a citizen of the Territory, and also for the candor with which he expressed himself, in publishing his sentiments concerning them, being in fact a complete refutation of the many slanderous reports, in circulation against the people, over whose judiciary he so honorably presided.

Oregon Items.

The Steamer Tompkins, Capt. Hunt, was wrecked on the night of the 10th February, at the mouth of Victoria harbor. No lives were lost.

EXPEDITION AGAINST THE SNAKE INDIANS.—The Governor has been apprised by the Secretary of War, of the intention of the Government to send a force in the Spring against the Snake Indians who were concerned in the massacre at Fort Bois last summer. This force to consist of eight companies: two of Dragoons, one of Artillery and four of Infantry, to be drawn from the posts of Oregon, California and Washington.

The Oregonian says: An Indian, the son of "Mission John," of the Dallas, was shot by a slave of the Chief of the Dog Tribe, and by his directions, a few days ago. There is considerable excitement among the several tribes along the Columbia river in consequence, and a general fight among themselves is in anticipation.

Another Cuban Outrage.

IT would seem from the following that Cuba is determined to provoke hostilities between Spain and the United States:

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1855.

The Union of this morning announces another Cuban outrage. The brig P. R. Hickman, from Boston, bound to Matanzas, when a few miles from the coast of Cuba, was fired at three times by a Spanish cruiser. The first ball was thrown astern of the brig, the second fired ahead of her, and the third was fired, it is supposed, with the intention of hitting the vessel. After an examination of the Hickman's papers, she was allowed to proceed on her voyage.

The New York Citizen says: "Rumors are rife that the President has ordered the fleet to follow in the wake of our mail steamers to Havana, and, in case of another outrage such as the El Dorado affair, to sink the Spanish frigate that shall dare to fire at or search them."

The nation's honor would certainly demand that, or some other summary process; but the New York National Democrat is of the opinion that no such attempt will be made by the present administration.

☞ During our absence last week, some few typographical errors occurred, we presume in reading proof. Our readers must do their own correcting.

Opinions of the Press.

THE MORMON.

A copy of THE MORMON, the official organ of the Church of the Latter Day Saints in the United States, lies before us. It is a handsome, well-printed, twenty-eight column sheet, published weekly, by John Taylor, New York, at $2 per year. It has a very striking and significant head, filling up one-fourth of its first page. It represents an immense American Eagle, perched above two Star Spangled Banners. Above the Eagle is an "All-seeing Eye," surrounded by a blaze of glory, and the legend, "Let there be Light, and there was Light." Upon the stripes of the flags are written, "Truth, Intelligence, Virtue and Faith United," and "Truth will Prevail," while upon the Union of one of them the lone star of Utah beams resplendantly. Two scrolls on either side of the Eagle bear the inscriptions, "Mormon creed—Mind your own Business: Brigham Young:" and "Constitution of U. S. given by inspiration of God: Joseph Smith." From all of which we gather that the Saints intend to be, outwardly at least, extremely patriotic, virtuous and religious.

On the inside of the paper we find the same bird, this time, however, standing on a beehive, upon which lean the "Doctrines and Covenants," "Book of Mormon," and "The Bible," and bearing in his mouth an immense scroll with "Holiness to the Lord" written upon it.

The leading article is on the Pacific Railroad, in which the editor shows up the impracticability of Stephens', Benton's, 35th parallel and Southern routes, and demonstrates to his own satisfaction that the first Pacific Railroad will follow the steps of the Mormons in the route which they have made to the Pacific, and through the Mormon settlements, where there is a long string of towns and villages, and where there is plenty of coal, iron ore, water, timber, provisions and labor, and where, the editor opines, quite an amount of stock would be subscribed.

The next article is on Cuba, and the editor, after speaking of its wealth and importance, and of the wretched way in which it is now governed, expresses his dissent against any project for acquiring it except by honorable purchase. That is good and honest talk, even for a Mormon.

A writer in the New York Dispatch having attacked the Mormons very bitterly, the editor of the sheet before us pitches into the people who have beams in their own eyes in this fashion:

"We find, in looking around, that many gentlemen are very sore when some of their peccadilloes are pointed out. It is very pleasant to talk about Mormon iniquity, Mormon obscenity, Mormon delusion and abomination; it is quite laughable, quite interesting; but then it is another thing to be told about our own; we feel very sensitive on that point; we have been so much in the habit of kicking the Mormons as we pleased, and saying what we liked without contradiction, that we really feel quite sore when our own affairs are laid open. It is true that we can publish in our journals, magazines and books, as public censorians, the abominations that exist amongst us; but, then, this was not meant for the eye of you Mormons; that is a matter of our own; if we have our dens of infamy, if our abominations are revolting, if debauchery and licentiousness run riot, that is our business, it is a matter that concerns ourselves. Be it so, gentlemen; we wish not to interfere with your social matters; we have merely published a very small item of your own statements on this subject, not a tithe. Now we think we have just as much right to our opinions as other gentlemen have to theirs, and if they don't feel comfortable we would remind them of the old adage about 'people that live in glass houses,' &c. It certainly strikes us as a little singular, that gentlemen, after so many gratuitous statements about us, which we positively deny, and which they have not attempted, nor can they prove, should feel sore about us publishing their own statements. Don't be scared, gentlemen, we have neither interfered with you nor your wives yet, and there is a great desert between you and Utah; besides, our doctrines ordain that both men and women shall be baptized for the remission of their sins in the first instance, and we think many are a long way from that yet."

The Tribune then quotes a correspondent upon an article in the Boston Herald, and a liberal extract from the account of the faith and doctrines of the Church, and closes with the following, upon which we will add, the experiment is before the "enlightened world," and time, which tests all things, will prove that. Concerning our "practices," we should be ashamed if they were not more consistent than the preaching and practising of the Gentile world:

From a letter from Utah, under date of December 10th, we copy the following interesting items. The liquor sellers of that blissful place are a meeker set of men than their brethren in this section.

So much for THE MORMON. If the practice of the people whose organ it is, was only equal to their preaching, the enlightened world might regard them with more respect than they now receive.

We have placed THE MORMON on our exchange list, and if every number is as interesting as the present one, we shall always be glad to receive it.

THE MORMONS.

The Mormons have commenced in New York the publication of a paper, called THE MORMON, devoted to the spread of their principles. It defends polygamy as an ordinance from God, and the Christian world having been laboring under a delusion on this subject for over eighteen hundred years.—[Exchange.

They may have been laboring under the delusion, yet they have not practised it. The only difference we can see on this question is, that the Mormon practises it in open day, and attempts to justify it by the Bible, while thousands upon thousands on the other hand deny that doctrine, yet practise it secretly. Of the two evils, we think the Mormon the least. There never can be such a thing as legalizing or christianizing a wrong.

How many men are there who belong to society, and those too who are looked upon as the lights and example of all, who are worse than the Mormon with his wives; and still society is so organized that all such are sustained. But, on the other hand, let even one of his victims be known, and how soon is she to be banished from society for ever, to be sunken into the depths of want and misery, without one anxious thought for the memory of one who, a short time since, was considered equal to any in society. "She, poor, fallen human creature, ought to have done better, but must now submit to her fate." While the stronger party is still allowed, by the false organization of society, to occupy his several relations, and is excused if not lionized, though the other has been murdered, morally and physically.

How long will society tolerate such evils? To the female portion belongs the power to arrest it at any time—will they do it?—[Peru Chronicle, Ill.

New Periodical.

WE are glad to learn by the following Prospectus, and advertisement, that our old friend P. P. Pratt, is going again to join the Editorial corps, and assist us in our Mormonic Campaign. He opens his battery at San Francisco, California, and while "The Luminary" is spreading its light in the centre of gravity,—the future capitol of the United States; and we are throwing in our mite in the East, he will send it thundering back from the El Dorado, the far, far, West, and raise a beacon of light where the mighty Pacific laves the golden sand and the sun takes its leave of the shores of Columbia.

Elder Pratt was the first Editor of the "Millennial Star" in England; he is the author of the well known "Voice of Warning," and "Millennial Poems," and has now in press "a Key to the Science of Theology." He is both a powerful speaker and writer, fearless bold and energetic in the cause of truth, and a high minded honorable man. We know of no one more competent than him to do justice to the work in which he has engaged, and we hail the rising of the "Mormon Herald" with pleasure; we expect from that source some rich treats, and shall forthwith send for an exchange. The following is the prospectus:

A Lecture on Russia.

On Monday evening last, Dr. Baird delivered a lecture on "Russia" in the lecture room of the Spingles Institute. He commenced by describing the country and went on to give a short synopsis of its early history.

He said it was not to be wondered at that Constantinople should be looked upon by the Russians with a kind of veneration as they were civilized by that city, and had for many centuries looked upon it as the most wonderful city in existence. And continued he, it is not surprising that they should view it in that light, being ignorant of the existence of many of the large cities of Europe, such as Paris or London. The city of Moscow was founded by a prince named George who was one of the Paramount Princes of the twelfth century, this prince also built the Kremlin a fortified enclosure for the defence of the prince against his subjects in case of insubordination; every city of importance, almost has a Kremlin with the exception of the capitol, St. Petersburgh, Russia, was invaded by the Tartars in the twelfth century and formed three kingdoms one of which was established in the Crimea. The Poles in the fourteenth century conquered the western part of the Empire as far as Moscow, which was regained by Ivan the third, during his reign an attempt was made to establish a republic which ended disastrously to the projectors, they being nearly all exterminated; his grandson Ivan the fourth was the last of the decendents of Ruric. In the reign of the founder of the present dynasty "Michael Romanoff," the title of "Czar" was first given to the sovereign. This title he says, is derived from the last syllable of Nebuchadnezzar and Belschazzar which signifies prince, it is spelt Zsar in the Russ.

Alexis was the son of Michael and the father of Peter the Great who reigned thirty-six years, commencing his reign in 1689. Poland was divided into three parts during the reign of Catharine the Great, and she also obtained complete possession of the Crimea in 1783. Alexander died in the Crimea of a bilious fever leaving Nicholas to reign in his stead. Nicholas, however believing Constantine to be the rightful successor to his father, offered to resign all pretension to the crown in his favor. This Constantine refused to accept and informed him of a written document which he had signed at the earnest request of his father resigning all claim in his favor. Speaking of the present Emperor he said, he was not quite as tall as his father, thirty-seven years old, of a milder temperament, and not quite as energetic as his father. He has a wife which he married in 1841, she is from Germany. The lecturer went on to say that he thought him as capable to hold the reins of government as any man in Russia, having had charge of the Empire during his father's visit to England. When he became of age he asked his father for the liberation of the Polish Chiefs who had been banished to Siberia, which his father granted, but refused to release those who were engaged in the rebellion of 1825, which took place just after his coronation. He thought that Alexander was inclined to peace, but would not abandon the Crimea or withdraw his fleet from the Black Sea.

PRUNING GRAPE VINES.—Now is the time to attend to this important matter, if it has not already been done. Cut off from one-third to one-half of the past season's growth from the main shoots, and cut the side shoots back to within one or two buds of the main branches, taking care not to cut so close to the buds as to injure them by the drying of the end of the branch. The fruit ripens better and the vines are more productive and longer lived, for being thoroughly pruned. Currants and Gooseberries also need pruning to have their fruit in perfection. All the branches more than two years old should be cut out of currant bushes, and gooseberries should be cut back nearly one-half of the past year's growth and the weak and straggling branches cut out particularly where they are trained as dwarf standards, which is the only correct mode.

Correspondence.

From our Boston Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 31st, 1855.

DEAR SIR—I send you a short synopsis of a speech delivered last evening at the Tremont Temple, by the Hon. Charles Sumner, M. C., on the subject of Slavery. Mr. Sumner is an able, ardent, and distinct speaker, though his sentiment, savors more of the radical, than is congenial to "cold bloods" like myself. His audience which filled the Hall, listened to his speech of full two hours, with much apparent satisfaction. The grand corner-stone of the Anti-Slavery enterprise, he said, was the incontrovertible fact that Slavery was wrong. He spoke somewhat disparagingly of the Southern people—said that their laws were bad, and that no people en masse were better than their laws; that some endeavored to sustain Slavery, on the ground that Noah cursed Caanan &c., but in order to make this available he said four points must be proven. First, that the African Race are the descendants of Caanan. Second, that that curse was to continue to his posterity. Third,—Fourth, that their masters are the decendants of Shem, and Japheth. In the absence of this proof, he should claim that the Africans were heirs to the same powers, and blessings, that were enjoyed by the rest of mankind. "So much for distinction of races." He next remarked that it had been alledged by some that the abolition of Slavery was anti-Christian; but to prove the reverse he quoted Colridge, of England, whom he considered among the best of authorities; that it was both necessary and essential to Christianity. "He, who in the gospel sees Slavery, sees only the reflection of his own character." "The pillar of the Anti-Slavery institution is, all men are free and equal, laud it in free speech, and press." (Powerful levers this speech, and press, with public opinion to stand on. Mr. Sumner has the advantage of the ancient philosopher, who only wanted a place whereon to stand, to enable him to pry the world up.)

In reply to the compensation argument, urged by some, he said, give the compensation to the Slave—not to his Master.* How much he asked shall be paid for a child to be given to its father? A wife to her husband, &c. &c.

"Impracticability is urged by some as an objection to our enterprise." "We must wait until a more covenient opportunity." Said this made him think of the woman that forbid her son going to the water, until he had learned to swim. He compared the Anti-Slavery movement, to the worshipers of fire among the Hindoos; saying if fire burn down our house, who don't venerate fire. He eulogised the Abolitionists of the present day, as great Philanthropists whose exertions were more laudable, than those of our Fathers of the Revolution; inasmuch as the latter acted for themselves, while the former act in behalf of others. (Applause.) He condemned the fugitive Slave Bill, and said it must be made null and void. (If Gov. Young should say half as much against the Laws of General Government, they'd send at least ten Regiments to Utah forthwith.) Advised United States Commissioners to resign their offices, and others to do their duty, in resisting the encroachments of the propagandists, refering for an example, to the resistance of the Stamp Act, by the citizens of Boston, &c.

Yours respectfully,
A. ROBBINS, JR.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

THE practise of the primativee ages in this respect was nearly obsolete in the days of the Apostles and of Christ, yet instances did occur sometimes, one of which is to be found recorded in the Gospel of the Infancy; which though it may be fairly regarded as Apocryphal, may yet be received as evidence of the manners of the age; even acknowledged fictions fairly represent the manners of the age and country in which they were written. This change in the institutions of God's people was gradual; it began during their sojourn of seventy years in the land of the Chaldees, whose institutions though allowing of concubines, admitted but of one woman as wife, par excellence, even in the family of the King; of this fact the book of Esther affords sufficient proof. The change was completed when the Jews came into political contact with the Roman people, the greater stringency of whose institutions regarding matrimony having outwardly a greater show of virtue and godliness, both Jews and Christians were shamed into compliance with them; neither must we in this connexion overlook the modifying powers of the laws of the Romans, who, in common with other conquerors, gradually moulded the institutions of the conquered nations to their own; yet we are informed that in the primitive Christian Church concubinage was sometimes allowed.

We have seen that a plurality of females in the family relation was, by the patriarchs, adopted, to obviate the result so much dreaded by them, extinction of the family; and though the abolition in Christ of the faith in distinct nationalities makes the duty less obligatory, it is nevertheless a duty as highly obligatory as any other social duty. If a family may be allowed to perish without using appropriate remedies, so may the individual, and there is an end to the charities of life. If a branch of the human family may be allowed to die out without help, so may the whole stock of the human race. This is a duty certainly much more binding than that of acquiring property, in as much as the living human is of much more value than any material possession, and is that which gives value to all possession; and it is evidently very unreasonable that full licence should be given to the acquisition of the subordinate, while the acquisition of the principal is restrained, from which it derives all its value.

The Heathen nations who were the first to adopt this stringency in the family relation, and who subsequently imposed their mode on the Jews and Christians, suffered in consequence of it the scourge of desolating intestine wars, and sometimes subversion of Empire, resulting from so trivial a cause as the accidental barrenness of a woman, fierce disputes about the succession arising on the extinction of the reigning dynasty. Gibbon very justly alleges this as one of the chief causes of the fall of the Roman Empire, the first Emperors having died childless, whereby a military despotism was soon established, the prætorian guard soon acquiring a ruinous power, the chief office in the Empire being at their disposal. Even in our own days the French Empire has, more than once, in the same way, suffered the greatest reverses from the operation of this stringent law, which however respectable it may be in appearance, and having "a show of godliness," and savoring of a high tone of morals is unquestionably of Heathen origin. Yet it would become man to submit to the necessity however sad, of the extinction of families, or even of races in this way, if the necessity was imposed by God; but as the relation is, in nearly every instance concerted by human means, it appears by no means a duty to submit passively to the consequences of man's meddling perversions, but much rather, by all means to repent of those perversions and seek the proper remedy. Nehemiah did not think the marriage relation too sacred to be meddled with, nor that its perversions once committed must stand forever, when he compelled the Jews to put away their strange wives and their children.

To trace the origin of the form of the family compact we must go back to the condition of the nations of Europe North of the Alps anterior to the historic period. The information that we have about them shows that the land was held in common, being divided to the several families yearly according to their numbers; a consequence of their frequent migrations, which rendered the monopoly of land in perpetuity impossible. It is evident that in this equal and democratic condition of things, a plurality of females in a family would create much envy among neighbors, especially so closely settled and stinted for room as they often were; as others would, by the difference, conceive themselves unjustly oppressed; and as the right to the homestead followed the woman and her children, a plurality would, on the demise of the father, have often created the greatest confusion. To obviate such feelings and circumstances such a stringency of institutions was adopted. The very remarkable similarity that exists between a great many of the radicals of the several languages of Southern and Northern Europe especially between the Latin and Celtic indubitably proves a collateral origin of these nations; and the irruptions of the Northern hordes, many of which may reasonably be supposed to have taken place even before the historic period, from some of which the Allabrages of Cisalpine Gaul must have originated, show how their resemblance of language and of institutions took place; of institutions, because among both the Northern and Southern nations, a similarity in the family relation and in the distribution of land prevailed even till the decay of the Roman Republic.

There was a mistake last week in the above name, it was Mr. Hutchings instead of Wm. Holderness.

FOR THE MORMON.

Nations Compared.

A VAST amount of curious and valuable information has been collated by a Frenchman, with the view of instituting comparisons between Catholic and Protestant nations in the threefold relations of wealth, knowledge and morality. Availing ourselves of the material presented, we find various interesting problems started. Learned statisticians are called in to give their aid. Thus far the equality of cultivation claimed for Great Britain, Italy, Prussia, the Low Countries, and Austria, to the extent of one-third of their territory, it is attempted to be shown that this cultivation is only apparent, that not only is the British territory almost entirely stripped of forests and smitten with sterility for a fourth part of its surface, but as its natural fertility is nothing as compared to that of Italy, so the extent of cultivation being the same in proportion to the extent of the countries, the superiority in civilization is on the side the least favored by nature. This brings up the question: as to what civilization is. The people of Italy surely are not to be sunk lower in the scale of nations by reason of the excessive fertility of their soil. There was a time when even this caviler would allow they stood, without question, highest and first of people; but nature favored Italy then as it does now; flowers, fruit and grain spring up in the same luxurious abundance. Nor can the industry or greatness of a country be properly measured by its exports. It may consume what it produces within itself, and yet the rich enough to pay for required imports. How men will try and push their problems may be seen in the attempt made to show by a German table, representing algebraically the absolute importance of the chief commercial powers, that the United States ranks only third, because less entirely Protestant than the British Empire, or England. This is certainly news to us. The British Empire has the vast majority of its subjects not even nominal Christians, as witness British India in its vast extent; and in respect to the United States, the important element of time and of relative geographic position—a position which allows of yet more rapid and larger development—is put out of sight. This not allowing of time and opportunity to progress reminds us of what the Abbe Raynal wrote in 1781, to the effect that if ten millions of men ever found subsistence in these provinces, it would be a great deal. But, as M. de Tocqueville remarks, in the sixty-five years since elapsed, the ten millions stated as the extreme limit of what was possible are more than doubled, and what is more, this progression preserves its astonishing rapidity, promises not only tens, but hundreds of millions.

In view of difference of races, we cannot conceive it otherwise than unfair to deduce such deductions as are deduced from opposing what is called "Protestant America in the North" to Catholic America in the South. It is because the South American Republics preserve the blood and indolent pride of the Spaniards, that constitutions are destroyed hourly by the will of some dictator. There is disorder, and there is misery, but certainly not such an assemblage of ignorance as people would have us believe. Why should the South Americans be so much denounced because not happening to have so many steamboats and railways as ourselves? This denunciation might surely be spared in view of the prophecy of Michael Chevalier, with which we quit the subject: "The Anglo-American people will lay the foundation of a race in South America, although it is possible that the type that now predominates may be eclipsed by another; whilst the Hispano-Americans will leave no posterity, unless, by one of those inundations called conquests, a flood of more generous blood from the North or East comes to fill their impoverished veins." We have only to add, that to judge merely by the state of agriculture, by the progress of industry, and by the extent of commerce, the advantage is always on the same side.

The steamer Arabia arrived yesterday from the Missouri river. Among her passengers were Mr. J. L. Hatcher, of Mora: Mr. Folger, of Santa Fe, and other gentlemen from different parts of New Mexico. They arrived on the frontier on the 27th of March last, having left Mora on the 25th of February. There were sixty persons accompanying Hatcher's, Folger's, Armijo's and Moore & Reese's trains, the last named being from Trecolate. At the date of their leaving Mora there was no snow, and they encountered none until they reached the Pawnee Forks, when it snowed for about forty hours. The snow covered the plains to a foot in depth. They suffered a great deal from cold during the storm; but aside from this, the journey was very pleasant. No stock was lost on their way.

The news brought by Mr. Hatcher relating to the Indian tribes is unfavorable. The Utahs and Apaches, after continued depredations on the whites, had at last united for more extended operations. The Apaches had nearly all left the south and gone north to the Utahs. Five companies of volunteers and two of regulars had been preparing to go in pursuit of the two tribes. They, hearing of this, had sent word to the troops to come on, and the troops were to have left on the 26th of February, the day succeeding the departure of Mr. Hatcher's train.

The troops were under the command of Col. Fontelroy. The Indians, at the last accounts were awaiting the troops at a point called Balos Salado (Salt Valley) on the head waters of the Arkansas. They number, Mr. Hatcher thinks, from 600 to 800 warriors. On their journey, Hatcher's hunter, when at a distance of two or three miles from the train was pursued by a party of Apaches; but he being on a mule and they on foot, he escaped without difficulty, and reached the train.

At Bent's Fort the train saw numbers of the Cheyennes, Arrapahoes, Apaches, Kiowas and other tribes. All of the Indians have suffered terribly during the past winter. There are no buffalo anywhere in the vicinity of their lands, and they have not only killed their own stock but have also stolen and killed one hundred and sixty head of cattle belonging at Bent's Fort, and from forty to sixty head also, belonging at the mouth of the "Orphan," a tributary of the Arkansas. The train saw a party of Camanches at Canadian Fork. They stated that they had not seen a buffalo during the season, and though the Camanches were the richest tribes in the amount of their stock, yet nearly all of their stock had been killed to give them a subsistence. Mr. Hatcher was informed by the Indians at Bent's Fort that the Camanches had already declared war against the whites.

This statement, however, Mr. H. did not credit. All of the Indians seen are restless and dissatisfied with their condition. They make no concealment of the fact that if government does not either send them ammunition, or permit them to procure it of the traders, they intend to commence an offensive war, and to plunder every train. They state that they are now waiting, and will wait for a time to see what action government takes upon the matter permitting them to get ammunition from the traders. If they do not get an answer within a reasonable time, they will then open hostilities.

At the time of Mr. Hatcher's departure and journey, most of the Indian tribes were suffering from small pox. It had but recently broke out amongst them. They were then scattered over the prairies, in order, if possible, to rid themselves of the contagion, but considerable numbers had already died from it. Mr. Hatcher saw no buffalo until the trains reached Little Coon Creek. From that point to Cow Creek they were very plenty.

From all that they could learn, Mr. Hatcher and the other gentlemen are of the opinion that another winter of suffering like the past among the tribes, will result in their uniting against the whites.—[St. Louis Intelligencer, April 4.

The largest clock, it is said, that ever was constructed, has recently been finished by Mr. Dent for the new Houses of the English Parliament. The dials are 22 feet in diameter; the point of the minute hand will, therefore, move nearly 14 inches every minute. The pendulum is 15 feet long.

Riot in Cincinnati.

Election in Cincinnati—A Serious Riot—Cannon Fired upon the Foreigners—Great Excitement—Ten or Twelve Persons Killed, or Mortally Wounded.

Cincinnati, April 2. The result of to-day's election is not determined, but the Know-Nothings are probably ahead.

Several serious rows have taken place during the afternoon, and it is reported that one American and two Germans have been killed. In the melee, the ballot boxes were destroyed. Still further disturbances are apprehended.

Second Dispatch.—A Dr. Brown was assaulted at the polls in the 11th ward, this afternoon, by foreigners, and so severely beaten that he died in a short time. The Know-Nothings turned out en masse, and taking a cannon from the Dutch and Irish, turned it upon them and fired, and afterwards seized and broke up the ballot boxes. The number killed during the melee is not known. The tumult is very great, and the excitement intense. The Know-Nothings are marching in procession through the streets with cannon, and have ordered a rendevous in the 11th ward to-night.

Third Dispatch.—The 11th ward contains a large majority of Germans, and it having been charged that parties were prevented from voting American tickets in that ward, a large party of Americans took possession of the ballot boxes, and destroyed the tickets. Several were wounded in the struggle, but none killed, Dr. Brown being yet alive, and likely to recover, although badly injured. The 11th ward is supposed to have given a majority of 600 or 700 for the "Sagnicht" ticket, but the vote cannot now be counted.

A very large vote was polled at the Municipal election to-day. The result is doubtful, and cannot be ascertained until morning.

Cincinnati, April 3. Our municipal election is still undecided, frauds having been discovered in the 12th ward, where it is proposed to throw out the entire vote; which will give Taylor, the American candidate, about 100 majority. Had the entire vote of the city been counted, the whole democratic ticket would have been elected by 400 to 1000 majority.

There was no more rioting after our dispatch last night. It is supposed that ten or twelve persons were either killed or mortally wounded, and the only wonder is that the loss of life was not greater, as the cannon was discharged indiscriminately. It was altogether the most disgraceful election day ever experienced in this city.

Our community continue intensely excited. The cannon taken from the Germans yesterday, by the Americans, was quietly conveyed from the public landing this afternoon, by the former. An immense number of people have assembled in Fifth street market place. They sent a committee for the cannon, which had been taken to Freeman's Hall, and passed resolutions that if it is not delivered forthwith they will go and take it. This they appeared determined to do, and a serious riot to-night seems unavoidable.

The following is the sequel to the election disturbances. It was found that the ballot box in the 12th ward contained 55 more ballots than there were names on the poll-lists. One of the judges insisted upon throwing out the vote of the ward, but the others would not agree. While the judges were counting the votes, a body of men entered the room, and, taking the boxes forcibly from them, burned both the ballots and the tally lists in the open streets.

The votes of the 11th and 12th wards were thus disposed of. The remaining wards give Taylor 477 majority. The American party contend that a large amount of illegal voting was done. It is reported that Mr. Taylor will not accept office under the circumstances.

Cincinnati, Tuesday Night, April 3. The excitement in this city is on the increase. The Germans refused to give up the cannon. Fighting has consequently commenced, over the canal, and it is reported that several persons have been killed. The Germans are mostly armed, and fortified within houses, while the American party are also well prepared. The probability is, that matters will be postponed until morning, when it is hoped the bitter feeling may have somewhat subsided.

April 4. Nothing of special importance transpired after our last dispatch last night. This morning a large crowd assembled in Fifth Street Market space, and the greatest excitement was manifested. The military are under arms, awaiting orders. The Germans have agreed to deliver up the cannon at 10 o'clock this morning, and if they do so, it may prevent a collision.

About 4 o'clock this afternoon, some boys crossed into the disputed territory, and raised great excitement among the Germans. Pistols were fired, but fortunately none were injured.

Great American Reform Meeting.

Immense meetings of the American party were held at the Melodeon, and also at the Mechanics' Institute, on Wednesday, to consider the present state of the excitement in the city, and the frauds of the election and the destruction of the ballot-box of Monday. Animated speeches were made, and the most determined spirit pervaded both meetings to preserve the laws and peace of the country. The great outrages of Monday were strongly condemned. The following resolutions were presented and adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the American Reform party of the city of Cincinnati has heard with pain and regret of the destruction of the ballot box and poll books of the Eleventh and Twelfth wards of this city. They disclaim all knowledge and agency in these acts of violence, and condemn them in the most unqualified terms. The frauds which characterized the election in those wards, and the brutal personal assaults which were perpetrated on our American and Protestant fellow citizens, by lawless foreigners and emissaries of the Pope, throughout the day of the election; the attempts that were made by men ignorant of the genius and spirit of our republican institutions, to prevent native born and other Protestant citizens from voting, deserve the most unqualified condemnation of all good citizens. But we cannot consent, in this country of law, that such excesses shall be redressed by such retaliatory measures. Whilst the ballot box shall be kept pure, its abuse, by whatever fraudulent means, must not be redressed by violence—but rather by a peaceable resort to the courts and to the laws.

Resolved, That the American Reform party of the city of Cincinnati have heard with gratification the determination of the candidates on their ticket, to decline any and every advantage which may have been given to them by the loss to their opponents of the votes of said wards.

The New Postage Law,

An Act further to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of Postage in the United States, and for other purposes, passed March 3, eighteen hundred and fifty-one.

And for a double letter there shall be charged double the rate above specified; and for a treble letter, treble these rates; and for a quadruple letter quadruple those rates; and every letter or parcel not exceeding half an ounce in weight shall be deemed a single letter; and every additional weight of half an ounce, or additional weight of less than half an ounce, shall be charged with an additional single postage; and upon all letters passing through or in the mail of the United States, excepting such as are to or from a foreign country, the postages as above specified shall be pre-paid except upon letters and packages addressed to officers of the government on official business, which shall be so marked on the envelope. And from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, the Postmaster General may require postmasters to place postage stamps upon all pre-paid letters upon which such stamps may not have been placed by the writers.

And all drop letters, or letters placed in any post office not for transmission through the mail, but for delivery only, shall be charged with postage at the rate of one cent each; and all letters which shall hereafter be advertised as remaining over or uncalled for in any post office, shall be charged with one cent each, in addition to the regular postage, both to be accounted for as other postages now are.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any postmaster or other person to sell any postage stamp or stamped envelope for any larger sum than that indicated upon the face of such postage stamp, or for a larger sum than that charged therefor by the Post Office Department; and any person who shall violate this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars. This act to take effect and be in force from and after the commencement of the next fiscal quarter after its passage: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to alter the laws in relation to the franking privilege.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That for the greater security of valuable letters posted for transmission in the mails of the United States the Postmaster General be and hereby is authorized to establish a uniform plan for the registration of such letters on application of parties posting the same, and to require the pre-payment of the postage, as well as a registration fee of 5 cents on every such letter or packet, to be accounted for by postmasters receiving the same in such manner as the Postmaster General shall direct. Provided, however: That such registration shall not be compulsory; and it shall not render the Post Office Department or its revenue liable for the loss of such letters or packets or the contents thereof. Approved March 3, 1855.

Russia.

The policy of the Russian Cabinet in respect to the present war is at this time absorbing attention both at home and abroad, in the political as well as in the social or industrial circle—a circle forever widening, enclosing, as it does, the interests that would be favored by a speedy peace. "He that survives his enemy has conquered him," are words that have passed into a proverb; but in what ubiquitous shape the spirit of Nicholas may re-appear, and what armaments on land and sea confront the new formed combinations and increasing strength of the banded powers, none can tell. Moloch had need be satisfied, and the nations are beginning to count the cost. Since the war commenced, France has sent to the East, it is believed, more than 100,000 men; Turkey has furnished in the Danube and the Crimea, and England has sent more than 60,000 men. More than one-half of these have perished in the Dobrudscha, at Varna, and in the Crimea. And none know where to point for the gain, and none know what to look for as the result. The purposes of Napoleon are yet hid in mystery, though it is easy to conjecture he aims at dominion from the Danube to the Caspian, in arousing those nationalities which only require, according to the testimony of the most philosophic travelers, a master mind, skillful in combination and eminent for genius, to give them compactness, strength and opposition. They will side with their deliverer.

Wholesale Proscription.

We commend the following instructive statement of facts to those whose minds have been poisoned against all citizens not born in the United States. It is from the pen of that eminent publicist, Dr. Francis Leiber:

Has any man shed greater lustre on illustrious Athens than Aristotle? Aristotle was a foreigner; and came to Attica when seventeen years old. Has there been any Spaniard more Spanish than Columbus? Columbus was a Genoese. Has there been a Frenchman more French than Napoleon, and Cuvier, and Constant? Napoleon was an Italian; Cuvier was by birth and education a German; Constant a Swiss. Who carried the Netherlanders through the direst war of independence on record, and who founded the great republic of the Netherlands? William, of Orange, a German. Has England ever had a more English King than William the Third, the Netherlander? Has Germany ever had a more German leader than Eugene, of Savoy? Who was Catherine, of Russia, that made her the great power? She was a German woman. Has Oxford ever had a greater Professer than Erastus, of Rotterdam? The very country in which the Know Nothing now reviles "the foreign," was discovered by Cabot, a Genoese, in the service of England. The proto martyr of the American Revolution was Montgomery, an Irishman; so was Barry, called the father of the American navy; and Paul Jones, the bold and early captain, was a Scot.

Were De Kalb, La Fayette, Hamilton and Gallatin no Americans? Mark the list of signers and see how many were "foreigners."

The hue and cry against "foreigners" belongs to pagan antiquity, when one word served for foreigner and enemy; but hot to Christianity, one of whose earliest writers most gloriously said: nostra civitas totus mundus.

The very word Christianity rebukes Know Nothingism. The term free trade has a far wider meaning than a mere economical one. It applies to all merit, truth and intellect. Let every one stand and fall by his own individuality, and take the best of everything where you find it best. So did your forefathers, so your Gospel demands it.

When Sir Harry Saville founded, in 1619, his Savilian Professorship at Oxford, he prescribed that the best man that could be gotten, no matter whence, should always be taken, so that he was a man of "good fame and honest repute, ex quacunque nationis orbis christiana et cujuscunque orainis sive professionis." And this ought be the rule in all spheres, but most especially so in our own land.—[Pittsburgh Gazette.

Property of Religious Societies.

The Legislature of Michigan has passed a law concerning churches and religious societies, establishing uniform rules for the acquisition, tenure, control and disposition of property conveyed or dedicated for religious purposes. It provides that all church property shall vest and descend, with the improvements, in perpetual succession to and shall be held by the trustees provided in the act in trust for said church, congregation, or society. And also that no bishop, vicar, rector, parson, curate, priest, deacon, or other officer in any church, religious body, order, society, or association; no superior or other officer or member, male or female, of any religious order, ecclesiastical or lay, nor of any ecclesiastical, educational, or charitable institution or establishment shall, in consequence of such office or membership, or in the character or capacity of such officer or member, have, possess, or exercise any power, capacity, or franchise of a corporation sole, so far as relates to the taking, holding, managing, selling, or transmitting property, and every gift, grant, devise, bequest, conveyance, or lease of any real estate. The law is general, and applies to all religious denominations alike.

Washington on Religious Toleration.

The following letter was written by General Washington, soon after the adjournment of the Convention, which framed the Constitution of the United States, and over which that great and good man presided. It was addressed to the "General Committee of the United Baptist Churches in Virginia:"

"Gentlemen: If I could have ascertained the slightest apprehension that the Constitution framed by the Convention where I had the honor to preside, might possibly endanger the religious rights of any ecclesiastical society, certainly I would never have placed my signature to it; and if I could not conceive that the General Government might even be so administered as to render the liberty of conscience insecure, I beg you will be persuaded that no one would be more zealous than myself to establish effectual barriers against the horrors of spiritual tyranny, and every species of religious persecution. For you doubtless I have often expressed my sentiments that any man conducting himself as a good citizen, and being accountable to God alone for his religious opinions, ought to be protected in worshipping the Deity according to the dictates of his own conscience.

Salting Beef for Summer Use.—For 100 lbs. of beef, take 16 quarts of fine Ashton sack salt and 4 ounces of saltpetre; cut the meat and pack it edgewise, after rubbing the pieces all over with salt; and after a layer is completed, take an axe or maul, and pound down solid. Then sprinkle on a little saltpetre and fill up all interstices with salt and so on until the cask is full. Those who do not like saltpetre, may omit it without injury to the meat. By this way of salting, it makes its own brine, and never wants repacking—nor the brine scalding.

Spurious ten cent pieces have recently been put in circulation at Syracuse. They are represented as being well-executed and liable to be received as genuine.

Yankee Clockmaking—What Becomes of all the Tickers?

The clock business of the country, and so of the world, is done in Connecticut. It is thought that the capital, yearly invested, is now $300,000, and that the annual business now amounts to $1,000,000. Of this one-half is done in this city, one-fourth in Bristol, and one-fourth in Plymouth; and from it 2,000 men, with families, derive their entire support.

The number of clocks made by the Jerome Manufacturing Company, of New Haven, is 200,000 a year, 20,000 per month, and 800 per day, embracing fifty distinct varieties. The highest wholesale price per dozen is $100; the lowest $10. To produce these they annually consume the following raw material:

Pine lumber, feet	2,500,000
Mahogany and Rosewood, do	1,000,000
Looking glass plates	50,000
Boxes of glass	4,000
Casks of nails	1,500
Iron, tons	600
Glue, barrels	500
Rolled and cast brass, tons	150
Varnish, barrels	100
Zinc, tons	35

Their lumber is obtained directly from Maine and Western New York. The other materials are mainly if not wholly purchased in New York city.—[New Haven Palladium, March 17.

Fish Breeding.—In a recent visit to the fish hatching establishment of M. Coste, in Paris, it is said that the French minister of agriculture, commerce and public works, found there two hundred and fifty thousand newly hatched fish, one hundred and fifty thousand of which had only just been brought up from the establishment at Huningruen. All this large number were conveyed to Paris at the same time, and without a perceptible loss. The fish comprised common trout, trout from the lakes, salmon from the Rhine, and trout from the Swiss lakes.

Information Wanted.

A daughter of John and Ellen Foulstine is desirous to know of the whereabouts of her father and mother, if living. John and Ellen Foulstine left Blackburn, England, in the spring of 1854, and sailed in the "Windermere," for New Orleans, with the intention of going to the Valley. Any information relative to them, or a young daughter about nine years of age, will be thankfully received by Joseph and Anne Harrison. Address to this office.

E. R. YOUNG,

Cotton Yarn Manufacturer,

Begs leave to inform the public that he manufactures, and has constantly on hand a large assortment of Domestic Yarns Warps and Fillings, Chandlers Wick, Double and Twisted Yarns, Hatter's Cotton, and every variety of coarse Yarns, which he will sell at the lowest possible wholesale prices; or he will manufacture to order. The subscriber would state that as he has good machinary, experienced hands, and attends to the general superintendance himself, he is able and will manufacture as good and as cheap as any other establishment.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the eltizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les îles de la Manche.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

"Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows."—ISAIAH IX. 8.

O! WHO are these myriads of countless ones
That fly as a cloud from their native homes,
That leave with joy, in a mighty band
The rever'd scenes of their fatherland,
And are launching forth on the deep blue sea,
With a purpose firm and feeling free—
A powerful gathering host?

As doves to their windows they seek their rest,
From the north and the south, from the east and west;
The ends of the earth and every zone
Of the honest number yield their own,
And the poor and the needy and the wealthy throng,
And the weak are strengthen'd by those who're strong.

Who can this people be?

O, these are Saints of the Lord Most High,
Who from Babylon's strife and confusion fly;
They are gathering home to Zion's land,
Directed by heaven's own high hand;
And they trust in the arm of the Lord to save,
And guide them safe o'er the fitful wave,
Unto that promis'd land.

The voice of the Prophet bids them go,
And his word is the word of the Lord, they know;
So gladly they gather at His behest,
To their beautiful home in the far, far west,
Where the choicest things that earth can afford,
For the pure in heart are freely stor'd;
In Zion's goodly land.

Lo! they gather out from every clime,
To drink of the joys of truth sublime,
As it freely flows in perennial streams,
Where the spirit of inspiration gleams,
And Revelation's sacred light
Sheds its cheering ray to guide aright
The Saints in that blest land.

O, happy people! O, noble race!
Who gather home to that glorious place;
What endless blessings are yours to gain,
If ye steadfast prove and the truth maintain;
For you shall the heavens and earth be rife
With good, and the powers of endless life
Ye shall win in Zion's land.

THE CRISIS.—1855.

NUMBER V.

THE WHITE SLAVES OF NEW YORK.

In all the side thoroughfares debouching on the Bowery and Centre street, from the latter on to Broadway, and even farther west, as, for instance, along Canal, Grand, Broome, Prince and Spring streets, and those that cross the latter, there are very many boarding-houses, chiefly inhabited by young working women. Some of these houses are quite neatly furnished and fitted up, but others are wretched. In the better class establishments, the weekly charge for board and lodging is from two and a half dollars up to four; and in the more humble, it descends from two and a half to one dollar, and even to seventy-five cents. Of course, it must not be imagined that, for the highest of these rates, a separate room and bed or anything like delicate fare can be obtained, but for four, or, even three dollars, a young girl can live in comparative decency and comfort; her bed will be good and warm, if not scrupulously fine or tidy, her daily fare plain, but sufficient and substantial, and, if there be companions with her, as there usually are, one or two, and, sometimes, many more, mutual trials leading to mutual confidences and mutual friendships, generally render that association agreeable. Each selects a particular crony from among the number, and the respective pairs start to their work together, in the morning, and return from it, together, in the evening, if both can go in the same direction; if not, when they separate, they appoint the time and place of their next meeting, and canvass, with one another, the little friendly engagements they have made or the errands they must run. When they are reunited, it is always strict etiquette for any beau or visitor when he invites one of them to walk, or to an evening's entertainment, to ask her friend, also. The latter will, then, judge, under the circumstances, and according to the place, whether it would or would not be advisable for her to go, and, should she, upon sage reflection, perceive that the tender relations of the other two parties would be best advanced, by her remaining at home, she, with some ready excuse, declines the pleasure, and is rewarded by the beaming smile and after-night's confidence of her dear room mate.

The confidence is bestowed in any case, even where the usual politeness of a joint invitation has been omitted, by some rash suitor, but there is less skipping over interesting passages, perhaps, when it has been extended and formally waived. The evenings at home are spent at work, when the toiler has plenty to do, or if she be thrown idle from the shop, with any sewing of her own, that she may have on hand. These hours of labor are cheered with thoughts of pleasanter hours to come; the calm and rest of the Sabbath day, with its letter to friends at home—if the girl be from the country—and of friendly meetings, such as those at which we have hinted; if she has her parents or nearest relatives in the city. And what gentle poetry mingles with the meditations of these poor toiling girls; what hopes of future affluence and happiness, what aspirations for a better condition in life, an independent home and fireside, no matter how humble, some one to share joy and sorrow, some one to caress and love.

It would not be our prerogative, kind reader, to record all this, but many a time, as we have sat by and watched them at their work, or pausing at the corner, in the hour when the streets they inhabit are thronged with them, have studied the expression of their faces and the cadence of their walk, as they hurried by, have we read histories of sentiment that, endowed with appropriate voice, would touch every heart and interest the coldest sceptic in their behalf.

But, enough of this! We have not time to linger over speculations which, however true, are not the sim of our present consideration.

Let us depict their actual condition. We have portrayed the most engaging side of their existence: let us now by taking you behind the scenes, unfold their actual state. One description will serve for many, and, in making it, we shall deal with what is comfort compared to the situation of many hundreds who pine, to day, without work, and almost without hope, with no other prospect before them than the yawning gates of moral and physical ruin.

Imagine a dilapidated house in a narrow dingy street back of the Bowery. Everything about it betokens neglect—the steps are rotten and broken—the windows reflect the color of the filthy thoroughfare; the very door droops and seems in mourning for death or wretchedness within; if you have opened it, a long, solitary hall with consumptive echoes to your footfall forbids your anticipating either gayety or comfort. Ascend a dark stairway and you stand face to face with the landlady—a spectral figure that haunts the passage and keeps jealous watch over "the secrets of her prison house."

You want a room, of course, and she will show you one, in which three young men, without reference to attire, ocupation or habits, can he accomodated, at $3 per week, if the space be not already appropriated to "young ladies." These "young ladies" are the poor working girls, and, if anxious to ascertain their lot, you have engaged a place in this delightful abode, you commence your task of observation. Here is an attic—strange satire upon ancient taste—it is composed of three "rooms"—dens!—with sloping ceilings, shaped by the fall of the roof, and walls with splotches of broken plaster, only remarkable because they are so rare, amid the desert of denuded laths. These laths look like skeleton's ribs, and there is a ghastly feeling of dampness and starvation in the chamber when you have entered it. It contains cot beds,—a larger one for yourself and an "obligato" companion, and a single one for another victim. These beds are composite; ticks, &c., are apocryphal—you sleep like an antedeluvian monster on the inequalities, the hills and hollows of a primeval region! But your lot is sumptuous compared with that of the "young ladies;" they realize the horrors of which you have only a foretaste. In the same attic, and outside of your room doors, is an open space—an Oregon territory or a neutral ground of open landing, overhung by bare rafters and flanked by brick walls, with many an entrance to the outer air, which moans in upon you, with sad melody, whenever the wind rises at midnight, or the frost does battle with the inward principle of life.

This space is partly occupied by cabins—sometimes two, somtimes three cabins of common board—eight feet in length by sixth in heighth, and in these cabins are what from courtesy we may call beds, and those beds are the allotted quarters of three and four "young ladies." In better days, when they had work and paid their board, they could command the privilege of sleeping two and three in a bed, in a room where there would be from three to four beds, for $2 to $2 50 per week; but now, when they have no work, no money, but struggling with misery, and endeavoring to sustain the appearance of decency, have pawned the last article of clothing they can spare for a miserable pittance, and that is gone, they must huddle together, thus, for economy of space and warmth. Their remaining where they are, even, is the utmost extent to which the charity of landlord and landlady, themselves poor and struggling perhaps, with helpless ones, or daughters in like case, can be stretched, and they bear it unrepiningly. The fragment of a comb, a broken basin, a niggard paring of common brown rozin soap, a broken scrap of looking-glass stuck on the plank side walls, with half a dozen crooked pins, and a ragged cloth of no color, called, for the nonce, a towel, compose the comforts of their toilet. These cabins have no windows, but there are fissures in them, and sometimes a glass door, admitting a dim sepulchral light that only serves to show how dark and dreary everything in and around them is.

This is the present home; and recollect, reader, that we have given you one of the favorable pictures of multitudes of our own American working-girls in New-York, and there they remain half-days, hungry in bed, that they may save a meal; or that one may compound a decent costume from the best apparel of all the rest, while she goes out, with a wild hope, to look for work.

And what are the ages of these girls? Nearly all under 18—many of them less than 15; some in the first dawn of girlhood, pining suffering there, without father or mother, or brother, or sister, or friend; ground to the earth by every privation; exposed to the influence of bribes so small in comfort, that you would wonder that even a beggar should not possess them; but which to these, in gratifying one single petty, natural want of their years and sex, seem irresistible, almost. Would you have believed it in your stately churches? Would you have believed it, in your rich, and quiet, and christian dwellings, stocked with comfortable servants, on the West Avenues? Would you have believed it, that while chapel, conventicle, and spacious hall ring with the extolment of American freedom, American prosperity, and American civilization, your own American girls were thus penned up by hundreds, pining, and, in spite of heroic fortitude—in spite of pure virtue, that retains its sway so long as shame and despair has not overwhelmed right reason—dying the moral, if not actually the physical death? We think not, or you would have stretched out the hand of succor—a succor which is more than the soup of foreign pauperism. And what is the alternative? At last, the precepts of home, taught by a warm fireside, at least, where there was light to behold and bread to eat,—at last, these precepts are starved and frozen out; the tumult of the street is a relief from the ever-gnawing thought; and the glitter of store and resturant, the chime of music from places of luxurious dissipation, contrasted with their actual rags, and loneliness and need, do their work; and the dark side of every thronging thoroughfare will reveal to you the rest. If those ways had voices, their utterance would be a wail, so bitter and so deep, that it would drown our anthems of patriotic and religious exultation—drown them in the perishing cries of the lovely and lost, from the midst of a society that should prize and cherish them.

Dear reader, this is no indulgence of fancy; it is a sketched history of the truth, illustrated by one or two examples; it is the history of the past winter, and of this moment. Day unto day uttereth additional speech, and night unto night bringeth knowledge.

In our next, we will trace what we have above intimated, in the case and narrative of a sweet young American girl, and follow it, with descriptive statistics of each of the trades, and the number of female hands discharged and thrown out of employment from them, during the season.

Meanwhile, may what we have already said be the means of bringing help to many who are now praying for it, with only one terrible resource remaining.—[N. Y. Evening Mirror.

Morality in London.

London Female Dormitory;

OR, THE FALLEN AND THE HOPELESS.

THE outcast female population of the western world is a blot on its reputation; so very foul, as to justify all the eastern world in refusing to accept civilization from our missions. Such a canker is nowhere else to be found. In this one respect England is the most demoralized country in the western world; and for this alone London may well be entitled Babylon the Great. We have long been taught by flattery to regard our civil constitution, our Church and State, as holding the first rank amongst the nations; but other nations do not think so; they only give us credit for wealth; and it is quite possible that we may be wealthy and very poor at the same time. Perhaps there is nowhere a greater heap of human wretchedness, filth, and poverty, than that which the pride of England contains. Here there are two nations, as Disraeli says, and the one is as poor as the other is rich. It reminds us of the last of the seven churches in the mysterious book—the church that is proud of its wealth, and knows not that it is wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked—for its shame appears through its tawdry clothing like that of a savage through the baubles of tin and glass. We hope the rest of the world will never imitate us. It is better in many respects as it is. Even Mormonism is in some respects better, and our shame is its apology.

Singular to say, that notwithstanding all our boasted benevolence, no mercy has been shown to unfortunate females; they have been sent into outer darkness, amid weeping and wailing, and their reclamation has not been attempted, for they have been treated as enfans perdus—children of perdition, for whom the hour of mercy is past. And what is still more singular, the one sex has received a legal permission to decoy the other sex into perdition, and there, like devils' agents, to leave them to their eternal fate, writing over the door of the wretchedness to which they consign them, after a little flattering confabulation, the motto of Dante's Inferno—

Can anything be worse! It is the very type, if not the substance of a diabolical mission. Between 60,000 and 80,000 women are the victims of this mission in London alone; and if we only double that number for the rest of the three kingdoms, we have a census of 160,000 persons continuously doomed in perpetual succession, not only to vice and hopeless misery in this world, but, as many teach and believe, to eternal misery in the next, whilst the Christian population looks quietly on, and sees the missionaries of evil, daily and nightly, with perfect impunity casting them into the gulf, and preventing their escape from beyond the bourn from which no convict returns into the world of respectability. It is enough to make one wish for the annihilation of all things, and the beginning of the reign of Eternal Nothing.

We have received letters occasionally from these hopeless creatures in our editorial capacity, but not many. They seem to have a general belief that their case is desperate, that they are children of perdition, and their greatest happiness appears to be in forgetting the past. Memory, the source of so many pleasing pictures to others, is only the source of wretchedness to them; for amid all their reminiscences, that fearful phantom of lost innocence ever appears and mingles in the scene. That is the only real follower that they have, the only one that never forsakes them; and the fear of him only tempts them to sink deeper, for he stands above and forbids them to rise, and there is no alternative but another step down—brandy, whisky, rum, laudanum—whilst the shapeless image of suicide flickers beneath as their last resource. Into his arms they are ever meditating a final fall—the last lover's leap, the parting cup, the final embrace.

Before last year we really did not know how to answer such letters; there was no place of repentance for them known to us, no convent in the whole of British Christendom to receive the penitents. They could only be left to their fate. It was then that we first heard of the Female Dormitory and the Female Temporary Home, instituted a year or two previously, but struggling into active existence. But small is the number that any institution can receive compared with the applications. Hundreds are sent away for want of funds. The one is indiscriminately used for the fallen, the other for the select few, or young women originally belonging to the better class of society. Many suppose that there are few or none of the lost ones from amongst the rich, but that they are merely gleanings from the poor and servile classes. They are mistaken. We answered a few weeks ago a correspondent of the name of Lizzie, who is evidently a well-educated girl, and who was persuaded to elope from a comfortable home, was ruined before she got to church, and soon after abandoned. In the following week we received a letter from a gentleman, with private address, inquiring respecting Lizzie, as she seemed to be identical with a young lady who had disappeared from the house of a respectable family of his acquaintance; but the identity has not been traced. There are some fine traits of moral character in that letter of Lizzie's. Amongst others, she had promised to a gentleman, who wept like a child when she told her story to him, to go home, and she did not go, for her fear was too powerful; but the remorse for breaking her word to that gentleman was so great, that she writes, "Go where I will, it is ever present to my mind. Even in the theatre it never leaves me. I cannot go home. Heaven only knows what is to become of me." "Do you think there is any hope for me, or am I lost soul and body?"

Another wrote to us that suicide was her only resource, unless we could point out a way of escape. She sent us her address, and we answered two of her letters with such advice as we could give. But what can any private individual do in such cases, even if he devotes a life and fortune to them? Nothing less than some great national institution, nothing less than a great law can suffice to cure the malady. Reluctantly we were obliged to leave her to her destiny. Even to call at the house would have been dangerous, or indiscreet. We were not the official representative of an institution. We knew not what sort of house it might be. What became of her we cannot tell. "Was the suicide perpetrated?" we have asked ourselves a hundred times since; "and might we not have prevented it?" Had we known of the Female Temporary Home, we should have sent her to it. She was a well-educated young woman, disgusted with her mode of life, and seeking death in preference. There are many such; and several have written to us. In the tracts of the institution of which we speak is the case of a young woman of seventeen, decoyed from a school where her parents paid £180 per annum for her education, and brought into a house of infamy in London, where she was kept a prisoner, and could not go out without a keeper. She made her escape by assuming male attire. Talk of inspecting Catholic convents! There are hundreds of Protestant convents in London where prisoners are kept, and where young women are lost to their friends. Another case is recorded of a pretty young girl picked up by an advertisement for a nursery governess. A gentleman at a railway station saw her in a first-class carriage. He was surprised at this, as she was in humble circumstances, though of respectable parents. He went up and spoke to her. A richly dressed lady sat beside her. The young woman told him the lady had engaged her as a governess. He made his bow, and withdrew. His friend from London smiled, and admired his courage; not understanding him, he inquired his meaning. He was told the lady was a procuress. The whistle sounded; no time was to be lost. He rushed to the carriage, told the young woman she was betrayed, and just had time to pull her out and save her. The rich lady was silent—it was her best policy. This is liberty! There is perhaps no such liberty enjoyed in any other country. There the public authorities can seize persons on suspicion; but they are generally rough-looking men that are suspected. Here private individuals can do what ought not to be possible in any civilized country. Indeed, if any crime deserves death, such a crime as that of stealing an innocent young woman to ruin her is that crime. It is as bad as murder; it debases the soul, and often murders the body.

Out of one hundred and seven cases received into the French Temporary House, ten were from the higher classes of society, nearly one tithe; but the institution is intended for the better class of females. Six had been governesses. In the disposal of these one hundred and seven, four emigrated, thirty-three were sent to situations, nine taken back by friends, two set up as dressmakers, and only one dismissed for bad conduct. The Dormitory is a larger institution, and there the moiety appears to consist of those who have been domestic servants—a class of women liable to many visicitudes in large cities, not only from the promiscuity of the population, but from the unfortunate chances to which they are liable of being taken into unsuitable places. Many young servants are picked up at the Register Offices for their looks only; many are compelled to go into common lodging-houses, where the daily routine is worse than slavery, except that they are at liberty to leave whenever they please. They toil there for a few weeks or months, and then take a rest on the savings of their wages. When they have spent their last shilling, and pawned some finery, they take another place, and begin anew. Tired of slavery, they often say, "what can be worse?" and they resolve to taken no more places. That one-half of the servants are not "first-rate ones," as Tom Thumb would say, must be admitted; but the same may be said of one-half of men, women and children, turnips and potatoes. Those who are intolerant with all but the best, have too high a standard for their comfort, or for their own justification at last, when they are tried by their own rule of judgment without mercy; a rule that drives thousands into shame, and leaves the responsibility on those who drove them. Who can tell where the responsibility lies, or how much each man and woman has to bear of it? It is not the actual committer of the sin alone who is to be blamed, but the instigator also. "The publicans and the harlots," said a high authority, "will enter into the Kingdom of Heaven before the chief priests and elders of the people," for the former are the victims of the latter's mismanagement.

Among the interesting little tracts that are published by the two female institutions, is one called "London by Moonlight." It is the report of a walk in the streets of London, before and after midnight, by four gentlemen connected with the institutions. It reveals some curious facts. Among others, that no apostleship had as yet been directed to the unfortunates. They never heard of such a thing. "Four gentlemen come out to look after poor friendless girls! It is very good of you; I will call and thank you," said one. With tears in her eyes another said, "Oh, sir, I will consent to live on bread and water, if you will rescue me from this loathsome life." "How kind you are," said another; "no one ever spoke to me as you have done." When told of the institution, another said, "I never heard of such a thing in my life." The harvest is riper there than anywhere; and none are more willing to be converted than those who are deserted and desolate. Moreover, there is a wonderful amount of heart and natural virtue left in these victims of Western civilization. They are not corrupted by any doctrines or teachings. Neither preachers, lecturers, divines nor philosophers, have given a direction to their simple minds. They are not infidels; they generally possess the current theology of the Christian populace; and if they go not to church or chapel, it is only because they think themselves unworthy to go. They have spiritual humility; they have the confession of sin. In this respect they have the religious precedence of those who seduce them and hide their own guilt. They go into heaven therefore before them.

One of the tracts tells a melancholy story of one of them who was suddenly possessed, and exclaimed, "I know that I am death-struck, and damned to all eternity. The devil has told me so, and that he will drag me to endless torments at six o'clock!" She then preached repentance to her companions, and they in alarm thought of sending for a clergyman. No philosophical scoffing was heard. Faith of some sort was apparent in all of them. But the sufferer exclaimed that nothing could save her. The man who ruined her sought for admittance, but she would not see him. She cursed him, and said, "I wish he may soon follow me to endless misery; I shall long for his arrival that I may help to torment him." At six o'clock, the hour predicted, she expired. Four classes of expounders will explain this their own way. The first will say it was the devil that spoke to her, and faithfully fulfilled his own word, though the truth is not in him; the second, the philosopher and pill-and-draught man, will say it was madness, which explains such things as pain explains toothache, and that fear alone fulfilled the prediction; the mesmerist will say she was rendered ecstatic and clairvoyant, and saw clearly the time of her end; the American spiritualist will say some departed spirit possessed her. But whichever be the right, and whether or not the inspiration was from a higher source, it is, notwithstanding, a fact that such things do occur, and they reveal at least a mental and spiritual result—the tone of mind produced by the mode of life—"Mark ye the perfect man and behold the upright. The latter end of that man is peace." This beautiful young woman was only sixteen—the religious feeling was yet strong in her. It is strong in many of them; and though subdued for a season by drink and gaiety, and forced down by pressure from above, it bubbles up at last, and tears of penitence are shed abundantly—more tears than the respectable shed. Like Simon Peter they weep bitterly. Who knows how clean in spirit they become in these hours of penitence! The world knows hitherto nothing about them. They are an outcast class. They have no historian, no poet, no missionaries. They have no voice in the press; nobody knows when they die, nobody sees or even hears of their burial; no gravestone says over their buried remains, "May they rest in peace." They are like house flies—they come and they go, no one knows whence or whither; but they are nevertheless a blot upon our political and ecclesiastical system, and a measure of its worth. At the bar they will appear along with it, and their evidence will be heard with awful attention. The great question will then be asked, "Who is the accuser? Let him stand forth!"

But what can be done for them? Our Law will do nothing; our Church is too busy with its forms of orthodoxy. Already the Dormitory and the Home have rescued hundreds, and they flock to them in numbers too great for the funds. But what effect will it have on the system? If they could be received by thousands, would their place be supplied by others? We know not. But it is the beginning of a new work, and will approach the source of the evil as it proceeds. It will find great difficulties no doubt, but no greater than any other work of reformation. If reformation is to be checked merely because new offenders will supply the place of the old ones, then moral education itself may cease, and the world may stand still. The argument carried to its ultimates proves too much. It is dangerous to argue too deeply in such matters; you may dive into fatalism and do nothing. Rather than this, do just what you can. If the universe is so constructed that all your doing amounts to nothing, you are not to blame; but only reason for these children of society as you reason for your own, and you will just do what the poor clergyman did when he first heard of the Female Dormitory and the good it had done. He ran a whole mile to the money-order office, that he might lose no time in sending a pound as his voluntary contribution. When the institution grows large it will become a power—it will collect facts—impress the public mind, and compel the legislature to supply the means of more effectual reformation. Indeed, until this and other reformations are effected in Protestant Christendom, our missionaries have reason to blush for shame in preaching Christianity to any people. Dirty as the streets of Constantinople are, they are purer than those of London. What we are familiar with does not astonish us; but we shock the stranger, as he us. A moral reformation is coming. It will be far more valuable than the political reformation, which we hope is nearly over. Political reforms are superficial; we want something deeper than skin; the heart must be sought out and reached, and conscience must be got hold of, and legislation become more moral and sacred; and when moral reform is attained to, financial reform will follow without any difficulty, and with little or no legislation: whereas all the artifices of knowledge and genius will not financially reform a country that is morally corrupt. We are palavering with forms; our laws are all artificial, ingenuous devices, that never touch the heart—merely wheels of a machine.—London Family Herald.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1855.

"Appropriate Duties."

In taking up an article in the Ohio Columbian, under the heading of "Appropriate Duties" in which Mr. Douglass is made to labor under some degree of censure, for some strictures passed upon clerical gentlemen for meddling in political affairs; we were struck with the diversity so general among the clergy of the present day, so much at varience with the doctrine taught by the founders of the faith which they profess. There are scarcely any who have not observed the spirit and expression of the organs of the various denominations, the divisions and subdivisions, contentions, and bitter invectives, continually launched at each other. Is it then surprising that Mr. Douglass should desire them to confine themselves to their "appropriate duties?" It is true the question might arise, what is their "appropriate duties?" For the Columbian says, that while 3000 clergymen of New England were petitioning against a certain Act of Congress, the Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Nebraska, a Missionary of the M. E. Church, South, was actively engaged in Washington urging this same act, forward. And again refers to the Rev. Henry M. Dennison, who leaves his "appropriate duties to seek to re-enslave a child," and another Rev. gentleman by the name of Harle, a minister of the Cambellite persuasion, who had two slaves chained on the wharf at Cincinnati, and one of these were members of his own church. How like the words of the inspired Apostle, "If one member suffer, &c." But this diversity not only exists between the 3000 clergymen and Mr. Johnson, and between Mr. Harle, and the lamb of his fold; but we find it in vast combinations North and South of Dixon's Line.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, consider it utterly impossible to unite with the M. E. Church South, the Slaveholder of the South, will not sit at the same communion table with the Abolitionist of the North. It is, neither confined exclusively to these two great portions of our country, but the same diversity of interests will be found extending through every State, City, town and village; and these inharmonious discords, are gravely discussed by individuals, communities, and by their periodicals, as though an every day affair, and hardly deserving a passing notice, except perhaps in a pecuniary point of view. And yet how different all this, from the reiterated and vitally important principles involved in, "Ye are the body of Christ." How strangely the members of one body, are so unfortunately thrown together; we should say of a poor mortal so bewildered, "He hath a Devil." And these profess to be the body of Christ, and members in particular." It is not even thought by many to be inconsistent. Do they not know, that there are thousands of thinking, reasoning beings around, who seeing these inconsistencies compare them with the written word, upon which these sects pretend their faith is founded, and thus lose all confidence in them, and perhaps in the "word" itself.

Do not such inconsistencies indeed raise the question in every reasonable mind, what are the "appropriate duties" of the Clergy? Do they hold the priesthood of Melchisedek, or of Levi? Do they even believe in it? No! they say it is done away. Are they Apostles, or Prophets? No! they deny the necessity of them now. What, have they then Revelation from Christ "their head" to regulate the body? No! no! even this is past—the heart no longer needs the head, nor does its members feel its loss. What then have they, "that man should not be blown about by every wind of doctrine, and cunning craftiness whereby men lay in wait to deceive?" Inspired men assure us, that "God set in His church Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, &c., for the work of the Ministry, until we all come into the unity of the faith."

Take these pillars from the Gospel superstructure, and the result is what we see in the discordant elements of sectarianism so briefly hinted at in the foregoing, and nothing shews of the "Thus saith the Lord" will, or ever can, remedy the evil. Man, with all his boasted attainments, has shown himself utterly incompetent to bring about that "restitution" so much desired. And short of direct inspiration of God, the "appropriate duties" of his servants cannot be defined, or the legitimate result of their labors realized.

The Testimony of Spies and Informers.

Under the above title we have seen an article in the New York National Democrat that we very much admire. That government is indeed at a low ebb which makes use of such very questionable assistance in ferreting out offenders. A spy is looked upon by all honorable men as belonging to the lowest grade, the very dregs of society—is hated by those whom he betrays, and despised and shunned by his employers, and there scarcely can a circumstance arise in any government, at least in peace, that will justify such mean procedure. In war the penalty is death, if caught.

The Democrat holds the following:

"Mr. Tomlinson well remarked, on a late occasion, in commenting upon the testimony of a policeman who had sworn to having been directed by his commanding officer 'to go on Sunday to any place where liquor could be got,' to purchase it, and to make complaint against the seller—that had he the making of the law, he would have the testimony of informers declared invalid, and unfit to be received in a court of justice. We echo this wise and just sentiment, and hope to live long enough to see this disgraceful 'stool pigeon business' put an end to.

"Let us have every constitutional law, popular or unpopular, obeyed; but let us have no such system as this in existence in a country professing to be free. There is no necessity whatever for it. This sending forth of policemen in citizens' uniform, to inveigle men into breaking an ordinance, who perhaps would not have dreamed of doing so without that temptation, and then arraigning the culprits at the bar of justice to answer for the indiscretion into which they had been seduced, smacks too much of the system of Fouche, and the villanies of Reynolds and Armstrong, to be palateable to us. In this free land, and with our accustomed prejudices, we have no sort of toleration for the wretch

'———— who tempts a culprit on,
And then hangs him for his crime!'

We have been taught to loathe the principle of this novel loi des suspects, and we lose that regard for law which we all would wish to preserve, when we behold its ministers arrayed in the garb of sneaks and spies. Our sympathies are transferred from the violated Statute to its alleged violator, and however indisputable the testimony, however probable the charge, there are some among us at least who will always distrust and repudiate the tale-bearing of the man who accuses his neighbor of offenses committed at his own suggestion. We rejoice that there is such a principle abroad in our community, and we shall look to its operations, if no other resource is presented, to bring about the desirable result of hooting out of our court rooms this class of testimony."

The secret spy system in France, and among European nations generally, is too well known to need any particular comment here. There they are in stores, (the storekeepers themselves frequently belong to this honorable body)—they are in hotels, railroad cars, ball rooms, parties, (frequently the invited guests of those whom they betray); learning, talent, etiquette, and everything is brought to bear; and these miserable, crawling, sneaking, loathsome scamps, who have laid by every principle of manhood, are employed by government to detect iniquity, (frequently themselves the originators,) who, like the serpent, first charm their unsuspecting victims into their coils, then beslime, and afterwards crush. We regard such men as the scum of creation, and those who employ them as not much better. Truth and justice needs no such covering nor helps. A man to engage in such baseness has got first to lay aside his humanity, and the miserable, abandoned wretch, having assumed the assassin's profession, smiles on the man that he is about to stab. If the Maine law, or any other law, needs such questionable help as this, we say repeal it: such means are too degrading to support any system among honorable men. These dark deeds belong to dark ages; they are the agents of tyranny and despotism; they belong not to freemen nor liberal principles. Truth walks forth in open day; it needs no dark mantle to cover it. Justice is represented as blind; but there is no secret dagger. Those measures belong to tyrants and despots—not to honest men. The loi des suspects may do for old, rotten, corrupt dynasties—it is too degrading for us. Spies may be counted as honorable men in Europe—we look upon them as the very excrescence of society, perverted, loathsome, miserable, abandoned wretches, whose testimony we would reject quicker than that of a pirate or highwayman.

CHEAP INFANTS.—They give away children, now, in New York, on account of the hard times, before they are born.—[Louisville Courier.

Any lady wishing to adopt an infant from its birth (in the early part of next month) may hear of a good opportunity, and have an interview with the mother, by addressing "E.," Box No. 187.

They do things differently in Louisville. They are not so improvident there. Infants are not so cheap at Louisville. They don't give them away; they sell them. The same paper that published the above contained several advertisements under such a significant sign as heads one of these advertisements offering for sale "sundry articles of household and kitchen furniture:"

A negro woman, 35 years old, who is a good cook, washer and ironer. I have no work for her, and she prefers being sold to being hired out; also her daughter, seven years old. I will sell to one who will keep them in Kentucky.

Yes, in that State, where editors fling their missiles at "the hard times," which oblige poor mothers to offer to give away their children, rather than sell them. It seems that Kentucky mothers prefer being sold, rather than hired out. Why?

Because the woman knows that self-interested owners are a little less likely to work the life out of her than one who hires for a season, but counts her of no more consequence than any other animal. —[Tribune.

The above is a most appropriate comment upon the times, and should be a lesson to the poor benighted Mormons in their family relations, (which our modern philanthropists have been so anxious to reform,) that should at once show them the advantage of adopting the liberal, moral and Christian-like family organizations of the present enlightened age, rather than the bigoted, austere and most unchristian-like family organization of those old Patriarchs of the dark ages, who knew but little of the refinement of wisdom that enriches the present age, whose ignorance was manifest by believing in revelations from God, and their vanity in expecting their examples to be followed by their posterity.

Soldiers for Cuba—The Worth Legion.

NEW YORK, April 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Herald:

The feeling that a war with Spain is inevitable, Marcy and the balance of the "slow coach" administration to the contrary notwithstanding, seems to have actively taken possession of the ex-Mexican war material resident among us. The note of preparation has sounded, and one or more regiments have been organized, within view of acceptation by the General and State Governments, and an early advent in the "tented field." Our city at present is thronged with Cuban filibusters, Central American colonists, Ecuador adventurers, and military enthusiasts, who would willingly and gladly abandon all visionary and undeveloped schemes, to embrace the long-hoped-for opportunity of a dash at Cuba. The "Worth Legion," which you may remember was organized a year ago for this especial object, is about opening a rendezvous for the purpose of recruiting its ranks up to the standard required by the State laws. This regiment is commanded by Colonel Burnham, who was Lieutenant Colonel of the New York Volunteers. The rest of its officers, with but few exceptions, were also distinguished officers in that campaign, and are well known to the citizens of New York.

Perhaps no portion of our people feel so indignant, and with such just cause, at the tampering course of policy pursued by the imbecile administration at Washington in reference to Spanish aggressions, as this same class alluded to—the fighting portion of the community. The great majority of this class of citizens are dwellers in peace in our midst, filling places of trust in the government, adding lustre to the polite professions, or devoted to mercantile and mechanical pursuits. They repudiate filibusterism, or any act in opposition to the government, so long as the government protects her citizens, and is worthy of their respect.

A CITIZEN.

The above scarce needs comment; but we think the course pursued by certain cliques of disappointed office-seekers ought to be met by a calm expression of public sentiment, sufficient to damp, in a measure, at least some of their spurious zeal for their country's welfare, especially when they interfere upon a subject of extreme delicacy, like our present relations with Spain. There cannot be a question in the mind of any one, as to the entire want of principle in the filibustering operations of a certain portion of our community, and that Cuba has been the main point from which it was expected to draw their capital for further operations. This has been as apparent to European nations as to the United States, and has called down the unqualified disapprobation of the upright and honorable of every nation. But more than this, it is a stigma that attaches itself to us as a nation, and is a foul blot upon the escutcheon of the American Union; displaying us to all Christendom as a nation of buccaneers, though on a much larger scale than once committed their depredations upon the Spanish Main. The nervous cupidity for acquisition, especially for Cuba, so boldly shown, has roused the jealousy and incited the vigilance of Spain. Is this to be wondered at? Who so recreant to his country that would not cry shame to the government that would not protect its own? But now while exercising a vigilance made necessary by the very course pursued by citizens of this confederacy, against all the laws of nations, every act, every precautionary measure taken by Spain, is grasped at with avidity, and trumpeted abroad with all the blazonry of quack nostrums by these honorable characters, and government urged to precipitate itself at once into war, because forsooth Spain is not quiet enough under this buccaneering of the nineteenth century. It is urged that she is despotic, her government tottering, and her energies departing, and that conquest would be easy. Are arguments like these sufficient to induce this nation to rank itself with despotism by making Might the law of Right? But she has imprisoned one of our citizens, and fired into some of our ships. Admitting this, has she not had occasion for jealousy of every American and every American ship that approaches her vicinity? She has, and every one is aware of it; but even then, would it behoove this government to grasp, with unbecoming haste, the very first occasion of difficulty on the part of Spain, when, to say the least, a threatening attitude was first assumed by citizens known to belong to this Union?

It is not alone, a war with Spain, that is involved in this question, but from the officious meddling on the part of the States, in the property and affairs of other powers, the sympathies of all are enlisted, and the European nations, upon the grounds of self-preservation, would feel bound to assist Spain in resisting the agressions; for cover it as you will, by the pretensions of justice, through affairs growing out, and the results of, acts of our own citizens; the acquisition of Cuba, protrudes itself to the gaze of every school-boy. And are we prepared to meet the Allied powers, even though our cause was just? No; our loss would be far greater than fifty Cubas. And every one is aware that our vast sea-board is anything but prepared for such a demonstration as is even now made upon Russia. It is also asserted that the Allied powers are already embarrassed by the present war with Russia, and now is the time to take advantage of the weakness of Spain; for this is the true spirit of the present move. But such a position is not even tenable, for the Allied powers, have but commenced the combination of their forces, and though misfortunes have heretofore attended them, and the very limited advantages that can be anticipated upon the Crimea, may have quenched their ardor, their prestige among nations would forbid a relaxation of energy on their part; yet so plausable a pretext, as a difficulty with this country, might be embraced by some of the Allies to withdraw their forces from the Crimea and the Baltic and concentrate them upon our borders, and with it the approbation of a large share of their own citizens, and backed by the assurance that we are wrong, and affix to their banners, "God will sustain the Right!"

So far as the Government is concerned, President Pierce has used every means possible to stop this unlawful proceeding, and Cuba lately has acted like a fool, as if determined to provoke hostilities and to give us a pretext. The honor of our flag must be maintained; but there is a proper way of settling all such matters. We deprecate the employment of the Filibusters in any campaign of this kind.

FROM the Council Bluffs Bugle of April 6th we learn that the Missouri river is very low, and that no steamboat had arrived there this season.

FOR THE MORMON.

What Shall We Do?

SEBASTOPOL not taken yet! It's getting stale. And then the old Czar has left his boots, spurs and all to his son. How well he takes after the old gentleman! Sharp eyes his, or his dad's—Gog or Magog, perhaps both; sees the Lion's consumptive; and expecting a collapse, he slips on the cassock, to jingle keys with St. Peter and "Monsieur."

A crusade to the Holy Land by Crescent and Cross
Can never be counted by profit and loss;
For the horse and the jenny together when found,
Are sure to display signs of mulishness round.

Though Louis and Vic, and Palmerston too,
Determined to set all the world in a stew,
Were not expecting they'd all be done brown
By the Czar's slipping on his clerical gown.

So there is nothing here. What can now be done? Can't we raise a breeze in this country—nothing for the next Presidential election? Dear me! Nebraska off without saddle or bridle—Cuba dodging the noose—Know Nothingism foundered—Spanish pony cleared the coral—nothing but the old hack Abolitionism, or that kicking old Fugitive jade—not even a sight at our familiar old Mormon hobby, but he's rode quite thin, and gone to pasture to fat up; but maybe he'll do to ride by next campaign; but then—that groom sent up there seems to be taking a liking to the "range;" 'twont do—'twont do; he'd ought to ride the critter round more, or he'll get fat and kick; though the animal never was given to any bad tricks, it might if that groom should treat him too well. But we must kick up a row somewhere, so we'll straddle the Maine Liquor Cask, just to keep in practice. "A great country ours—only wants fencing in."

The above very quaint piece is full of pith, but not exactly correct. Cuba is rather facing the music than dodging; Know-Nothingism is floundering, but not yet foundered exactly; however, it is on the whole a good piece—with the above corrections, and a little more attention to the muses, it would do first rate. Try again.

Expedition to the Plains.

THE following will be interesting not only to emigrants who are moving westward, but also to their friends who will very naturally feel a great deal of anxiety for their personal safety. The late troubles among the Indians have made travelling over the plains rather precarious. Our emigration, however, have nothing to fear, as they always travel in sufficiently large companies to protect themselves; and with an efficient guard and good discipline they are safe. These troops, however, will make travelling more secure, providing they act with wisdom; if they do not, they will only increase the difficulties that already exist. We speak particularly in regard to the Sioux. We do not wish to cast reflections upon the dead; but as we passed Fort Laramie, soon after the massacre of the United States troops, we felt satisfied from every information that we could obtain from traders in the immediate vicinity, that the difficulty and consequent death was provoked by the rash and unwarrantable proceedings of the United States troops. We hope that another policy will be pursued by the present command. The Sioux have always, until lately, been peaceable; they are a large and powerful tribe, and to say nothing of the justice of the thing, it is much better to have their good than their bad feelings. A war with them would not only endanger the emigration, but great numbers of scattering settlers in the State of Iowa and Nebraska Territory. If they have done wrong, let them be chastized; but let, although a firm, yet a humane, honorable, highminded policy be adopted; such a course as will become a civilized, intelligent, mighty nation towards the poor degraded Indian. If they have been savage and cruel, we must remember that they have been taught from their infancy to appease the manes of their dead friends by killing their enemy, and much more when, as in this case, their loss is one of their leading chiefs.

We say be prompt, but not wanton; be efficient, but humane.

"Active preparations are making for this expedition, and the troops are put en route as rapidly as possible. Two companies left about the middle of the week, and a much larger force will leave today or Monday next. The whole army will be ready to march from Fort Leavenworth before the grass is sufficiently high for forage for the animals attached to the expedition. Something of the extent of the expenditure may be inferred from the fact, that 5,000 barrels of flour, at $12 per barrel, make one of the items of the account of purchases. It is to be put up in sacks.—[St. Louis Republican, April 14.

Misappropriations.

SOMETIME ago we heard of nothing but the dishonesty of Governor Young, in misappropriating the money appropriated by Congress for the State House in Utah Territory. Dr. Bernhisel published a statement in relation to this matter, denying these accusations. At length, after many months, the sound has reached Utah, and the Legislative Assembly of that Territory have taken it up and given it the denial, proving positively that all these statements were false. Will editors tell the world they were mistaken, or would it not be popular to do so?

The Legislative report will be found in another column.

WHAT HENRY WARD BEECHER SAYS.—Henry Ward Beecher says, that he would as soon go a courting with his father's old love letters, as go to church and carry a book to pray out of. Henry is "gifted," but everybody aint.—[American Union.

Mr. Beecher should have added, that it was quite as absurd to hope to obtain the gifts, power and blessings of the gospel by reading the Bible, and telling the people that all these gifts and blessings enjoyed by the ancient fathers are done away, and we have nothing but the "love letters" to read.

Mr. B., we think you are courting (the world) with the Father's love letters.

"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." John v. 39.

Another Cuban Outrage.

WASHINGTON, April 11 1855.

The Union of this morning announces another Cuban outrage. The brig P. R. Hickman, from Boston, bound to Matanzas, when a few miles from the coast of Cuba was fired at three times by a Spanish cruiser. The first ball was thrown astern of the brig, the second fired ahead of her, and the third was fired, it is supposed, with the intention of hitting the vessel. After an examination of the Hickman' papers, she was allowed to proceed on her voyage.

YET ANOTHER.

CHARLESTON, April 13, 1855.

A letter received here by the steamer Isabel states that the Cuban authorities perpetrated another outrage upon an American citizen named Charles A. Peck. Said gentleman was arrested at Trindad de Cuba on the 8th and carried to Havana where he was placed in the barracks a prisoner. Mr Peck declares that he is intirely ignorant in regard to the charge made against him. His family live in New York.

Mr. C. A. Peck, Dentist, late of New York, was released from prison on the morning the Cahawba left, on the security of a friend that he would remain in Havana until his case is decided.

A Demonstration against Spain.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Times gives some very important news, if it is correct. The writer says, with a directness that leaves no doubt of his confidence in his assertion, that "the next time a Spanish cruiser brings to one of our Mail Steamers on the high seas, it is intended that a United States war vessel shall be near enough to participate in the entertainment by pouring her broadside into the Spaniard forthwith. Mark the truth of this. The instructions to McCauley will confirm what I say, whenever they are made public." Such a demonstration as this will make an issue not to be evaded, and, if the policy be carried out, must result in war with Spain, or in concessions which the past history of that country do not warrant us in anticipating. The same writer says that as strong a naval force as can be mustered has been ordered to cruise in the track of our Steamers, and "outrages" such as have recently been offered to our flag in the cases of the El Dorado, Daniel Webster and Illinois, are to be promptly redressed. The Times correspondent adds that "Mr. Marcy is very backward about going into this business; so is Mr. Cushing. Messrs. Guthrie and McClelland are also understood to oppose extreme measures. But the President has acted on his own own impulses, although only Mr. Davis and Mr. Dobbin warmly approve his course."

The Difference.

MAYOR WOOD, with all his reformatory measures and professions of equal and exact justice, does not appear to deal alike with all classes, nor to administer the laws with the same vigor in all stations in life. Like the rest of erring humanity, he bows to the majesty of the almighty dollar, and seeks to screen its fallen possessor from the mortification of scorn's unmoving finger. While at the same time he punishes with an unsparing hand the poor and friendless, and holds them up to public gaze in his official reports—name and residence—without any reserve whatever. For example, while the names and residences of all the women arrested as street walkers are given in the papers, a wealthy merchant of William street, who lost $2,500 in a house of prostitution a few nights ago, is designated as Mr. ——.

Well, we suppose this is all right, and in perfect consonance with the progressive spirit of the age. The publication of his name might cast a shadow upon his fair reputation, and mortify the highly sensitive feelings of his amiable family. Being rich, and having his coffers well stored with gold—the god of the majority of mankind—of course he has a perfect and valid license to join in the midnight orgies of houses of prostitution, and to play the part of a libidinous blackguard with impunity, and without the fear of having his name or residence heralded to the world through our public prints. But the poor unfortunate female, who has but stumbled in the path we have all in weakness trod, and ten chances to one been lured from virtue's flowery paths by the gold of just such black-hearted scoundrels as this William street merchant, is snapped up by such patriotic officers of the law as Mayor Wood, dragged before a public tribunal, sentenced to Blackwell's Island, and her name and residence published in the morning journals. Her seducers—those fashionable living satires on man, who swarm the Broadway hotels—can read the account of her trial and conviction, smoke their cigars, drink their wine, and prowl about the streets, night after night, in search of another victim to their hellish passions. But no notice is taken of them by the law or its officers. They are regarded as gentlemen—honorable merchants—and the poor fallen women whom they have victimized, robbed, degraded, and rendered miserable, must needs suffer the penalty of their debauchery and crime—and all to satisfy the conscientious scruples of a philanthropist and law-enforcing officer like Mayor Wood. O! shame, where is thy blush!—[Putnam Co. Courier.

CRANBERRIES AND ERYSIPELAS.—The Niles (Michigan) Republican says: "A lady visited our family a few days since, and stated that her daughter had the erysipelas very bad. We called to her mind the remedy recommended by a New Haven editor. On returning home in the evening she found the disease spreading rapidly—it had assumed a frightful appearance. She immediately applied a poultice made of cranberries, which seemed to arrest it at once, and the second poultice effected a complete cure.

Correspondence.

From Our Texas Correspondent.

JEFFERSON, Texas, April 1, 1855.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—Dear Sir—I am greatly rejoiced in recieving your valuable paper in this far distant portion of our country, it seems while reading it as though I was again with you, and in company with the brethren with which you are associated, enjoying the free spirit of the Lord, as we did while traversing the Mountains and the Plains together. I have travelled much since we parted on the banks of the Missouri, and have been greatly astonished at the perfect apathy in relation to Religion, which I discover among a large share of the people, with whom I have come in contact, in the course of my journeyings, and indeed with many there is an almost entire disbelief in the Scriptures of Divine Truth. The question is forced upon my mind, what is the cause of this unbelief and apathy in the minds of so large a portion of the people? Is it that they have been misled by those who have professed to be teachers of the word, whose teachings, when compared with the word itself, has been found wanting?

When refering people to the subject of our faith, there are those who turn coldly away, and others it stimulates to fierce and vindictive opposition; while many view it as a stupendous fraud. This I am not surprised at, for it could scarce be expected otherwise, where the confidence of mankind has been lessening for years in the revealed Word of God, through their carelessness and the false premises assumed by those who have pretended to minister of that Word to them. And the most distant idea of any present communication with the Creator of our being, and Father of our spirits, is at once condemned. Thus through the prejudice of the age, preventing many of the pure minded and honest, from investigating, and learning of the simple barrier that exists between them and a knowledge of that really intimate relation, we hold with the Author of our being,—the connection of the Creator and created—and the sweet communion with those angels, who ever "minister to heirs of Salvation." It is astounding indeed when we find how near we are to those beings of another sphere, and learn how short the span between the mortal and the immortal; and yet for years we have groped in darkness, little realizing our contiguity to those holy beings, whom we were so hopeless of ever meeting in this life.

The thrill of joy and gratitude that penetrates my heart, is almost overwhelming, when I pause to think, how "narrow the way that leads to life" and that I was not permitted to pass it heedlessly by, nor prevented from entering in, by the opposition and stigma, so common to be bestowed by mankind, upon the simple and unadorned truths of the Gospel. This aversion to the faith of the Latter Day Saints, which faith is intrinsically, and to the letter, the same held by Saints of former days; is not from the want of an innate assurance that something is required to reveal the future destiny of the soul, to man—but an almost entire hopelessness of ever obtaining that knowledge, in this life; partly from negligence in seeking for themselves, but more from observing the vast number of total failures of men they suppose to have abilities far greater than themselves; forgetting that the "Wisdom of this world, is foolishness in the sight of God," and that such persons are generally too exalted in their own estimation to stoop to the simple requirements of the Gospel. And then the vast amount of admitted respectability that is arrayed against it. It is not surprising that the human mind should turn from such a picture, to that which is more pleasing, and less liable to draw so largely upon the comforts of the present; and then to be classed with the offscouring of the earth too, and meet the scorn of our friends, and the cool contempt of our associates. Does it seem possible that the Gospel requires such a sacrifice as this? And yet it was once so.

How widely different the destiny of those that joined the hue and cry of "away with him" and those who boldly met the tempest, and firmly withstood the storm of popular prejudice, and these, were despised by those who were then termed the most respectable. And what was the result? While one penetrated the vail and grasped the principles of eternal truth,—the other realized the wild and frantic forbodings of the powers of darkness, the one ending in the extinction of their race, the other, opening with the glories of eternal life. And this, the difference between popular opinion, and the Truth. Has the world changed in this respect since then? We of all people upon the earth can answer, No! We have tested the truth of the words of Jesus, "the world have hated me, and they will hate you"—and this too for believing and literally following in the principles He laid down, by which, we are to obtain eternal life. But some say what presumption, to assume that you have the only "true way" and that too amid the formidable array of intelligence that is opposed to you. And yet, it is no greater presumption than that of the poor fishermen of Galilee, in the midst of the learned Doctors of Judea. Nor is the presumption so great, when we see that learned men differ so widely; it but proves that the "wisdom of this world, is foolishness in the sight of God" for while these, have sought after the truth through the wisdom of this world. The others have sought it through the "Spirit of God, which is given to every one, to profit withal." And we unitedly testify to the truth of the word of God, literally; and they, only that portion which sustains their own peculiar sect. The one, taketh the honor to themselves; the other says "Let God be true, though every man a liar," and base their faith upon his eternal word.

Though men may scandalize and fiends rage—and education prejudice and tradition may array itself against the Truth, it is mighty and will prevail, and Christ will reign on the earth. And there are those who shall come from the North, and from the South, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God on the Earth. But it will not be those "who worship with their lips, while their Hearts are far from Him." Nor those, who pretend to reverence those holy men, while they repudiate the principles, which their lives and teachings left for ensample to us, to follow. "Search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

President T. you will pardon this lengthy letter, but these are some of my meditations, while viewing the extent of recklessness in the world in regard to things of God—and all the institutions most treasured by his people in ages past. They wander far, far from God, and think in their hearts they can do without him, "Nor learn His ways nor walk in His paths." Yours in the Gospel, H.

NEW YORK CITY, April 18, 1855.

ELDER TAYLOR, Dear Brother: It is with feelings of joy and gratitude to my Heavenly Father, that I am still the spared monument of his watchful care and tender mercy; that my life is still precious in his sight, that I am in the enjoyment of excellent health, and considering circumstances, I feel first-rate. As I am on the eve of my departure for my Western mountain home, I felt called upon to give a short detail of my Mission, for the satisfaction of those that say "they could not keep my trail."

It is a matter of Church history that I was appointed by the authorities of the Church at Great Salt Lake City, to take a mission to Germany, at the April conference in eighteen hundred and fifty-three. I left the valley the 22d of June, and arrived in Liverpool Nov. 4, of the same year. I did not attempt to hide my talent in passing through the States, or in crossing the briny deep; but declared that I was a Mormon from Salt Lake; a herald of salvation, to high and low, priest and people; it was amusing to witness the pretended ignorance of many that I became associated with in my travels, concerning the Mormons and the principles of Mormonism. Even lawyers and Judges pretended to be entirely ignorant that thousands of men, women and children had been driven out of the States of Missouri and Illinois, by mob violence, between the years of '38 and '46; they would gape and stare when I informed them that I was a Mormon, and that I was a witness and participator in those heartrending scenes. I have had opportunities and availed myself of them, in warning scores and hundreds that had never heard anything concerning the principles of shlvation the world calls Mormonism; very few that were honest in their inquiries that did not admit that our doctrines were scriptural and incontrovertible; but the mass of the people are rushing the downward road, like a horse rushing into battle, thoughtless, heedless, roving to and fro, without any seeming object or aim, unless it is gold; I shall say nothing of the murders, robberies, rapes and seductions that the daily papers are teeming with; it is enough to cause the philanthropist to exclaim with Jeremiah, "O, that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night," &c.; but many are seeking a lodging-place in the wilderness that they might escape this people and go from them, "for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men." Jer. 9 c. 1–2 verses.

I was counselled on my arrival at Liverpool by Br. S. W. Richards, to inform Br. Cairns of my arrival, and await his answer as to the prospects of the German Mission; in the meantime I received an appointment from Br. R. to labor in the Derby, Nottingham and Leicestershire conferences, under the pastoral charge of Elder Charles Smith. I continued in England until March, 1854, the Lord blessing me and my labors. I received word from Br. Cairns, saying I had better remain in England as it was as much as he could do to retain a foothold in Germany. Thus ended my German mission. Feeling an anxious desire to warn my friends and relatives in the United States, I received permission from President Richards to return to my native country, and do all the good I could, and act as the spirit should direct. On my arrival in New York I ascertained that Br. O. Prall had gone home; not having any to consult, or counsel with, I set to work in Central New York, preaching the gospel, laboring night and day, trying to convince my kinsfolk of the truths of Mormonism. Many are believing, but none have as yet obeyed.

Agreeably to the instructions I received from Br. Snow, I have traveled through many of the Western and some of the Eastern States, "hunting up and scaring up the lost sheep;" I have succeeded in finding a number who were almost dead, and others who thought that Mormonism was quite dead; they are mostly anxious to return to the fold again. Among the number I would name Ezra Thayer, one of the first Elders; he was baptized in the fall of 1830, in Palmyra, New York, removed to Kirtland with Br. Joseph Smith, Jr., and although his evidence was such that he informed me he never could deny the work as being the work of God, yet the devil or somebody else succeeded in getting the wool over his eyes after Br. Joseph's death, and led him to Voree; he soon became disgusted with Strang, and returned to New York, and has remained in darkness until last September he renewed his covenant by baptism, and is now rejoicing in the new and everlasting covenant, and wishes me to say in Zion the Major is coming. I feel that my work is done; if the Gentiles want any more preaching let them wait a little, and they will hear preaching that won't be laughed at.

I am anxious to get home, where I think I can do more towards rolling forth this Kingdom than in Babylon; there is a great work to do, and but a brief space of time to do it in. Farewell! May the God of Israel bless and prosper you and those in connection with you, is the prayer of your fellow-laborer in the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, THOMAS CONDON.

We believe Dr. Colborn has done his best, and he returns with our fellowship and good feeling.

From Our Philadelphia Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, April 18, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir: On reading the suggestions of Prof. O. Spencer, in regard to the course and policy that should be pursued by the General Government toward the Indians in the West, I feel prompted to give my opinion on the same subject. From my long acquaintance with the Indian race, I have obtained some knowledge of their political and religious views. They believe in a God who created all things, and that they are his children; that he speaks to them in dreams and visions, and that he hears and answers their prayers. Each tribe has an organization of twelve chiefs, with a governing chief, or President; they have their medicine men, who they believe to be inspired by the Great Spirit, and the laws of their chiefs are strictly obeyed as emanating from the same source; hence it is very easy to account for the bad success of the missionaries to convert them. When they begin to read the Bible to them, and tell them that the Lord has not spoken for some fifteen hundred years, and will never speak any more,—they will laugh at them, and tell them—as did the ancients—"Your God is dead, or is displeased with you, for some misdemeanors, or he would not so long thus hesitate to speak to you. Our God speaks to us often."

As the old system of missionaries and soldiers has so often proved a failure, I would recommend, before sending a large army to drive them from their country or kill them, to take the means that it would cost to defray such expense, and employ some honest and industrious men and women to go to that people, well fitted out with everything necessary to institute among them morality, virtue, industry, cleanliness, and the beneficial arts of civilization. I would also recommend that some of those doctors (whose advertisements I see in the papers occasionally) be sent to exercise some of their professional skill in removing some of those impurities which these sons and daughters of the forest have contracted from the whites. I admit that the Indians have committed depredations on the whites, but knowing some of the causes that have led to it, I hold that in most cases they are excusable, and will further say that many of the depredations committed in Indian countries are committed by whites on Indian credit.

Yours, as ever, JETER CLINTON.

The above is pretty correct; but there needs force among the Indians as well as moral suasion: all we say is, apply that force for their good, and not for their destruction.

Utah Territory.

Report to the President, Senate, and People of the United States of America, from the Legislative Assembly of Utah Territory.

WE are unanimously resolved, that we do for ourselves and our constituents most decidedly deprecate the slanders and misrepresentations of all persons who know, or profess to know, the feelings and actions of the inhabitants of Utah, and, when speaking or writing about them, put error for truth, and truth for error.

And we deprecate the spirit that induces many of the reputed wise men of our nation to give heed to such foul and baseless calumnies, to the retarding of the onward tendency of all honorable efforts, and hindering the righteous progression of our Union as a whole by constantly tending to create disaffection in its members, and throwing impediments in the pathway of all improvement.

We are further resolved that the conditional purchase, with the $20,000 appropriated by Congress for erecting suitable buildings for the accommodation of the Legislative Assembly of Utah; of the main portion of the Council House in Great Salt Lake City, was the most judicious temporary application of those means that the circumstances would admit of, both for the Assembly and the General Government; thus saving an annual rent of some $4000, which would soon have swallowed up the whole amount; accommodating the Assembly better than could otherwise be done; and preserving the entire sum for permanent investment at the Capital of Utah, in accordance with the designs of Congress.

We are further resolved that we are familiar with the course which his Excellency Governor Young has taken with the said $20,000, and do unqualifiedly assert that his management thereof from the beginning has been of the most judicious and responsible character, and with strict economy, and fidelity to the interests of the General Government therein; and we deprecate the misrepresentations which have been made in relation to this matter, and the effect those misrepresentations have had in the Departments at Washington, and in the Halls of Congress.

That the public mind may be better informed than heretofore on the subject of the $20,000, about which there has been so many false representations, we will now take the liberty of making a brief statement of the main facts in the case.

In the summer of 1851, the Hon. A. W. Babbitt delivered the money in question to his Excellency Brigham Young.

During the following October and November, the Committe, appointed for the purpose, located the site for our Capital at Fillmore City, in Millard County, and before the expiration of that November, labor and material had begun to be expended for the erection of a State House; since which time, amid scarcity of labor that could be hired, amid Indian disturbances, and amid other disadvantages unknown to residents in old States, or to those in the golden State, $26,797 53c. have been economically and advantageously applied towards erecting the commodious south wing of the main building; and we confidently assert that no like appropriation has ever been more judiciously managed, both for the interests of the General Government, and of a Territory, than this has been by Governor Young. The above amount is exclusive of the $1,669 50c., which was expended in locating the site, and which the Department disallowed on the ground of its not being customary; $8,703 98c. have been allowed, and accounts for the $18,073 55c. will be forwarded by the mail which goes our January 1, 1855.

In conclusion, we most respectfully request the rulers and wise men of our Nation, and all who desire to act uprightly, to avoid deciding a matter before they have heard both sides of the question, lest injustice be done, and the innocent suffer.

Trusting that truth will prevail, Gentlemen, we remain yours respectfully,

HEBER C. KIMBALL,
President of the Council.
JEDEDIAH M. GRANT,
Speaker of the House of Rep's.
WILLIAM CLAYTON, Secretary.
THOMAS BULLOCK, Chief Clerk.
Unanimously adopted, December 21, 1854.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

ENGLAND.

IN the House of Commons on the 26th of March the 2d reading of the newspaper stamp duties bill was carried by a majority of 215 to 161.

Sir C. Wood said it was intended, as soon as the ports in the Baltic and White Seas were open, to establish a strict blockade, which should be affective from first to last. Lord Palmerston moved for a loan of one million to the Government of Sardinia, and if the war should last more than a year a second million. The address was agreed to.

In the House of Lords, the Earl of Clarendon moved that the message of Her Most Gracious Majesty, in reference to the treaty with the King of Sardinia, be considered. The Noble Earl observed that the Sardinia's finances being inadequate to the expenses of an army abroad as well as at home, she had applied to England for two millions of money at 4 per cent interest, 1 per cent of which was to be applied to the Sinking Fund. The address was agreed to.

The Sebastopol Inquiry Committee continues its sittings, and the revelations made become every day more and more appalling. Mr. S. G. Osborne was examined on the 24th March, and, as an eye-witness of the scenes which he describes, gives the last touch to the dreadful picture by informing the country that the wounded and sick soldiers, by hundreds and by thousands, were literally starved to death.

In Parliament, the details of the Sardinian Convention have been discussed in Committee, from which we learn that England engages to borrow money, at 5 per cent and loan the same to Sardinia at 4 per cent.

Nine ships of the advanced British squadron sailed from Deal on the 28th for the Baltic.

Mr. Buchanan attended a dinner at the Seamen's Hospital, London, and returned thanks for aid rendered fifteen hundred sick American sailors. Lord Palmerston presided. A donation of two hundred pounds from the merchants of New York and Boston was acknowledged.

A motion is on the books for the appointment of a commission to amalgamate the British and Indian armies, or at least to render the Indian army available in the European war. Another motion asks if it is intended to nominate any more bishops for Canada, since the Canadian Clergy Reserves Bill says it is desirable to remove all connection between Church and State.

THE CRIMEA

A letter from Vienna, in the Oest. Deutsche Post says: The news from the Crimea comes down to the 11th. The allies were then observing with great attention the proceedings of the Russians in the valley of Baidar, and were expecting an attack on Balaklava, particulary as they had learned that General Wagner had received reinforcements from the corps of General Liprandi. The Russian forces are said to be distributed as follows: At Perekop is encamped the corps of dragoons, a division of light cavalry. and various other detachments, amounting in all to 20,000 men under the command of General Pawloff I. At Simpheropol there are about 45,000 men, commanded by General Read. Near the Belbeck General Osten-Sacken's head quarters have been placed with 50,000 men, including the garrison of Sebastopol. On the Tchernaya is encamped General Liprandi, with 18,000 men; and in the valley of Baidar is General Wagner with 9,000.

It appears that the first operation which General Osten-Sacken had executed, on his appointment to the chief command, was to have all the heights along the coast occupied and fortified from Karabelnaya to the mouth of the Tchernaya. The heights on the left bank of the Alma have also been fortified, and this defensive system seems to show that not only is Baktchiserai the centre of the general's operations, but that a greater importance is attached to the communications of Baktchiserai with Sebastopol and with Arabat, than to those of that town with Perekop. The Russians, in fact, seem determined to defend to the last extremity the basin of the Salzir as well as the ground extending from Simpheropol to Kaffa, their intention being, to all appearance, to procure their provisions and stores from the side of Anapa, and their reinforcements from Perekop. Should the Allies think fit to enter into operations not immediately in the neighborhood of Sebastopol, it is not improbable that they will act against Baktchiserai, the centre of the Russian positions.

By the latest advices, the Conference at Vienna had come to a full stand upon the third point of their basis for peace, the two first being unconditionally accepted by Russia. The demolition of Sebastopol was stricken out, but a reduction of the Russian power in the Black Sea was still insisted upon; the Russian Plenipotentiaries not being authorized to accede to such terms, have forwarded the subject to St. Petersburg, and await further instructions.

A correspondent of the London Times describes the condition of the army as much improved. Weather fine; health and spirits of the troops better, provisions abundant, and sanitary regulations strictly enforced; but the actual works of the siege make no progress to justify favorable prophecies. A formidable Russian force is assembled around Eupatoria, and virtually besiege the place, although it is completely under the guns of the English fleet.

Night encounters take place between the French and Russian riflemen. The latter have been repeatedly dislodged, but again return to their pits, under cover of the Russian batteries.

It appears from the operations of General Osten-Sacken, that he is determined to occupy all the heights along the coast, and defend to the last extremity the basin Salzir as well as the ground extending from Simpheropol to Kaffa, their intention appears to be to procure their provisions and stores from the side of Anapa, and their reinforcements from Perekop.

On the 8th March, the British frigate Viper destroyed the Martello Tower and the barracks of Djirnitera, which the Russians recently constructed between Anapa and Kerstak. The Circassians took and burned a small fort at the head of Soujak Bay.

A manifesto from the Holy Synod of the Russian Church has appeared, inciting the Russian nation to war in defence of their faith.

The death of the Prince Menschikoff is reported.

On the 14th, the Turkish cavalry made a sortie at Eupatoria but were repulsed. On the 17th, three battalions of Zouaves attacked the new redoubts, and were driven back with great loss.

Letters from Alexandria on the 25th March, state that one thousand English Lancers had arrived at Suez, from India. Seven hundred and ten wounded French soldiers have reached Marseilles.

The Bagdad News of the 10th of February states that the rebel Kurds, twenty thousand strong, continue an energetic resistance in the north of Mesopotamia.

Letters from the Crimea, of the 17th of March, announce that Omar Pacha arrived at the camp of the Allies on the 12th, and on the 13th the Russians opened the fire of their batteries on the heights of Balaklava.

CHINA.

Shanghai dates of the 6th February, per the Overland Mail, state that the French had again attacked the city and were repulsed with loss by the insurgents. The country around Canton is in the hands of the insurgents, who officially notify an intention to maintain a strict blockade. There are rumors of a second repulse of the French.

From Hong Kong we have dates to the 15th February, conveying reports that the insurgents, besieging Canton, had taken the Tiger Fort and plundered the surrounding villages.

SWEDEN.

Notwithstanding the declarations of neutrality by Sweden, she is fitting out a fleet, provisioned for three months.

SPAIN.

A difficulty is threatened between the Spanish and English Governments. Lord Howden the British Minister at Madrid, had addressed an energetic note to the Spanish Government, demanding explanations of what he regarded as, vague expressions in the new "religious basis' promulgaled by the Spanish Ministry. The matter relates to the religious privileges of British subjects in Spain. In the London Times we find the following, from its Madrid correspondent, writing under date of March 21:

"I have strong reason for believing that General Espartero, and probably all his colleagues, with the exception of Senor Luzuriaga were entirely ignorant, until yesterday, of the notes that have passed between the last named Minister and Lord Howden on the subject of the religious basis, the outrage at Seville, &c. In yesterday's cabinet council, however, the question was brought forward, and I have it on excellent authority that it really was discussed whether the note in question should not be returned to its author. Information of this reached the British Minister, and, not long afterwards, the Spanish Government received intelligence, through a private but authentic channel, that if such an insult were offered to the English Government as the return of a note on a subject so interesting to the English people—a note which Lord Howden had done but his strict duty in sending in—it was his intention, in six hours time, to remove the British arms from the facade of his residence, and suspend all further communications with the Spanish Government until he received instructions from his own. I should be surprised if the Spanish Government ventured upon so strong a measure as the return of the note referred to. In fact, I feel rather confident that they will not do so."—[N. Y. Sun.

Suffering in Zante, Greece.

FROM a private letter received by a gentleman in this vicinity from Zante, we are allowed to extract the following melancholy facts respecting the condition of that apparently devoted island:

"I have on a former occasion described to you the condition of this place. Extreme poverty is still crushing it. All ranks and all classes, with few exceptions, are suffering. Land proprietors are participating in this dreadful calamity. They cannot borrow a single shilling, and their only resource is begging. Beggars, however, have become so numerous that they cannot possibly be supported by private charity, and no public provision can be made for such numbers of sufferers, as the failure of the currant crop for so many years has affected considerably the treasury of the government.

"A large proportion of the population taste bread no oftener than once in three or four days, and in the meanwhile live upon whatever they can pick up about the streets—the refuse of the kitchen, lemons which are thrown away after the juice has been expressed, &c. Such being the condition of many in this island, the people going about the streets are pale and emaciated, and look more like moving skeletons than living men and women. Many are dying from sheer starvation. May the Lord have mercy on us! We as yet know not how this terrible visitation is to end. If, as it is probable, the disease of the currant vines makes its appearance this coming summer also, our end is unavoidable, and the people of this devoted place will have to pray for death to relieve them from their dreadful privations.—[Boston Traveller, April 16.

Miscellaneous.

Great Northern Railroad Convention.

The meeting of the Presidents, Directors, and Superintendents of the various railroads running from towns on the sea-coast to those on the banks of the Western Lakes, and the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, adjourned sine die this morning. The session yesterday lasted until a late hour last evening, but it was mostly consumed in friendly conversation, and in an exchange of opinions and sentiments in regard to the business of Railroads and the running of trains. In the evening, the subject of tolls on passengers and freight was talked over very freely, but nothing definite was concluded upon—the subject having been deferred to the next meeting of the Convention.

On reassembling this morning, the committee appointed to fix the time for the arrival and departure of trains, reported a time-table for the Central, Hudson River, and Boston Railroads, which was adopted by the Convention as follows:

GOING WEST.

FIRST TRAIN—Leave New-York at 6 A. M., arrive at Albany 10:30 A. M; leave at 11 A. M., arrive at Buffalo at 9 P. M; and leave for the West at 9:30 P. M.

SECOND TRAIN—Leave New-York at 12 M., arrive at Albany at 5:30 P. M; leave at 6 P. M., arrive at Buffalo at 6:30 A M.; and leave at 7 A. M.

THIRD TRAIN—Leave New-York at 5 P. M., arrive at Albany at 10:30 P M.; leave at 11 P M. arrive at Buffalo at 10:30 A. M; and leave at 10:45 A M.

GOING EAST.

FIRST TRAIN.—Leave Buffalo at 5:30 A. M., reach Albany 3:45 P. M.; leave 5 P. M for New-York, arriving at 10 P. M.; leave for Boston at 4:15 P. M., reach that place at 12:15 P. M.

SECOND TRAIN.—Leave Buffalo at 10:30 P. M; arrive at Albany at 8 A. M; leave for New-York at 8:15 arriving at 1:30 P. M; leave for Boston at 8:30 A. M., and arriving at 5 P. M.

THIRD TRAIN.—Leave Buffalo at 5 P. M., arrive at Albany at 4:30 A. M; leave for New-York at 5 A. M., arriving at 10.15 A. M.; leave for Boston at 5:30 A. M., arriving at 1:30 P. M.

The above will go into effect on the first Monday in May. It is understood that all the railroads west of Buffalo will so fix the time of the arrival of the trains on the various roads as to form a direct and speedy line of communication between New-York, Boston, St Louis and the various intermediate places on the lakes and rivers.—[From The Albany Evening Journal, April 12.

Directions to Postmasters.

THE First Assistant Postmaster General has issued the following directions to Postmasters:

"Books not weighing over four pounds may be sent in the mail, prepaid, at one cent an ounce, any distance in the United States under three thousand miles, provided they are put up without a cover or wrapper, or in a cover or wrapper open at the ends or sides, so that their character may be determined without removing the wrapper. If not prepaid, the postage under three thousand miles is one cent and a half, and over three thousand miles in the United States three cents an ounce.

"It is a violation of law to enclose or conceal a letter or other thing, (except bills and receipts for subscription,) or to make any memorandum in writing, or to print any word of communication after its publication upon any newspaper, pamphlet, magazine, or other printed matter. In all such cases letter postage should be demanded, and, if the person addressed refuse to pay such letter postage, the package should be returned to the postmaster from whose office it came, to prosecute the sender for the penalty of five dollars, prescribed by the 30th section of the act of 1825; and all transient printed matter should be distinctly postmarked at the mailing office.

"Postmasters are allowed one cent for the delivery of each free letter, except such as come to themselves, and two mills each on newspapers (to subscribers) not chargeable with postage. They are not allowed any commission on printed matter made free by the frank of a member of Congress.

"Daguerreotypes when sent in the mail should be rated and charged with letter postage by weight."

The Old Soldiers Bounty Land Act.

The bill has been passed by Congress, giving 160 acres of land to all who have served in the army of the United States since 1790. But if they have received land already, it grants them only such a portion as will make 160 acres in the whole. It is stated that there will no warrants issued under the new law for three or four months, as new plates will have to be engraved.

The persons entitled to the benefit of the act are as follows:—Surviving Officers, Musicians, Privates, Teamsters, Chaplains, or Indians, either of Regulars, Volunteers, Rangers, or Militia, who have been regularly mustered into the service of the United States; Officers, Seamen, Marines, Clerks, or Landsmen regularly employed in the Navy since 1790, and survivors of State Troops, mustered into the U. S. service, in and of the wars in which the United States have been engaged. Also volunteers at the invasion of Plattsburgh in 1814, at the battle of king's Mountain, in the revolution, and the battle of Nicojack with the southern Indians and Volunteers and Flotillamen at the attack on Lewiston in Delaware.

In case such persons are not surviving, their Widows. In case neither the person nor his Widow survive, their minor child or children, (minor at the time of the passage of the Act.)

A subsequent marriage deprives the Widow of her claim, unless she be a widow at the time of making her application,

Deserters, and persons dishonorably discharged, are, of course, excepted from the benefits of the Act.

The Land Warrants will be granted, upon such proof being made, and located on such terms, as in other cases under existing laws.

The Church Tenure Law.

The bill in relation to Church Property was signed on Wednesday by the Governor. It declares all future conveyances to Priests, Bishops and other ecclesiastics in their official character or as corporations sole, void. It also declares void all future conveyances of lands consecrated to religious purposes, unless made to a religious corporation organised in conformity to the statutes of the State, which require such corporations to consist of at least three Trustees, and not to have an annual revenue of more than $3,000, excepting the Minister, Elders and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of New-York; the Rector, Chuch Wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church, New-York; and the Minister, Elders and Deacons of the First Presbyterian Church of New-York. As to such lands at present held by individuals, (Bishops or others,) it provides that they shall be deemed to be held in trust for the congregations who use them: and that they shall revert to those congregations on the death of the individuals who now have the title. In case the congregation do not organize a corporation, to take the title, the land shall escheat to the State, to be held in trust by it until such a corporation shall be organized.—[Herald

Some of our National Expenses.

The aggregate expenses of Congress for the year, consisting of pay, mileage, compensation of officers, contingent expenses and library, amount, according to the appropriation bill, to $1,479,699.

The appropriation for Indian affairs amount to $2,277,696. The largest payment to any one tribe is that to the Mississippi Sioux $25,000.

The post office department cost the government for the year $1,716, 739; treasury department $676,120; mint $541,300; light houses $1,073,684; the coast survey $445,000; the judiciary $226,906.

The territorial governments for the year cost the government as follows; Oregon $34-000; Minnesota $31,300; Utah $33,000; New Mexico $33,500; Washington $33,000; Nebraska 35,624; Kansas 34,700. Making in the aggregate $236,123.

Congress at its last session, appropriated $3,297,608 for ocean mail service; $9,721,-655 for the army, and $15,681, 156 for the navy.

Capital in Farming.

The great leading error of the young farmers of our country is in not "counting the cost." The first thing they do is to expend not only all their capital in buying as large a farm as possible, but most usually they run largely into debt. Their desire for large possessions leaves them nothing to stock and improve the farm, and hence for many years, while loaded with a discouraging debt, their farms remain poorly provided with animals, with good implements, and with a good supply of manure. They are, therefore, compelled to perform all their operations to a great disadvantage; their small crops afford no net profits, and they become discouraged and lose the energy and enterprise essential to success. These causes are the most fruitful source of poor and slip-shod farming in America. It is not very difficult, in traversing the country, to point out among the various occupants of the land, from the appearance of the premises, such as are burdened with heavy debt, from those who have a good supply of spare capital.—[Country Gentlemen.

Journalizing in School.

1. A fine style of penmanship.
2. Promptness of composition and rapidity in recording thought.
3. Greater accuracy in thought.
4. Facility in acquiring knowledge, and certainty of retaining it.
5. Greater influence in imparting the riches of thought.
6. Renders our life more important in our own eyes.
7. Makes a person more reliable, and less impulsive in his thought and manner.
8. Facility in recalling the facts and events of past life, for use, of which John Quincy Adams is an eminent example.
9. An extensive record of one's own life, from which the next generation may know what we have been, and done.—[Mass. Teacher.

A MIRACULOUS WARNING.—Some week or two ago, says the Ruitman (Miss.) Intelligancer of the 16th ult., a strange thing is said to have occurred in Kemper county. A woman gave birth to a child covered all over with hair. It lived three hours, and spoke three distinct word—"seven years' famine." The strangest thing about it is, half the population of Kemper believe it, and struck with terror at the portentous warning, which they are said firmly to believe is a solution of the purposes of Providence in visiting the land with such strange seasons.—[Natchez Courier.

REMEDY FOR THE PEACH WORM.—Lay around each tree, early in Spring, say April, half a peck to a peck of air-slacked lime, or wood ashes. Spread them over the ground in the Fall, and it will make a good dressing. Renew again in the Spring. Besides this, examine the trees several times during the season, and if the grub has made its way into any of the trees, cut it out. Covering the tree with muslin at the time the fly lays her eggs, might be effectual. The point attacked is generally at the surface of the ground.

SALT MINES.—Salt mines have been discovered in Virginia, in a trough between two mountains at an elevation of nearly two thousand feet above the level of the sea. The fossil salt is encased in a vast deposit of gypsum, and has evidently resulted from volcanic action. The salt water in the neighborhood is intensely cold, whilst the gas issuing from these deep wells is supplied in unlimited quantity and yields a brilliant light.

WE hear that a younger son of Judge Kane, of Philadelphia, Dr. John K. Kane, who has recently graduated with the highest honors at the University (medical) of Pennsylvania, is to go out as the surgeon of one of the ships of the expedition so soon to start for the Arctic seas in search of the unfortunate expedition of his elder brother. [Wash. Star, April 10.

ALFALFA.—This plant, sometimes called Peruvian clover, is beginning to be appreciated in California. It can be cut several times a year, and affords a very heavy crop. In deep soil the roots penetrate so far that drouth does not prevent its growth, like ordinary grass or English clover. It should be cultivated here for soiling cattle.

THE New Bedford Mercury reports the following pithy conversation as having taken place on the steps of the Court House, between a distinguished member of the Boston bar and the District Attorney:

Mr. S. "Well, H———tt, how are you getting on?"

H. "Oh, pretty well. I get terribly abused, but I don't care anything about that."

Mr. S. "Ah! how is that? how do they abuse you?"

H. "Oh, they call me all sorts of names. Why, they called me Judas Iscariot the other day; but I didn't mind that."

S. "Of course not, H———tt; but what would Judas Iscariot say about it?"

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendant témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

The Memory of the Heart.

A SONNET BY DANIEL WEBSTER.

In stores of dry and learned lore we gain,
Close keep them in the memory of the brain;
Names, things, and facts—whate'er we knowledge call,
There is the common ledger for them all;
And images on this cold surface traced,
Make slight impression, and are soon effaced.

But we've a page more glowing, and more bright,
On which our friendship, and our love to write,
That these may never from the soul depart,
We trust them to the memory of the heart.
There is no dimming—no effacement here;
Each new pulsation keeps the record clear;
Warm golden letters all the tablet fill,
Nor lose their lustre till the heart stands still.

Ancient Ruins in America.

Ruins of Ancient Cities in America.

Extraordinary Discoveries in the Country of the Navajoes—Another Petra—Strange Fashion of Buiding, etc., etc.

On the 17th of October last, a party of twelve Mormons and one Indian, headed by W. D. Huntington, left Manti, one of the most southern settlements in Utah Territory, by request of Governor Young, to explore the southern part of the Territory, of which nothing is known, and if possible open a trade with the Navajoes, who dwell in that quarter, for sheep, goats and horses, of which it is known they have an abundance. They have, besides, considerable skill in manufactures, and make all their blankets, leather, bridle bits, &c., many of which are executed with most curious workmanship. They also work iron, gold and silver into a multitude of forms, and articles for the warrior, husbandman and tradesman. The party returned to the Mormon settlements on the 21st of December last, having on their trip made some most remarkable discoveries. They found, in fact, the ruins of a city built in the rocks, very similar to the far-famed Petra, in the Eastern desert, and even surpassing it in extent. From Mr. Huntington's account, furnished the Deseret News, we take the following highly interesting particulars:

On the 17th we left Manti with our full fit-out of men and animals, and with five wagons. We never felt more gloomy and doubtful, or undertook what appeared to us a more hazardous work, during an experience of twenty years in this church. A wild, mountainous and dreary desert, hitherto almost entirely unknown, lay before us, and, what was still more formidable, Indian Walker and his allies had decreed that we never should pass, and with twenty Spaniards had posted themselves on our route, and their rallying smoke was in full view. Still we unanimously resolved to go a head, and our enemies fled before we reached their position, the Spaniards their way and Walker his, leaving our path perfectly open. In this and many other instances in our tour we publicly acknowledged our wonderful protection and deliverance by the hand and power of God. We followed Gunnison's trail to within twenty-five miles of Grand river, which, according to our calculation, is 350 miles from Great Salt Lake City. This road, so far, was a tolerably good one, but the country has little or no wood, grass or water. There is a beautiful valley on Grand river twenty miles long, and from five to ten miles wide. It has a good soil and grazing range, is very well timbered and watered, and is about fifty miles from the Elk mountain. From here we traveled one hundred and ten miles to St. John's river, over a very rough and mountainous region, difficult to pass over even with pack animals, being covered with dense forests of cedar. It is forty miles from St. John's river to the nearest Navajo town.

RECEPTION BY THE NAVAJOES—CANNIBALISM.

The Navajoes met us with very hostile feelings, as they are at war with the whites, and three days before we arrived, had killed, boiled and eaten a white man, so great was their exasperation. By the persuasion of two friendly Indians with us—our guide and interpreter—they listened to an explanation of our business. We were finally enabled to form a treaty, and did some trading with them, while they were doing some tall stealing from us. They were highly excited, but the chiefs were more cool, appeared quite friendly, and wished us to come again and trade. Trade is the best letter of introduction a white man can take among Indians. Their great captain wished us not to go among their towns and villages, as there were some that could not be controlled, and he did not want to fight us. He said we had come a very great way, and he wished us well, and sent to his town and brought out an abundance of corn, meal, flour, bread, beans, dried pumpkin, dried squash, pinenuts, with sheep and goat meat of the finest quality, to fit us out for our journey home.

FIRST DISCOVERY OF RUINS.

On the north side of the St. John's river, and about five hundred miles southeast from Great Salt Lake City, we traveled over a section of country mostly among the mountains, and about forty miles in length, up and down the river, by twenty-five miles in width, covered with the ruins of former towns and villages. The walls of many buildings are still standing entire, some of them three or four stories high, with the ends of the red cedar joists yet in the wall, some projecting eight or ten inches, but worn to a point at their extremities. Every building was a fortification built in the strongest manner imaginable, and in a style that the present age know nothing of; many of them still plainly show the whole manner of structure and even the marks of the workmen's tools. The first ruins we discovered were three stone buildings, crumbled to mere heaps. One appeared to have been a pottery, for in and around it were loads of fragments of crockery of fine quality, ornamented with a great variety of figures, painted with various colors as bright as if put on but yesterday.

A FORTIFIED CITY.

From here we travelled ten miles, with occasional ruins by the way, and entered a deep cannon with projecting shelves of rock, and under these shelves were numerous houses or fortifications. The one we examined was divided into twenty-four rooms each nearly square and enclosing an area of about one hundred and forty-four square feet. The front wall was built up to the overhanging cliff, which formed the roof, and was curved and full of portholes. The stones were all squared and faced, were of an equal thickness, and laid up with joints broken in a workmanlike manner. The only entrance we could find was a hole about two feet square and eighteen inches from the ground, which is the usual size of all the doors, both in the outer and partition walls, with the exception of some subterraneas entrances, which were yet smaller, and difficult to find. Through the perfection of the rocky roof, there was very little rubbish in the rooms. From the first room we passed through a small hole in the right hand corner to the second, and there through another hole into the third, and so on, from left room to right, and from right to left, all through the twenty-four rooms, and every wall was supplied with port holes.

Fifty yards above this was a large cave with a narrow winding entrance, guarded by a high wall; near the mouth of this entrance is an opening in the rock, leading off into the mountain, which we did not explore, and after a little looking and rummaging about, we found an outlet to the cave. For three or four miles up this canon buildings were everywhere in view, of various forms and dimensions, and in almost every stage of decay.

From here to St. John's river,* a distance of ten miles, there were scattering ruins, and from there, in twelve miles northeast, we came to the head of a canon, whose sides or banks, even to the very head, were perpendicular and shelving, and near the banks there was no soil on the rocks. Right on the brink of this precipice, and under the shelves of rock beneath, were the best building sites for those beings who built and dwelt here ages ago.

ANOTHER STRONGHOLD.

All around the head of this canon, and down on either side, as far as we could see, were houses of every conceivable form and size; and in places where the soil was sufficient, they were overgrown with sage and cedars, in every respect like that on the mountains around. In the centre of this canon, and near the head, was a building sixteen or twenty feet square, four stories high, and built upon a flat rock about four feet higher than the level of the bed of the canon, and but little broader than the building; to this we could not find an entrance, and, unlike all the rest, it had no portholes. One large building, which we entered, stood on the edge of the precipice, with its front wall circular and flush with the bank, which formed the back part, making the ground plan of the building like a half moon. There were no windows in the lower story of any building, and every entrance was made as difficult and hidden as possible. The door, or hole, into the one last mentioned was guarded by two or three walls of different angles; thus making a crooked, narrow passage to the door, and every part of this passage was in full view from the port holes of the building, the front wall being full of them, like pigeon-holes, pointing in every possible direction; these were not more than two inches in diameter on the outside, and were plastered smooth on the inside, with a kind of cement, with which the stones are laid and the rooms plastered, that is as hard as stone.

The inside arrangement of all the houses was much alike, all having port holes in the partition walls, and very small and obscure passage-ways from one room to another, and from one or two houses, into the mountain.

WHO DWELT THERE?

We noticed there was no water about there, and inquired of the Indians how the former inhabitants could have managed? They told us that they had heard that a very long time ago there was water running there. We asked them who built those houses? They smilingly shook their heads, and said that they never heard, but that surely somebody must have built them a very long time back.

We very readily came to a conclusion drawn from the Book of Mormon, in the second chapter of the Book of Nephi, that the ancient possessors of those strongholds were robbers of the Gadianton band, and we considered this locality as one of their very strongholds.

"And it came to pass in the latter end of the eighteenth year, those armies of robbers had prepared for battle, and began to come down and to sally forth from the hills and out of the monntains, and the wilderness, and from their strongholds and their secret places, and began to take possession of the lands, both which was in the land south, and which was in the land north, and began to take possession of all the lands which had been deserted by the Nephites, and the cities which had been left desolate."

We find in the New York Herald of 1849, an account of the discovery of Ancient ruins in Northern California, however well founded, it agrees with most of the late explorations, and refer our readers to a comparison of this, and the account given by Mr. Huntington, with the records found in the Book of Mormon, containing the history of the mighty nations that once inhabited this land, whose descendants have long since passed away, and been replaced by others, who like Jacob and Esau were divided, forming two races, one of which, through their contentions and wars were nearly or quite exterminated; the other race constitutes the present tribes of American Indians.

The one mentioned by Mr. Huntington, refers to the Gadianton robbers which the Book of Mormon describes as a wicked savage warlike and blood-thirsty people, who lived in the mountain fastnesses, and the other to the Nephites, a civil industrious enterprising people, who feared God, dwelt in cities, cultivated the arts and sciences, and occupied a rich fertile land. The above quotation from the Book of Mormon, refers in brief to those two peoples or races. For particulars, we refer to the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon becomes still more interesting to the archæological student in its corroborative testimony, since its publicity was anterior to the researches of Stevens and Catherwood and most other explorers of Yucatan, Central America and California. It relates not only to the numerous ruins already exhumed, but to hundreds of cities and temples, whose ruins yet remain buried amid the boundless forests and luxuriant tropical growth of South America, scattered through the land's of the Incas—among the fastnesses of the Andes and Cordilleras, stretching far along the Rocky Mountains to the Copper Mines of Lake Superior, whose magnificence have never yet been displayed to the eye of any modern explorers.

Having promised you the earliest information relative to any discoveries of interest to the antiquarian that we might make while exploring, for this purpose, the hitherto unknown countries of Northern California and New Mexico, I hasten to give you, and through you to the world, an account of the actual existence of the ancient ruins, which, whether it regards their immense extent, or the size and grandeur of a single structure, have no equal on the face of the globe; and compared with which the ruined temples and edifices of Southern Mexico and Yucatan, discovered by Stephens and other travelers, dwindle into the most minor insignificance. And even the largest of the Egyptian pyramids, however vast, is but a child's toy in comparison to the chief structure of this group of mighty ruins; and which has, and probably ever will remain, an enduring memento of a race of men inhabiting this continent long anterior to the time that divine revelation or the book of Genesis gives as the period of the creation of the world. However startling the assertion may appear to a large majority of the Christian world, there is the most incontrovertible evidence exhibited in the symbolic writings and inscriptions upon every part of these now dilapidated monuments, of their having existed from before, and during, and even long after the general deluge, admitting such an event to have taken place. But the most interesting as well as satisfactory record as yet deciphered from the numerous hieroglyphics that everywhere abound, is a savage and cruel people from the north and east, making a slow but sure conquest of the beautiful land, waging a war of extermination, sparing no captive. But of this, as well as their general history from a remote antiquity, I will give you in a series of letters, and as fast as we can satisfactorily and correctly translate it. I will say, however, in addition to the foregoing, that the writings, as we call them, are entirely made up of pictures, symbols, or hieroglyphics, requiring the most careful, close and laborious attention, investigation and comparison, in order to trace both backward and forward from a certain period the connection that exists between them. For, unlike anything heretofore discovered on this continent, or indeed in the whole world, we here have presented to our views, as we now firmly believe, the unbroken history of a people that existed not only for a great length of time since the building of the Egyptian pyramids, but contemporary with them, and what is more wonderful still, far back, and yet still farther into the mazes of antiquity. For not only do we find the characters so common to all the ruins of Central America, but tracing them back, without as yet knowing precisely their import, we reach by progressive though receding steps a period when they were identical with, and purely the Egyptian hieroglyphic, easily deciphered and as easily understood. But on arriving at this period, we find these also taking their rise or having their origin in other characters or symbols as far removed from the more common Egyptian hieroglyphics, as are the characters the last in use by this highly intelligent but extinct race, and yet as clearly connected as is the now written though gradually changed language of the last ten centuries.

Chap. 1st of the Book of Ether, page 516—Book of Mormon:

"And now I Moroni proceed to give an account of those ancient inhabitants who were destroyed by the hand of the Lord upon the face of this north country."

B. C. 2218. "Which Jared came forth with his brother and their families, with some others and their families, from the great Tower, at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people,"—p. 526, "And thus they were driven forth three hundred and forty-four days upon the water;"—"And when they had set their feet upon the shores of the promised land, they bowed themselves down upon the face of the land, and did humble themselves before the Lord."

It will be seen by the above extract, that this continent was settled at a much earlier date than has generally been supposed. This early emigration brought with them the records of their own time, and also those which related to the antediluvian era; for he says on p. 516, "He held the plates containing the records from the time of Adam unto the time of their leaving the Tower of Babel." They would therefore just as certainly leave evidences upon their buildings of the history of their progenitors as the records of their own time, especially as they were located so far from all their early associations, with a mighty ocean rolling between. This record relative to an era prior to the flood, though expressive, would be in a different language from the Egyptian, and continue back an unbroken history to the days of our first Parents.

The Book of Ether goes on to describe the magnificence of their cities, the immensity of their wealth, and vast mounds of earth thrown up in digging for the precious metals, with the lineage of kings, their contentions and wars, and final extermination after a lapse of something over 1600 years; at which time another people, coming from Judea, at the close of the reign of Zedekiah, landed upon the shores of the southern continent (B. C. 584). The 1st Book of Nephi says, "I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews, and the language of the Egyptians;" thus showing, from this date, the use of the Egyptian hieroglyphics. The 3d chapter of the Book of Alma and the 2d chapter of Helaman also refer to a great emigration into the north country, to the number of some 30,000 souls.

Permit me here to make a single digression. You recollect the strong belief I entertained and expressed to you, of the existence somewhere on the American continent, if not totally obliterated by the corrodings of time, of the works of a people, which, if a record could be obtained, would carry us back to a period in the age of the world of which all history is silent. My predictions were based upon the light obtained by the recent examination of the interior of a newly discovered pyramid in lower Egypt, which for ages has remained unknown, from having been entirely buried beneath the sands of the desert. There, in one of its hidden recesses, upon a table of imperishable stone, is the record of the existence of a country beyond the most distant islands of the eastern seas, inhabited by a numerous, happy and highly intelligent people, and from whom the mysteries of writing by symbols, and a knowledge of the arts and sciences, had been obtained. And never was prediction or conjecture more amply verified. America must be that country beyond the eastern seas; and though its numerous and happy people are all gone, and century after century of storm and sunshine, earthquake and convulsion, and the spoliations of succeeding races of barbarous men have passed over it, yet all combined have not been able to blot out the evidences of their superior learning and skill in architectural science, as exhibited in the numerous and vastly magnificent structures, scattered here and there over a large part of Central and Northern America; and the veil of obscurity that has been so long wrapt around these relics of an unknown people seems to be drawn aside, and an era in the world's history introduced, of which though, with all the accumulated learning of centuries, we know nothing. But I will speculate no further in relation to the existence, much less the origin, or final fate, of this now extinct people; but will leave it, to be brought out by a careful investigation of the records they themselves have left, for the admiration and study of us and succeeding ages.

THE CITY OF THE DEAD WORLD.—By an easy ascent over a beautiful country, covered with every possible variety of forest timber, with here and there the residence of some miserable Mexican half breed, we reached the summit of an elevated table of land, extending to the south and west in trees, and piles of stones innumerable, and in every form and position imaginable. For the most part, however, the blocks are from ten to fourteen inches square and from fifteen inches to five feet in length, but many of them broken in numberless fragments, and lying in ridges from three to fifteen feet high, and forming enclosures of every conceivable shape and size; but the greater part about forty feet square, while some were sixty, eighty, and even one hundred feet, with ridges of the same material crossing their centres at right angles. Near the centre of the plain is an immense mound or pyramid of loose stones, two hundred feet square at its base, and forty feet high, having an irregular crater or basin in its top fifteen feet deep. Surrounding this pyramid, 140 yards from its base, in a perfect circle, and at equal distances from each other, are seven circular ridges of the same everlasting loose and broken fragments of stone, 60 yards in circumference at their base on the inner side, with an average of twenty feet in height. In the centre of each is a conical mound of the same material, and about the same height, with one exception, and this is the only instance where anything like a perfect wall remains visible amid this vast assemblage of unmeaning ruins. In this is a round solid column of masonry, thirty-six feet high, thirty feet in circumference at the surface, with an accumulation of stone about its base eight feet high, that must have, at some greatly remote period, fallen from its top. And here it stands, worn and furrowed by the lapse of centuries, without so much as a picture or figure of any description, to tell the tale of its rise, its glory, or its ruin. There can be but one opinion, however, in relation to this plain and its singular remains. Covered as it is with a luxuriant growth of grass and flowers, with forest trees of great age, here and there interspersed, as often within the enclosures as without, and the fact that all tradition teaches that it was always so, clearly proves its great antiquity. That it was the abode of men possessing a knowledge of the arts far superior to the present race of Indians, or their ancestors, and that these ridges and mound of stones, with scarcely the appearance of earth intermixed, are the fallen walls of their habitations—none can look upon them and for a moment doubt. But by whom, or when these millions of regularly shapen stones were carved from the mountain's side some five miles distant, conveyed and erected into stately edifices, which have long since lost even the semblance of human habitations, it is impossible to determine; for never were ruins so utterly barren of all record of their own history as these.

Returning on board the ship, we reached the mouth of the Rio Colorado early on the morning of Thursday, the 17th, and slowly moving against the current, before noon of the same day were nearly opposite the little town of Revilla, once known as San Pablo, where, after bidding adieu to our worthy captain and crew, we embarked on board the long boat, and were soon safely landed on a beautiful beach a short distance below the town. People of both sexes, of every grade of color, and in great numbers, flocked around us, wondering at the causes of our sudden desertion by the boat's crew and vessel, which, on the return of the boat, immediately dropped down with the current, and was soon lost to our sight. Having a sufficient knowledge of their language to be understood without difficulty, we were not long in gaining comfortable quarters. Revilla is situated on the eastern bank of the Colorado, fifteen miles below its confluence with the Rio Gila, and contains about 1300 inhabitants, mostly Mexicans, or Spanish, with a strong cross of the Indian and negro blood. There is nothing in or about this place to distinguish it particularly from other Mexican towns along the coast.

After eight days spent in making the necessary arrangements for our journey, procuring a large canoe, and its equipment with provisions for five men for sixty days, obtaining all the information possible relative to the different localities, and the "God bless you" of the old priest, we embarked with our two half Indian half Mexican guides (as well as half brothers) as oarsmen, upon the deep strong current of the Colorado. Keeping near its eastern bank to avoid the resistance of its now more than usually rapid current, slowly moving up one of the most beautiful rivers in the world, through a luxuriant and delightful country, we reached, a little before sunset, the mouth of the Gila River, now the boundary between the States and Mexico. Crossing to the northern shore, we passed the night at the residence of a Mexican of considerable influence, among his own people as well as the Indians, for more than two hundred miles along the valleys of the Colorado and Gila. With much of the proud Castilian in his manner, he was nevertheless frank, communicative, hospitable and intelligent; and learning the object of our visits to the valleys, insisted upon our going with him, the next morning, a distance of three miles or more to the north and east, to examine some ruins, which on some accounts (though not as extensive as those of the "City of the Dead World," already described, and with which he was familiar) he believed to be the most remarkable of any yet discovered. Early on the following morning—having fortified ourselves with an excellent breakfast of coffee, beefsteak and sweet potatoes—we were mounted, each upon an unshod though fleet and easy horse, and making our way at a rapid pace, over a country of gently rising acclivities, covered with perpetual verdure, with here and there a group of giant trees, soon reached the border of a lofty elevation, or table of land, commanding an extensive and magnificent view of the valleys of both rivers, and a gently rising rolling country on the west of the Colorado. Here, upon a natural elevation, or an immense artificial mound, that rises with an easy grade at least thirty feet above the level of the surrounding plain, stands the monument of a people, the memory of whom had passed away long ere tradition had taught their savage conquerors, by song or dance, to record the history or story of their existence.

Upon a triangular base of blue granite, ten feet on every side, and more than two feet thick, stand three triangular pillars of the same material, eleven feet high, and measuring three feet across each of their several surfaces, and each made of a simple block. Their bottoms are set nearly four feet distant from each other, while their tops are brought together, and probably, when first erected, touched. On their top rests a singular triangular block, projecting nearly six inches beyond the tops of the pillars, or seven feet on either side, and which even now, though centuries have elapsed, is still more than two feet thick at the centre; and though time or the hand of violence has greatly defaced and rounded the corners upon every part of this singular structure, enough remains to point out minutely its original form. The surfaces of the ends of these pillars, both at top and bottom, are at right angles with their sides, and both base and cap-stone have cesses cut into them, at such an angle as to make a perfect joint. Directly over the centre of each column or pillar is a hole four and a half inches in diameter, and nearly filled with a metal much resembling zinc, but which our friendly guide assured us contained some silver. With much difficulty we obtained a specimen, a little more than an ounce, for analyzation. It is evident the metal was poured into these holes in a melted state, and without doubt passes through the cap-stone and into the pillars, making one of the strongest and most enduring specimens of the skill and workmanship of an ancient people. The inner surfaces of these pillars still retain numerous traces of the pictures men, plants and animals, intermixed with hieroglyphic characters, of which, together with the whole structure complete, we have taken accurate drawings. Three-fourths of a mile from this are the "Finger Rings," or the remains of a structure that will defy even conjecture to give it a name. It stands, or rather, for the most part, lies just within the edge of a wood. Entering it, we were struck with surprise at seeing a lofty oak, more than nine feet in circumference at the ground, surrounded by a huge ring of solid stone, in every part at least eighteen inches in diameter. Involuntarily we raise our eyes toward the top of the tree, as a child does to the end of its finger, to see how it could have been placed there; but a clean trunk, forty-or fifty feet high, with a wide spreading top, is in solution of the mystery. You next examine the ring more closely, to see there is no deception, and you find it a solid rock of granite, defying as well the outward pressure of the growing tree as the repeated blows from a heavy hammer. There were no less than nine of these huge rings encircling as many trees, some of them, however, quite small. There were but two like the one first described, in which the tree completely filled the ring, three in diameter on the inside. Three others, and amongst them a California pine, though yet standing, are dead, in consequence of these ligatures about them; and the prostrate trunks of others in every stage of decay, and in a few instances still surrounded by their death-ring, seeming like monitors speaking to the living trees unfortunately begirt by these rings—"So large canst thou grow, but no larger." There are above ground forty-three whole ones, and nearly as many more broken in two, three and four pieces, upon more than half an acre, and probably as many more beneath the surface. Unlike the situation of nearly every ruin as yet seen, this singular edifice or structure was placed in a deep cavity or basin.

Nothing can exceed the wild beauty of this almost boundless plain, as it stretches onward and upward, dotted with here a group and there a grove, for hundreds of miles, even to the base of the Cordilleras. And if any dependence can be placed upon the information derived from the numerous and roving bands of Apaches and Tejuas that traverse these vast pampas, here, there are many other equally curious and wonderful remains scattered over its whole extent. Ask the Mexican by whom were these numerous structures reared, and the answer is "don't know;" he refers you to the aged Apache, or the patriarchal Tejua of a hundred and twelve years, and long since blind, but the answer is, "don't know." Ask him for some tradition respecting them, and he will tell you that while a little boy, he asked an aged chieftain the same question, and was told that many moons ago, when their own people were far more numerous than now, and long before the Spaniards had set foot upon their land, a deputation of the prophets of all the tribes west of the mountains assembled at Na-ha-go, a place about one hundred and fifty miles north of this, and supposed to have been the great seat or capital of this extinct people; that having ascended the great temple, there they sacrificed innumerable victims to their gods, that thereby they might be induced to tell the origin of the temple, and by what people reared; that their gods were prevailed upon and were about to do so, when the Great Spirit, who is greater than all the gods, being displeased, because the sacrifices were not made to him, sent his lightning and thunders among them, driving them all down from the temple, and killing many. Inasmuch, therefore, as this their great attempt to found even a plausible tradition in them proved futile, it would seem useless to look for one among these tribes, with which to unfold the mystery. Nor is it necessary, bearing as they do their own imperishable history, in characters as full of meaning as are the present letters of the alphabet, but requiring careful examination.

Thus far we have encountered no danger they were not ready to face, nor difficulty that they were not able to surmount, and we have reached our place of destination on the Colorado, and though nearly or quite one hundred and fifty miles from the Gulf, it is here safely navigable for large vessels. Here the White Water River comes in from the east—taking its name from the clearness and purity of its waters. Leaving the Colorado, and proceeding up the stream, by some called the Maria, a distance of ten miles, on the following day we reached the end of our journeyings by canoe. And, without attempting a single definite description at this time, I must say that I cannot conceive why it is that travelers have so long neglected to give a description of the unsurpassed beauties, the luxuriance and fertility of the valleys of the Colorado and its tributaries. It seems to me the country above all others best fitted for the abode of happy millions, as it has undoubtedly been.

I shall, therefore, only give you, in these papers, an outline history of our progress in unfolding the archives, in tracing back the genealogy of a line of Pharaohs or kings not only contemporary with the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt, but showing conclusively their undisputed claim to an era long prior to those. But before doing this, however, I shall continue my description of the principal monuments, pyramids, columns and tablets of stone, on which are inscribed or engraven thousands of characters, many entirely obliterated, but yet enough remaining that are perfectly legible, to employ a life-time in deciphering, and fill volumes with delineations. It may be well, in this place, to say something of the reasons or causes for directing our attention to this particular locality, without even so much as the memorandum of any former traveler to guide us. Not that we were without good reasons for believing in the existence of these ruins, at or near the place we find them; but the source from whence our information came is known to but few.

The "White Water" at this place is about twelve rods wide, and from three to six feet deep. On the north shore is a strip of alluvium or bottom land, extending a large distance up and down the river, before reaching the first of a series of elevations, that gradually rise higher and higher as they recede from the river. Upon this low bottom land, covered with a rank, luxuriant grass and a few cotton woods, that seem from their uncommon size to have stood for a century at least, is the first of a series of ruins so wonderful as almost to exceed belief. Twenty-five rods inland from the north bank of the stream is a wall of stones of great size, and which were once square-edged, many of them eight feet long by three and four wide, and sixteen inches thick. At the south end of the wall, which is twenty-five wide, the stones rise one above the other, and each layer receding about ten inches, until it reaches the height of seven feet, and may be called the north face of the wall, from the top of which it gradually descends toward the river, until at the distance of forty feet it reaches the surface of the ground, and is unquestionably the abutment of an ancient bridge, and if any further proof was wanting, we have it in the fact that fifteen rods to the north of this, and jutting out of the bank, is another wall the exact counterpart of the one just described. It is clear, therefore, that the river once ran between these abutments, but has gradually changed its bed from the north to the south side of the valley, giving to these old walls at the present time a most unmeaning position.

As we neared the point that brought us in range, our curiosity was turned to amazement at finding the nearest of these barren hills, though a fourth of a mile distant, to be a pyramid of stone, and the first ever seen in America, bearing in every respect the outline and general appearance of the Egyptian pyramids. Fully satisfied of the extent of the field now open before us, we lost no time in returning in our canoe and transferring our effects to the border of the forest lake, near where its outlet enters the gorge. A description of the singular beauties and peculiarities of this little gem of a lake, together with a thousand startling incidents that have occurred during our passage hither, our meeting with numerous bands of Apaches and Tejuas, with some reflections on their utter barrenness of all traditions in relation to these records of a forgotten people, together with numerous drawings and sketches, illustrative of events and objects, I shall reserve for the pages of a work, which, though it may not claim for itself much of superior diction, will at least possess the merit of truthful descriptions and delineations. This forest valley is hemmed in on all sides by a nearly level plain, that barely overlooks the waving foliage beneath, and stretching far and wide toward the north and east, (having traversed it for miles in different directions,) is dotted here and there with the traces of edifices, in every conceivable shape and state of preservation, from the massive front of solid stone, some of them fifteen feet high, and pierced with openings that were undoubtedly either windows or doors, or both, down to the same unmeaning ridges of loose stones that characterize the plain already described on the island of Ignacio. Our first attempt to penetrate the forest was opposite one of the barren pyramids. Descending into the valley with axe in hand, we cut our way through tangled underbrush and fallen trees, and the tortuous trunks of massive grape vines, which having reared themselves aloft and overtopped the trees that gave them their support, had fallen with them only to rear themselves again upon their progeny, in this way forming a network of vine and verdure that nothing but the edge of steel could penetrate, so that for yards together we barely made an opening sufficient to admit the passage of a person in a stooping position—at length we reached the base of this, not Egyptian, but truly American pyramid.

Having personally visited and being familiar with the construction of the Egyptian pyramids, I can speak positively of their almost exact similarity—composed of large blocks of stone, nearly three feet thick at the base of the pyramid, and from six to ten feet in length, placed one upon another, and each succeeding layer receding about fifteen inches, the only marked difference being the apparent great age of this, as compared with those on the banks of the Nile; many of the crevices between the blocks of the same layer or course being more than a foot wide; and so generally are the upper edges worn away, presenting a round rather than an angular corner, that it is with difficulty their ascent is made. Examining the other barren pyramid, we find it differing in only one respect from this: it is evidently of much later origin, for though the material and construction are the same, neither the edges of the stones, nor the crevices between them, present that time-worn appearance as does the one first described.

Before attempting any examination of the interior of these pyramids, we determined on penetrating to the hill or mountain in the centre of the forest; for the nearer we approached, the more like a mountain it appeared. Two days of incessant toil brought us to the foot of a mighty temple, called by the Indians of every tribe in the vicinity, "Na-ha-go;" though it seems to be applied by them to the whole valley alike, with every structure in it; the meaning of which, in our language, is best conveyed by the word "mystery!" or if more words than one be used, and applied to the whole valley, then "Valley of Mystery!" but when the Indian is called upon to explain its meaning, with great vehemence he invariably answers, "Na-ha-go!" or "The place we know nothing about." It would be in vain to attempt a description, by language alone, of this stupendous monument of human labor; or, whether viewed as a structure entirely of workmen's hands, or as a natural mountain, terraced from top to bottom; in either case, the grandeur of the design, and its entire accomplishment, cannot but fill the beholder with astonishment and admiration; for not only does it cover more ground than any pyramid in the known world, but it is incomparably higher; and being in the form of a cone, with a spiral terrace winding around it from bottom to top, and covered as it now is, and probably always was to some extent, with verdure to its very summit, is far more beautiful than any square-based pyramid of barren rock can be. It must not be supposed, however, that it still stands in all its original beauty, unscathed by the hitings of time and the corrosion of centuries; on the contrary, its primeval beauties, like its builders, are all gone, but its fallen grandeur and wild magnificence remain; and though time may often whet his scythe

* St. John's river, called by the Spaniards and known on the maps as San Juan river. It takes its rise in the mountains on the west side of the Rio Grande, nearly opposite Taos, and, running almost due west, empties into Grand river, just above the point where Grand river and Green river unite to form the Colorado. The San Juan passes through a country which has been rarely trodden by the white man, and of which nothing is known. Its junction with Grand river is in about the latitude of Monterey.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1855.

More Trouble in Kansas.

SINCE the departure of Governor Reeder, the following handbill has been extensively circulated:

Whereas, Governor Reeder has shown himself incompetent and unfit for the duties of his position; and, whereas, the appointment of a man to the Governorship, without consulting the choice of those to be governed, is an arbitrary exercise of power, the citizens of Kansas have, therefore, resolved to hold an election at Leavenworth on the 28th inst. to elect a person to succeed Governor Reeder, whose removal will be solicited.

Calls have been made for delegates from each district to meet at Leavenworth on the 20th to select a suitable person to fill the office, whose name is to be forwarded to the President for appointment.

What may be the end of these things is at the present time difficult to determine; one evil follows another in rapid succession; first a breach of national faith, then the unnatural importation of anti-slavery men, followed by the illegal voting of the pro-slavery; crimination and recrimination follow; one wrong treads on the heels of another; commotion follows commotion, and every attempt at change, renovation, or improvement only makes confusion worse confounded. Which side do you take? say some. Neither; we want neither part nor lot in any such matter; we think both partly right and partly wrong, and that both, in their proceedings, are a disgrace to the American Republic. Who does not know that the importation of abelitionists to that country is an extra-political move, calculated to excite the strongest jealousies of the citizens of the South, particularly the State of Missouri. For, however those gentlemen may be looked upon by their Eastern friends, by the South such people are viewed, in plain English, as thieves; and they would look upon the extension of the "underground railroad" to their vicinity with as much horror as their Eastern friends would that of the settlement of a band of pirates or robbers in their vicinity. We shall not enter, here, into the merits of this question; but simply say, these are their sentiments, and they unhesitatingly express them as the honest convictions of their minds.

On the other hand, the Eastern, or Anti-slavery men, view with equal horror the institutions of slavery; they look upon it as a foul blot upon the escutcheon of the United States, and think they are doing God service in endeavoring to extirpate it from their midst, either by honest or dishonest means. They therefore seek to flood the country with parties favorable, at least, to their views, by this extra-politico move. They cannot honestly pretend that they are acting constitutionally. The pro-slavery men, seeing them so unscrupulous in these matters, stretch the point yet farther, and in point of misrule and unconstitutionality, out-Herod Herod; for without even a pretence of law, they introduce voters by wholesale—to do what? To use their elective franchise? No; but to violate that of others, and to turn that most sacred of American rights, the free and untrammeled franchise, into a perfect burlesque, and to introduce the bowie knife, the pistol and the rifle, and let violence, anarchy and bloodshed revel at the very altar of the temple of American freedom. Who can defend such conduct? Nobody pretends to upon constitutional principles; and the only excuse is that we meet one wrong with another. We talk in the East of "a higher law." If this is the elevation that it leads to, we shall soon be so high that we shall find ourselves floating in thin air, without any guide or anchorage, or in the position of the Irishman, who, in describing his residence, said, "Sure and if the house was turned upside down, I should be in the garret." Whenever this so-called higher law prevails, and men are governed by the visionary imaginations of their own minds, and constitutional barriers are universally trodden under foot, there will be written on the United States, "Mene, Mene Tekel Upharsen." It would be well for men to pause, if they reflect they may find out that our fathers were not such great fools when they battled for liberty and penned the Constitution, and that peradventure it would be better for them and their children to compromise a little, rather than plunge the knife into the very vitals of this republic, the blessings of which cost the best blood of our fathers to obtain.

To the Eastern Saints.

IN our late visit to Philadelphia to assist in making arrangements for our European brethren who have recently immigrated to this land, we were more than ever convinced of the necessity of reciprocity of action, in the removal of the Saints from distant lands, to the Zion of our God—it is necessary that all party distinctions, national predilections, and local circumstances should be merged in the one great cause, viz: the welfare, prosperity and happiness of the saints, the establishment of Zion, and the rolling forth of the kingdom of God. In the accomplishment of this purpose it is absolutely necessary that, unwearied exertions, unremitting diligence and much personal sacrifice should be made, to fulfil the increasing demands that the kingdom of God, in its progressive movements, is constantly calling for, at our hands. It is true we have our individuality; but it is so absorbed, in the great whole, that when we look around we find ourselves voluntarily moving along in the great body, and forget self in propelling forward the great machinery, that is ultimately to revolutionize, change and ameliorate the condition of a fallen world. Our views, feelings, hopes, cares, fears and prospects differ materially from that of the rest of mankind; and consequently, our proceedings must necessarily be, and remain, an enigma to them. They are actuated solely by present views, we by the present and future. They have no knowledge of God by revelation; God has communicated to us his will. Their hopes, cares and fears are bounded by the narrow limits of time; ours embrace the past, present and to come; we wish associations with our fathers, with our present friends, and with our posterity; mixed up in a general interest, a general whole; as the children of one great Father, who formed the world and us; and whose design it is to renovate and purify it from the corruption with which it is enveloped; to put down all misrule, destroy the power of Satan, bring about the restitution of all things, and to place mankind and the world, in that position originally intended by their great Creator.

In the preparatory work there is something more than a theory; it requires practical matter-of-fact operations. It was no affected sympathy in the bosom of our Saviour that redeemed the world; it was actually leaving his Father; coming to the world; doing, suffering, atoning, dying, and rising again literally. It is no milk-and-water operation—no metaphysical, theorizing or temporizing that will bring about the restitution of all things. The holy priesthood is restored, and the powers of darkness are in the field; the two influences have met for more than mortal strife; intelligence is arrayed against intelligence, influence against influence, power against power; we have rushed to the conflict, and with the motto of "God and Victory" we cannot yield; for "the Lord is our buckler and defence;" we will not give up till the victory is gained, and until it shall be proclaimed by every creature on earth and in heaven, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ."

In our emigrations it is not simply soliloquizing about what the "Evangelical Prophet" Isaiah has said, when, in prophetic vision, he saw the gathering of Israel, and beautifully sung, "who are these that come as a cloud, that fly as doves to the windows," that talked about them coming "upon camels and dromedaries, on litters, in carriages and swift beasts; the rich and poor, the halt and lame, to the mountains of the God of Israel, to be taught of his ways." This, it is true, is a beautiful theme, a nice theory; but it is more than a theory with us; the day has dawned upon us; the vision is being realized; the practical matter-of-fact thing is at our doors, and we are as literally engaged in it as was Abraham when he "left his father's house to go to a land ordained of God." The ships are employed; the Saints are in motion; the kingdom is being built, and they are rushing by thousands to the gathering place in Zion. They are literally breaking up their homes, and wandering forth "as strangers and pilgrims on the earth in search of a better inheritance." These migrations place thousands in peculiar circumstances; they frequently, for want of means, find themselves lonely in a strange land, and it demands not sympathy only, but practical matter of fact action, and a united endeavor, by all the Eastern Saints, to try to assist those who may tarry in our midst, not with the cold words of "Be ye warmed and filled," but by our united energetic endeavors to obtain labor for those who stay, for a while, in our midst; to take them into our houses, to comfort and feed them, as far as lies in our power; and it is as much their duty to turn round and repay this the first opportunity, and to assist others on the same principle, as it is our duty to assist them; not upon common stock principle, or cold, formal, communist rule; but because they are our fellow beings, children of the same Father, and need our assistance; and on the other hand, as honorable, high-minded men, those thus assisted would shrink from and loath anything mean and degrading, and would feel a pleasure in refunding that which has been liberally granted in their need; and then turn round, in their turn, and show the same liberality to others that has been manifested to them. This is generosity, liberality and freedom; not based upon narrow, selfish principles, but individual, voluntary, free action; guided by the noble impulses which flow from the generous, genial influences of the Spirit of God. Let it be our duty, brethren, to seek how much good we can do, and not how little; let us unite our efforts and energies to benefit our brethren in this coming emigration, and in all things else let us act well our part, assist in rolling forth the great machinery, fulfill our destiny on earth, and secure to ourselves a celestial inheritance in the Kingdom of God.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

Ye theologians, pray tell me why,
(If such sage counsel in your craniums lie,)
Those ancient men of God took many wives,
In sacred union, for eternal lives?
If what you say be true, that 'tis a shame
To duplicate the bearer of your name,
Shall lapse of time make righteous Abra'm base,
And take a Jacob's Rachael from her place?
Consign a Gideon to a guilty grave,
And damn a Moses that did Israel save?
Or has the Great I AM to you revealed
A secret, from his Prophets kept concealed?
Or have you found it in the Sacred Writ?
(From lid to lid you've scaned it every whit;)
If so, please quote it; I like you confide
In that sage volume, left us for our guide:
I read within that book you so extol,
That God to David gave the wives of Saul;
Do you condemn him—say it was a crime
To give one man two women at a time?
A thousand pities you had not been there
To manifest your wisdom and your care.
The time the Prophet saw is on the wing,*
"When seven women to one man shall cling,
(Not for the lack of clothing, or of bread,
But for a husband—for a man—a head,)
To obviate reproach and share his name,"
As to be single then will be a shame.
For war will strew its victims o'er the plain,
And maddened men rush heedless to be slain;
"A man shall be more precious in the land
Than golden wedges from the Ophir strand."
If you, perchance, among these worthies stand,
And "seven women" claim your saving hand,
Do not reject the six and save the one,
And boast of magnanimity when done.
If "Saviours on Mount Zion" you would be,
Seek not to bind what God hath ordained free;
Yet in your freedom, don't yourselves debase,
Like heartless wretches of the Gentile race:
Be saviours, not destroyers of the fair.
Let truth and virtue be your Polar Star;
Appreciate the blessings to you given;
Fulfill your destiny in earth and heaven.

Arrival of the Ship Siddons at Philadelphia.

WE are happy to be able to announce, after so long a time, the safe arrival of the ship Siddons in Philadelphia, April 20th. She has been battling with contrary winds from the 27th of February; but no accident of importance has occurred on the road. She left Liverpool with four hundred and twenty-seven Saints on board; there were several births during the passage, and three or four deaths, infants. Ninety-seven of the above were forwarded by the Perpetual Emigration Fund, and will go through to the Valley. They were under the presidency of John S. Fullmer, who has the charge this year of the P. E. Fund emigration until their arrival at St. Louis. A number of other passengers were also en route for the Valley. Several cars full left Philadelphia on Monday last, and quite a number remained in that city and vicinity. From the efficient management of Dr. Clinton and others most of them will get immediate employ. The Philadelphia brethren also exhibited a very laudable care in trying to make their strange brethren comfortable. We visited Philadelphia to assist in making arrangements, and were glad to strike hands with our old friends, Elders Fullmer, Pace, Allred, and Duell, who are homeward bound, after a long absence. Their familiar faces reminded us of days gone by, when, side by side, we have battled for liberty and truth. We wish them a safe and speedy return to the bosoms of their families and friends, and pray that the blessings of the God of Abraham may go with them. We also recognized the faces of many familiar friends whom we have met in distant lands. The Saints all seemed to enjoy good health and spirits.

Fashionable Lady Scavengers.

WE flatter ourselves that we have a small smattering of that quality which, at least, is able to discriminate and appreciate good taste, whether in male, or female; but to account for some of the ridiculous fashions that obtain in this great metropolis, on rational principles, is beyond our reach. To see ladies dressed in costly, and in some respects tastefully arranged dresses so long that three or four inches trails on the ground sweeping the sidewalks and accumulating filth, and then to have the bonnet dropping of the head as if in sympathy for, or attracted by the trail is to us superbly ridiculous. We have heard it said "the more slouching, the more genteel," but have never supposed it to mean more than a joke, until observing the above fashions. We have thought of another reason that might be offered by the advocates of, and participators in this trailing propensity; that it originated with a certain Queen who was desirous to hide some deformity in the feet or ankels: but to the symmetrically formed Queens of this great metropolis we see no propriety, in its application, and only wonder that they will follow a fashion so absurd inconvenient and filthy, and after exhausting our philosophy to discover a reason in vain, can only place these trailing sweepers and philoprogentive suspension bonnets, among the monstrosities and absurdities of the age.

ANCIENT RUINS.—We give this week a very lengthy account of ancient American ruins, strongly corroborative of the truth of the Book of Mormon. The importance of the subject must be our excuse for giving such lengthy details; for we have a decided aversion to cutting up and dividing articles of interest. We recommend our readers to search the Book of Mormon, and compare notes with our modern travelers.

In consequence of some of the presiding elders not having forwarded the numbers of their branches, we are unable to publish the Philadelphia Conference minutes. We hope they will forward immediately.

THE war steamer Mississippi, flag ship of the Japan squadron, arrived at this port yesterday (April 22d), from the Pacific. The Mississippi has been absent since November 1852.

FOR THE MORMON.

Massachusetts and the General Government.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

OUR natural predilections, however remote we may be, incline us to look with much interest to that section of country that gave us birth. And having been a citizen of Massachusetts, for upwards of twenty-five of my earliest years, I cannot look upon her present radical movements as an idle spectator, or with careless indifference. And being of the maritime class of her citizens, I look at her with no little solicitude, as I see her loose one by one those moorings that have kept her in so proud a position in the Federal fleet, and swing into the inovating, agitating currents of sectional parties, that to me so illcompare with the placid waters of concession, and compromise, on which she used to float. Whigery, and Democracy, formerly her two great leading political features, are now among the things that were. And on enquiry, after an absence of some eight years into her present politics, I am told, that after passing through several phases she has come up Know Nothing. Still being somewhat ignorant of the commonly accepted meaning of that cognomen, I have endeavored to post up more fully, by examining its fruits. Among those fruits I find an officer of the United States Government, high minded, well qualified, and determined in his place to carry out the laws of that government which cost the best blood of our Fathers to establish, weighed in this new political balance and found wanting. Wanting in what? Why the spirit of nullification, or a disposition to render powerless the laws of our common country. It is said by many to be necessary that certain laws of the general government be made null and void, because they do not favor, or are opposed to their peculiar views of matters and things. Now the advocates of such views may be honest in their appeal from the federal, to those they call the higher laws of conscience. But such persons can have but little of that patriotic feeling that swelled the bosoms of the Fathers of Seventy-Six. A genuine love of country has always prompted a willingness to make concessions of local interest, for the benefit of the great whole; without which no government, made up of as many varied interests as our own, could possibly be perpetuated. Our fathers well understood this, and framed the Federal compact, in a spirit of concession well worthy of our own imitation. So long as the love of country, prompted men to acquiesce in these consessions, so wisely made by the fathers, so long the Union of the States was safe, and no earthly power could sever it.

It was never once supposed by the framers of the Constitution, or those who ratified it, that its provisions were the best that could be devised for certain sections of country, or perhaps any section taken in the abstract; but that it was the best that could be devised to meet the exigencies of the case, when taken as a whole. Local interests, and men tenacious for their peculiar rights and privileges, politically and religiously, existed at the commencement of our glorious national career, as well as at the present time. Time has not so much changed circumstances as it has the people; like causes produced like effects then as well as now; hence the motto of the Father of his country, "United we stand, divided we fall," has been perfectly applicable to us ever since we have been a nation. It would seem, however, that many of my fellow citizens of Massachusetts (though not her alone by any means) had not realized so fully the above motto as did the fathers; or having realized it, have determined on the latter of its two conditions. For they have said, "No union with slaveholders." "The law that protects the rights of a slaveholder in the free States shall not be maintained." "The officer that dare stand up and execute the federal law according to his oath, if such law is not in accordance with our local or religious feeling, he shall be proscribed," &c., &c. Now, as I said before, I do not impugn the motive of such persons or parties, yet I cannot see the chance of a doubt but that such a policy, persisted in, must result in a dissolution of the Union. If gentlemen can, by logical reasoning, arrive at a different conclusion, they have a logic in which I am not versed. Indeed it is a logic that, had the fathers of our country been in possession of, would have obviated much of that anxiety and solicitous care that agitated their bosoms, as they looked with half prophetic, half reasoning eye, down through the years that should intervene, to the time when their posterity should act the part in the great national drama to which I have referred, and to which the present radical movement is the opening prologue. "Hope, that springs eternal in the human breast," seems to be the only visible prop on which these adventurers rely, in fulfilling what they consider their conscientious duty. But hope against hope, or hope against reason, common sense and sound logic, is what the eloquent Patrick Henry called a "delusive phantom;" and such I fear too many of my erring countrymen will find it.

To persist in the very course calculated to bring about a severance of the Union, and still hope that such a crisis will never occur is hardly in accordance with that "sound philosophy" for which New England has been proverbial. There is a class, however, that are more consistent with themselves, at any rate; who openly admit the probability of a division between the North and South, and who say they have counted the cost, and are ready for the issue; for, say they, slavery is wrong in principle, and we are determined to put it down, as far as lies in our power, even though it be at the expense of the Constitution; "and the sooner it be trodden under foot the better; so that by this means we wash our hands of this crying evil." There is an honesty and frankness about this latter course that I admire; it is far preferable to sailing under false colors; but to a patriotic citizen, who venerates and loves his country notwithstanding her faults, these radical demonstrations are to him as the boys were to the frogs that were being pelted by their sportive missiles. It may be sport to you, said the frogs, but it is death to us. To such as entertain these ideas, it is of but little use to appeal to their patriotism, or love of country, since the perpetuity of the General Government is to them only a source of regret. To them the sun of American liberty and freedom has already set. In them remains but a faint flickering of that flame that burned so vehemently in the bosoms of their revolutionary sires. The object for which our fathers bled, to them is an object of secondary consideration. But I would say to them, be not too hasty; be calm, and "in patience possess ye your souls;" I appreciate, in no small degree, the object of your great anxiety; I sympathize in those impulses of the inner man that seeks the good of all the sons and daughters of Adam, whether black or white. This is right. But being in the right, do not let us put ourselves in the wrong; or, in other words, let us not be actuated by an infatuation or zeal that is not according to wisdom. If we profess to be wise, let wisdom be justified of her children; let us look at both sides of the case.

Have our brethren at the South no claim to honesty of purpose, because they look at Slavery in a different light than we do? Have we ever thought of what might be the cause of the difference of opinion between a citizen of Massachusetts, and one of South Carolina? Those who have, can but admit the fact, that to be born, and traditionated in the former, is to become a conscientious abolitionist; while, on the other hand, to be born and traditionated in the latter, is to become a conscientious slaveholder (with, perhaps, some few exceptions in either case). The traditionary magnifying glass through which the Northern abolitionist sees those monsters in the shape of pro-slavery men as he scans the Southern horizon, in the hands of a Southern man, looking to the North, entirely reverses the scenery; and instead of pro-slavery, anti-slavery men become the monsters. Wisdom would dictate then, that we lay aside this "pride of place"—this "self-righteousness" tradition,—the sin that doth so easily beset us—that, when it shall be said, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone," we may not retire with shame and confusion from the execution of offenders, on account of our own transgressions. But more anon.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

WE find then, from the facts already detailed, that the stringency of family institutions in ancient Europe originated in envy, and in political expediency, two very corrupt sources. The Christians, in the early ages of the church, were shamed into compliance with this mode, especially as it seemed to involve no moral principle, a feeling from which Paul himself, in another matter, does not appear to have been clear (See 1st. Corinthians, 5th ch. 1st. v.) and, no doubt, the Romans, as far as they could, through envy, would impose, by law, this feature of their institutions on all that were subject to them; more especially we may be sure that they would not spare any plea that they could raise against the Christians. But even the Jews were forbidden to follow the example of the heathen in any respect, and to the Christians it was said, "come out from among them and be ye separate." If Christians are to take the example of heathens in anything, what limit shall be set, that they may not copy them in everything.

A common plea in this connection is that God created an equal number of each sex, one woman for the one man. It is somewhat presumptuous to undertake to assign reasons for the Almighty's acts, farther than the necessity of the case and the book of Nature explain them; he might have had many other reasons for it, the most obvious of which is simply that that number was enough to begin with. But the Mosaic account of the creation can not, consistently with fact, common sense and reason, be received as a strict narrative of facts, but as an allegory comprising general principles. Besides, even if we suppose that to have been God's will toward man in Eden, which this treatise neither denies nor concedes, yet we must consider that the woman's relation to the man was much changed by the fall, submission to him now became her destiny and therefore her duty, and any modification of her moral and social relation to him conducing to that end, that is not physically hurtful is allowable; the end always includes the means, provided the means are not palpably evil.

Plurality creates no physical evils, no disease, nor so injurious discord as exists in a more stringent condition, but on the contrary, it affords many household conveniences and comforts, where the parties agree. But moral evil always produces physical evil. In fact, our stringent system allows or compels conditions of this relation that are much more discordant, and physically much more hurtful. The evils arising from the condition here proposed are imaginary, and where they are made to exist "the evil imaginations of the thoughts of the heart" are the cause of them, not necessity the grand criterion of right. But whatever may have been man's condition in Eden, it appears to be an impossibility that man should, in this life, return to it; the path of his return is stopped by an allegorical "flaming sword which turns every way," and much less may woman hope to restore herself to that condition by rebellion against her destiny, submission to the man; and our stringent family compact originating in jealousy on the part of the woman towards the man, and therefore in rebellion against him is the first step in rebellion against that destiny.

But by our modern family institutions, the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price, is discarded, women are not allowed to be peaceable to one another, and confiding to their husbands if they would; it is not permitted to them to cultivate that mutual friendship to which females are naturally inclined; but they are called upon to be intensely jealous of one another, and to trample under foot and destroy all competitors for the favor of the other sex. Jealousy is made the woman's duty and a great virtue, and all that do not exhibit this devilish and beastly passion born of lust, are vilified as lacking a proper spirit.

PRES. TAYLOR, Dear Sir: I arrived here on the 4th of March last, and found your paper had preceded me a few days, and it was hailed with much joy by those who love and seek the truth; for there are many here who are seeking after the truth, as they have been humbugged by priestcraft and false doctrine so long, that they are perfectly disgusted with it, and their mode of manufacturing converts, and would fain look after something more substantial, and better sustained by the words of Divine Truth.

I am now roving through the country in which I was born, and spent about thirty years of my life. My father and mother were born also in this State, and spent their lives here. My father held the commission of Major during the war of 1812, in which my brother also was actively engaged, and what is remarkable my parents raised a family of sixteen children, all of which lived to raise families of their own, and now number 225 souls, scattered throughout the United States.

I have been laboring through this county, not from Dan to Bersheba, but from Cairo to Lexington; through the blessing of God, some are believing in my testimony, that "surely the Lord has again spoken from the heavens, and revealed the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel"—and this kind of testimony is that which will make Babylon tremble, and I find that priestcraft is really on the decline, and the people's confidence in them is very much shaken; at least so far as their being able to teach them things they do not know themselves.

I had a short specimen of this, on an occasion of a discussion with a certain Presbyterian minister, which proved quite to the satisfaction of many.

I take great pleasure in perusing the pages of the Mormon, as well as many of my friends around me, and we hope its bright rays may continue to shed forth their light over these Eastern States, until it shall usher in the glory of the fullness of the Millenial reign.

I send you a few more subscriptions, and hope soon to send more, &c.

Remember me to the brethren with whom I crossed the plains, and all the Saints.

Your Brother,
E. K. FULLER.

29 GOTHERSGADE, COPENHAGEN, March 30, 1855.

ELDER J. TAYLOR—Dear Brother:—I hope you will excuse me for the liberty I am taking in writing to you; for I am very anxious to obtain the "Mormon," I should have ordered it before now if I had known your address. Will you please forward it from the commencement? And if it would not be asking too much of you, I would be glad to have you forward me, occasionally, the New York "Herald," or "Tribune," one that you judge will be of interest to me. The European papers extract very little from the American papers, and I am quite anxious to know what is transpiring in my native land; not that I have a particular relish to read of the calamities that are almost daily transpiring, but, it is a satisfaction to me, to know that the Prophecies are having their fulfillment, and that too in a speedy manner; and yet the majority of mankind are blind in relation to these things, and still have the presumption to legislate, and talk of establishing peace upon a permanent basis; when peace, in a great degree is taken from the earth, and the blood of Prophets is calling for vengence.

They do not believe that God has spoken from the Heavens, and decreed a consumption over the whole earth; they must be convinced that the destroyer is on his way, and is magnifying his calling by laying waste his thousands.

We have experienced a hard winter here; to-day, the sun shines quite warm, and it begins to appear like spring, still, we are bound in by the ice; only a few days since people could go from here to Sweden on the ice, and to-day I saw many out on the ice more than a mile. But, I am in hopes that navigation will soon be open.

We are getting along about as usual, nothing marvelous is transpiring; but the work in which we are engaged is continually gaining ground.

I feel truly grateful to the Lord that I have been preserved through another winter, I have now spent three years from home, and probably will have to spend one more, by that time I shall appreciate the blessings of home, if I never did before. Do not you think so?

I wish you all the success in your laudable undertaking, that you may desire. The "Mormon," no doubt will be sought after with interest. The name itself will attract attention, if nothing else, as it does in every land.

I should be pleased to receive a communication from you if you have time. You know not how I rejoice over a letter from my native land, if you did, I believe you would write to me, although I have no particular claim on you; May I hope?

I have trespassed upon your time already, therefore will close, by desiring the Lord to bless you in your high and holy calling, and in His due time give you the privilege of returning to your home in Zion. Accept of my best respects. And believe me, yours, &c., in the Gospel covenant.

Respectfully yours, &c.,
JOHN VAN COTT.

CENTERVILLE, Del., April, 1855.

BRO. TAYLOR—Dear Sir:—Agreeable to promise I take the pen to drop you a few ideas relative to some of the manners and customs of the natives of the Bengall, Hindostan and Sciend provinces, (and perhaps Burmah) East India, Asia. As I thought perhaps it might prove somewhat interesting to, at least, some of your numerous readers, and peradventure I might be able to disabuse the public mind in some degree relative to the character of the Heathens, and also of some of the—so called—ministers of Christ, sent among them as they say "to bring soul's to Christ," or to convert them to the christian religion.

It is not my design in this or these (as the case may be) communications, to enter into a detail of every minister, or the character of either the natives or whites. But I shall show in part only, their mode of worship, and the course the missionaries have taken to convert them to their principles, which in all probability will look rather strange to the minds of some of the more pious people of our boasted land of liberty. "When the blind lead the blind, they both fall into the ditch."

I arrived in the city of Palaces (Calcutta,) on the 26th day of April 1853, and remained in some of the above named provinces until the first day of November 1854; being eighteen months and four days. During this time I traveled by government bullock trains, one thousand miles into the interior of the country, or to the foot of the Great Himalayan mountains, passing through hundreds of native cities, villages, or towns, visiting all the principal stations within fifty miles of the "Grand trunk road." My business in that tropical clime, was to preach the everlasting gospel, (without purse or scrip) as has been revealed again from Heaven in these last days.

When I first went to that land I of course had a favorable opinion of those people, as I had seen the reports of the Gentile Padres (priests,) that they had made so many "hopeful conversions" and I thought if they were Heathens and could be made to believe in a false doctrine, and a "God without body parts or passions" in such numbers, some few at least might be induced to investigate, believe, and obey a true one, and to serve the true and living God with body parts and passions; and particularly as it had been revealed from Heaven by an angel in this our day and generation, and was not defiled by man; but was pure and unadulterated from priestcraft, or any of the crafts of men; and then I knew that the Lord would testify to any honest man or people of the truth of his work in all, or any land; so for this reason my soul was buoyant with hope in behalf of the black, or natives, as well as the whites. But I must acknowledge I was somewhat disappointed and chagrined, when I learned by what process these benighted Heathens were converted to be christians, as they please to call it. I can truly say as did our Saviour, "They are two fold more the child of hell than before."

I will in the first place speak of the natives as they are, and afterwards describe them as they are made to be, by the pious hireling priests; you know our Saviour says "my sheep know my voice, and a hireling they will not follow;" those natives do not follow the men but the keepers.

When I first landed, or about one week after, I proceeded to Chinsurah where I commenced my labors, of course, among Europeans half casts and natives, as my mission was to Priests as well as laity. I remained there about three and a half months, at that time, when it appeared to be wisdom that I should go to the northwest provinces. As I before said, this caused me to have to pass through many large, and also small, native towns and cities.

Shortly after I arrived at Meerut (nine hundred miles from Calcutta) I commenced my labors, and in order that I might understand something more of their (the natives) mode of worship, I attended some of their Poojahs. The first is what is called Poojah. They have a god (image), as they please to call it, composed of various materials, such as bamboo, mud, cloth, gum powder, &c. This image is from forty to sixty feet high, and as large in proportion other ways. They have a great variety of recreations going on within a circle formed, which was probably twenty rods or more in diameter, such as fireworks of every description of color that you can conceive of; swinging, a little on the principle of a water-wheel, only the buckets kept right side up, or nearly so, all the time; riding on elephants, &c.

When the worship, or festival as you may please to call it, is nearly over, the god (image) has to be destroyed; but before this is done he has to be conquered, as they call it, which is done by a Hindoo choakra (boy); he has a throne built upon bamboo poles, which is carried upon the shoulders of some twelve or sixteen men. The choakra is dressed in costly apparel, has a crown on his head, imitating gold, &c., has a bow and a number of arrows in his hands, and set upon the before-mentioned throne; they then come into the circle and advance toward the image, which is guarded by four men sword in hand; as they advance they make considerable noise, hallooing, shouting and gesticulating; as soon as the boy comes within bow shot, he commences sending his arrows at the image, the bearers walk slowly toward the god, and when they get pretty near, those four guards come out at them, apparently with all fury, and cut and slash at the bearers and boy, but of course without injuring any of them, as it is understood that the boy, or little god, conquers; the boy keeps on shooting all the time, and as soon as his arrows are all gone, or nearly so, the large fellow is conquered; the bearers then turn and carry the choakra out of the ring; then the old god is of no account, and has to be destroyed. He is first set on fire, and having a little powder here and there through him, he burns well, and all hands must stand clear, for he then, Samson-like, will show his power for once; the legs are composed of bamboos of suitable size, so as to be burnt off by the time the fire reaches the awful large head, which is filled with powder, so that it comes down and blows up all at once; and then commences the most tremendous whooping, hallooing and noise that I ever heard from the thousands of natives assembled on the occasion.

Ruins of Ancient Cities in America.

CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.

to mow this structure down, unless the changes work with or call to his aid an earthquake, he will find something for ages yet in the valley of mystery that will turn its edge. An accurate description of its construction and dimensions will be given when we shall have made a more minute examination of this most remarkable and colossal structure. Having visited the four other most prominent objects in the valley, two on the north and two on the south of this, we find a field open before us, so extensive that its very magnitude is almost discouraging. For, in addition to the seven immense structures that form the principal feature of the valley when viewed from the surrounding heights or summit of the plain, there are numberless objects of startling interest to be met with in almost any direction we choose to cut our way—broken columns of stones, obelisks, with monuments of every conceivable shape, many of them covered with hieroglyphics, some almost totally obliterated, while many remain as perfect as could be desired, fill this vale with such a complication of wonders, that to a mind desirous of knowing the whole history of its rise, its mighty and unparalleled magnificence, its final decline and total ruin, it presents so vast a field for study and contemplation, as almost to induce a wish that they were not half so numerous as they really are.

Omitting everything like a further description, without the accompanying drawings, I shall briefly say a few words in reference to the time in the early history of the world when this people had an existence. No one will dispute the existence of the Egyptian pyramids; no one will deny that, through the indefatigable labors of a Champohion, the hieroglyphics they present have been most accurately deciphered, and that what was once a mystery is now no longer such. Here, then, is the connecting link between the time of the final destruction of this people, and the characters then in use, with those that bear a date long anterior to them. Enough has already been deciphered from the pyramid of comparatively later origin, to show that it was constructed not far from thirteen hundred years before the Christian era, and contains the well connected history of at least one hundred years before and more than four hundred years subsequent to its erection; and during this period of only five hundred years there were introduced, particularly toward its close, characters utterly unknown to the Egyptian people, and yet easily understood when taken in connection with those that precede. In this way, and in connection with numerous other inscriptions upon tablets, discovered in a place that seems to have been a repository of their records, a chain of incidents identical with, and which, in fact, becomes their history, is traced down even to the second century of the Christian era, and closing with a record of events the most startling and truly terrible that ever befel any nation of intelligent, happy, but inoffensive people. But how are we to remove the stumbling block that is presented, when from our starting point we trace backward, as unequivocally as we have forward, the history of a people, who, like the Chinese, date their era long before the flood? Shall we deny the literal meaning or translation of hieroglyphics that have everywhere received the sanction of the learned? As well might we deny the existence of Na-ha-go itself, or the pyramids of the Nile. Or, must we believe a part and deny all the rest? and that part believe a mere point of time in comparison with the whole, and that only believe because we have corroborative testimony in similar structures and records in ancient Egypt. That America was peopled long anterior to the eastern continent I will not pretend to say, but will leave it for all (who feel disposed) to look at the evidences of its far higher antiquity than we shall present, and then to judge for themselves. But should a connected record of the past carry us back to the time of the creation, as recorded by Moses, and that too without meeting with a general deluge, though a plain but succinct account is given of a partial one, what is to be done? Must we throw their whole history aside as a fabrication and a lie? or may we not rather believe the whole?

Knowing, however, your partiality for, and your propensity to stand by Moses and his account of the earlier times, under all circumstances, and at all times, and before all men, it would be useless for me to try to make a convert of you until I have the papers for it; therefore, in my next that I send you, which may possibly reach you in about sixty days, I shall continue a description of the most remarkable objects that everywhere meet the eye, as day by day we continue our researches in the valley of mystery.

San Diego, California, Dec. 10, 1849.

[New York Herald.

On the West side of the Rocky Mountains, South of Santa Fe, is the location of the Navajoes, where Mr. Huntington was trading and where he discovered those curious ruins, residences, mountain fastnesses or fortifications, which were undoubtedly the abode of the Mountain or Gadianton Robbers.

By referring again to the place described by the correspondent of the Herald, we find a rich country along the borders of the Gila Mohave, Rio Virgin and other tributaries of the Colorado, the latter supposed to be some of the locations described by the Book of Mormon as the residence of the Nephites; rich, fertile, covered with cities, abounding in works of civilization, intelligence, arts, science, &c. By uniting the three testimonies we have a complete whole, and a key is found in the Book of Mormon which will solve many of the mysteries which seem to puzzle and perplex our modern antiquarians so much to decipher.

These things are strong coroborative testimony to the Saints, who while they reflect that the plates of the Book of Mormon, were discovered in the year 1827, before these late explorations, and by a young, and uneducated man, and yet the accounts in it agree so well with these modern discoveries, that it is impossible for an unprejudiced mind to doubt. And while the world reject with disdain, this only key to the mystery, the researches, travels, and discoveries being continually published abroad, afford, however unwilling and unwittingly to them, the most unqualified and indubitable evidence of its truth.

ANTIQUITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The antiquities of America extend from the eastern shores of Maine and Massachusetts to the Pacific, and from the great lakes and British dominions to Peru and La Plata, in South America; in fact, throughout the extent of both continents. Immense forests grow over the ruins of large cities, and the gigantic size of the trees, with indications that other generations of trees sprung up and grew before them, prove that the ruins were in existence before the Christian era. In every portion of the United States, interesting ruins have been discovered. In the State of New York have been found sculptured figures of one hundred animals of different species, executed in a style far superior to anything exhibited by any of the existing tribes of Indians.

The State of Ohio abounds in ruins of towers and fortifications, with extensive mounds and pyramids. At Marietta, in this State, beautiful pottery, silver and copper ornaments, and pearls of great beauty and lustre have been dug up from the earth. In the caves of Tennessee and Kentucky, mummies have been found in a high state of preservation, clothed with cloths and skins of various texture, inlaid with feathers; like discoveries have been made at Carrollton; near Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, ruins of huge fortifications appear. Similar ruins appear in the State of Missouri. On the south side of the Missouri River, in the western portion of this State, is an inclosure of some five hundred acres, which includes the ruin of a building (no doubt ancient tower) with walls 150 feet high, and 80 feet wide at the base, attached to which are a redoubt and a citadel, with work much resembling the structure of a tower in Europe. But it is in the south of Mexico that magnificent and beautiful ruins present themselves in great abundance.

UXMAL AND PALENQUE.

The most extensive ruins are to be found at Uxmal and Palenque, in the southeast of Mexico. At Uxmal are immense pyramids coated with stone, and quadrangular stone edifices and terraces. The highest of these pyramids is 130 feet, and on the summit it supports a temple; on one of the facades of the temple are four human figures, cut in stone with great exactness and elegance. The hands are crossed upon the breast, the head is covered in something like a helmet, about the neck is a garment of the skin of an aligator, and over each body is a figure of death's head and bones.

At Palenque are immense ruins, a city of great extent, with the remains of a royal palace. One temple, that of Copen, was 520 feet by 650, and supposed to have been as large as St. Peter's at Rome. Another temple of great dimensions is here, having an entrance by a portico 100 feet long and 10 feet broad; it stands on an elevation of 60 feet. The pillars of the portico are adorned with hieroglyphics and other devices. Different objects of worship have been found—representations of the gods who were worshipped in this country. These temples, with fourteen large buildings, and many other objects of curiosity, stand here as monuments of ancient greatness, to remind us of the remote origin of a mighty empire. This city has been described as the Thebes of America, and travelers have supposed that it must have been some sixty miles in circumference, and contained a population of 3,000,000 of souls.

Page 65, chap. 4th, verse 3d, Second Book Nephi. And I, Nephi, did build a temple, and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things; for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's Temple. But the manner of construction was like unto the Temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine. B. C. 554. Stevens and Catherwood say of some of the ruins discovered in Central America: "The Genii that presided at the building of Solomon's Temple, in Jerusalem, must have presided at the building of this."

Centuries must have elapsed and dynasties succeeded each other, before such orders of architecture were introduced, and a length of time must have passed before an empire would become sufficiently powerful to erect such a temple, and possess a city of such vast extent. In looking back to the past, we feel interested in the imagination that this people was once in the noon-day of glory, enjoying all the fruits and luxuries of an advanced civilization.

THE PYRAMIDS OF AMERICA.

In this country is exhibited the largest pyramid in the world, that of Cholula, near Puebla. It covers forty-four acres, and is about two hundred feet high; on its summit was a temple, and in the interior has been discovered a vault, roofed with beams of wood, containing skeletons and idols. Several smaller pyramids surround this large one. It appears to have been formed by cutting a hill into an artificial shape. Its dimensions are immense, being nearly three miles in circumference, and about four hundred feet high. It is divided into terraces and slopes, covered with platforms, stages and bastions, elevated one above the other, and all formed with large stones skilfully cut and joined without any cement.

In some respects the style of architecture resembles the Gothic, being massive and durable; in other respects it resembles the Egyptian—yet the general construction, manner and style of architecture is different from anything hitherto described in the world. As in Egypt, hyeroglyphics on stone denote remarkable events which no man has yet been able to decipher. Dark shades rest on the antiquities of America, and few rays of light enliven the gloom. We have ancient history to inform us of the events of Egypt—how that empire was founded, and how it prospered and fell. We have the same on record of Babylon and Nineveh, of Greece and Rome and Carthage; but not the least information have we relative to those who erected these cities, what people and from whence they came; not a ray of light to dispel the dark gloom which seems to rest on the early history of America. Architecture, sculpture, painting, and all the arts that adorn cizilized life, have flourished in this country, at a period far remote. There is evidence sufficient to prove that those cities were in ruins at least sixteen or eighteen hundred years ago.

In Palenque is the remains of an altar, over which grows an immense cedar, whose powerful roots enshrine it. The whole city is overgrown with mahogany and cedar trees of enormous size. The concentric circle of some of these trees—the well known cycles for a year—have been counted, which showed they were more than 800 years old, and there were indications of another generation of trees having sprung up before them. How few reflect on the fact that America is an old dominion, the seat of an ancient, mighty empire. These facts are opening themselves every day to the eye of an astonished world, and it is hoped that the spirit of inquiry, which seems at present to animate all classes of learned men, may throw more light on the early history of this remakable region.

Much more might be added, if space would permit, from the Book of Mormon, as well as extracts from the various explorations made since its publication, answering in location, appearance of ruins, surrounding scenery, &c., &c., each new discovery extending and confirming the truthfulness of the history of the ancient inhabitants of this continent contained in the Book of Mormon.

One Week Later from California by the Steamer George Law.

Another Greytown Affair Anticipated.

THE U. S. SLOOP-OF-WAR ST. MARYS UNDER ORDERS TO SAIL TO SAN JUAN.

From the Alta Californian, March 31.

We are enabled to state on reliable authority that the most serious difficulties are apprehended in relation to a controversy between our Resident Minister and the Nicaragua government, and that active measures are in preparation to redress the grievances, an account of which has been received here in dispatches from our minister.

These dispatches were addressed to Commodore Delancy, and contained a request that some Government vessel on this station should be immediately dispatched to San Juan del Sud, Nicaragua, for the protection of American residents there, and the redress of various outrages on our national flag. These dispatches were opened by Commander Farragut, who took the responsibility of doing so as the senior officer on this station.

We understand that in consequence of these dispatches, the U. S. Sloop-of-War St. Mary's is to put to sea as soon as she can be got ready, under secret orders for San Juan del Sud. We may be in the possession of further particulars within a few days, but the intelligence which we give to the public is perfectly reliable as far as it goes.

The Banking house of Page and Bacon has again resumed. There is much confidence expressed in its stability.

From the following, it would seem that the Celestials are not much better than their Terrestrial brethren:

"Sale of Female Celestials.—From the Times and Transcript we learn that the notorious Ah Toy, who has been the keeper of a house of ill-fame in San Francisco for the last three years, has left for China. She brought to this country a year ago, on her return from a visit, six or eight women, whom she had purchased at $40 each. Their passage cost them $80 each. She has from time to time sold out her stock at the rate of $1,000 to $1,500 each, to Chinese merchants and gamblers. On leaving for China, she disposed of the lot remaining at $800 each. The Times and Transcript understands from Mr. Carvalho, the Chinese interpreter, that these women dare not resist in these transactions, so much are they in dread of their tyrranical countrymen."

A prohibitory Liquor law had passed the Legislature; more rational, because less stringent than some of ours.

Mining is still the most profitable business in California.

The weather has been good, and the growing crops promise an abundant harvest.

It is supposed that there will be a reduction of fare by the steamers between here and California, how much is not stated.

Mr. Tuttle's Anti-gambling law has passed the Senate, and it is expected that the Assembly will concur in its passage. There needs some change in these matters.

A bill to provide for the survey and construction of a wagon road from the Sacramento valley to the Eastern boundary of the State, is under discussion in the Assembly. The bill appropriates $100,000 for the construction of the road.

A large Know Nothing convention was held at Sacramento. 228 delegates were present, 50 of whom came from San Francisco.

Thirty-two delegates are to be selected to attend as the representatives of the order in the Presidential Convention to be held in Memphis, Tenn., on the second Monday of April, 1856; one for every thousand.

The health of the Isthmus is good, the weather fine, and the railroad in good order, the trains running with as much regularity as upon any road in the United States.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Seven Days Later From Europe.

She brings intelligence of the adjournment of the Vienna Conference until the 9th of April, at which time it is expected the Third Point will again be taken up for discussion. There have been several fierce and bloody encounters between the French and Russians, for the rifle pits in front of the Malakoff tower; on the 14th the French drove out the Russians from the pits, when they returned in greater force and compelled the French to retire with a loss of 65 men, and again took possession of the pits. The Russian loss was probably greater.

On the night of the 15th, the French again drove the Russians out of the pits and held possession over the 16th and 17th. On the night of the 17th, at 6 1-2 o'clock the French who had retired before the fire from the batteries, marched down to reoccupy the ambuscade, but found the Russians had anticipated them. A fierce conflict immediately commenced, but the Russians being in strong force the French were again and again borne back by the weight of fire, but persevered, for four hours and a half, with a force of 5000 strong, they state their loss at 150 killed and wounded.

The Russians continue to throw up defenses from the ravines of Inkermann to the seaside south of Belbek.

Again on the night of the 18th, a strong force of the French with six field pieces, made three unsuccessful attempts to take the pits, their loss was 180.

The Russians succeeded in holding the pits, and are engaged in constructing a formidable work in the Mamelon.

Prince Gorchakoff had arrived at Bakshiserai, and had taken command of the army. Prince Menchekoff it was reported had died on his way to Moscow.

Admiral Istomin, commander of the Russian fleet has been killed.

Whether for compliment or graver policy's sake, an Austrian Archduke is, it is said, presently to make a visit to Louis Napoleon. Queen Victoria, too, is to go to Paris some time in the spring or summer; and the Elysee Napoleon, Ex-Elysee Nationale, Ex-Elysee Bourbon, has been elegantly re-arranged, and will resume its old office of Hotel Royal. It has harbored a strange variety of guests in its time, as Mistress Pompadour, Beaujon the banker, the Government printer, in '93, King Murat, the first Napoleon, Alexander of Russia, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Berri, and the Prince-President Napoleon!

It is expected Louis Napoleon will be in London with his chaplin, Father Ravignau, on the 16th.

Much insubordination is said to exist among the French soldiery.

The Baltic fleet has sailed. The Russians are prepared for them, having blocked the mouth of every harbor and distributed a force of 60,000 troops along the coast.

The Spanish Government has demanded the recall of Lord Howden. The cause is believed to be owing to a communication which his lordship addressed to the journals in opposition to the Ministerial declarations, relative to the violent measures adopted against the Protestants at Seville.

PRUSSIA.

Advices from Berlin of the 3d state that the widowed Empress of Russia is expected to arrive there before long, probably to take up her residence near her royal brother, and to strengthen the connection between the two northern courts. Prince Charles of Prussia has just left St. Petersburg, and gone to Moscow.

SARDINIA.

Accounts from Genoa, of the 27th ult., state that Carrara has been declared in a state of siege, owing to the frequent occurrence of assassinations.

FRANCE.

A decree has been signed by the Emperor, augmenting the army by 90,000 men. Each regiment of the line will be re-enforced by 900 men.

In expectation of Her Majesty Queen Victoria's visit to Paris, the Emperor has ordered the Elysee Imperial to be magnificently fitted up for her reception.

The quantity of beet-root sugar manufactured from the commencement of the season of 1854—'55 to the end of February was 41,000,000 of kilogrammes, being a decrease of 34,000,000, as compared with the corresponding period of last year. This falling off is attributed to the use of beet-root in the distilling of spirits.

TURKEY.

The Sinai brings Constantinople news of the 22d. The works for the establishment of a camp of an army of 40,000 men, which has been traced out near Constantinople, are actively going on. The Piedmontese troops, as well as the two new French regiments of Chasseurs expected from Africa, will, it is said, form part of this camp. The Egyptian division, commanded by General Menckli, which has been called for by the Allied Generals, and has been waiting for transports, was about to leave in sailing vessels towed by steamers. Brilliant preparations for the reception of the Emperor and Empress continued to be made at Constantinople. It was reported that the Sultan would accompany Louis Napoleon to the Crimea.

A slight shock of an earthquake was felt at Constantinople on the 14th. The Sultan had given 300,000 piastres to the victims of the earthquake at Broussa.

The harbor of Sebastopol is now commanded by the allied batteries, and the Russian vessels disappear. The works of attack and defense are prodigious.

Another dispatch of the same date says: The Seraskier was unwell. The latest news from the Crimea was of the 20th. Several English physicians had received orders to go to Eupatoria, to attend the Turks who were wounded in the last two fights.

The severe etiquette of the Sultans, which has already received more than one rude shock since the commencement of the present war, is destined, it seems, to experience one still more startling. Abdul-Medjid (says a letter published in the Gazette du Midi) has made up his mind to offer his arm to the Empress of the French when she arrives before the Palace of Balta Liman! to present her to the first Sultaness (there are seven who bear this title, and who take rank according to the birth of their children), whose face will be unveiled! Four young ladies, chosen from the best Armenian families, will also be placed at the disposition of the Empress as interpreters and ladies of honor. Magnificent presents, among them a side saddle adorned with precious stones, will also be offered by the Sultan to the acceptance of her Imperial Majesty.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On Wednesday the 18th, a violent storm passed over the northern part of this State, and through some part of Canada with such force, as to uproot trees, blow down houses and in one instance a railroad car was lifted up by the force of the wind, and carried some three or four rods: in some places the storm was accompanied by hailstones, as large as hen's eggs, that demolished the windows by wholesale. At Niagara the large car manufactory of Brainard, Pierce & Co. was damaged to the amount of about $20,000; the gable-end of the Scotch Presbyterian church was blown in, and the building materially injured. A daguerrian standing in the street was blown over with such force, as to injure dangerously the artist, and his little son; it is supposed that the son will not recover. Two schooners, seen off Niagara, are supposed to have foundered. At Albion it was so dark that they had to light candles to see to eat breakfast. At Newburyport, on Cauldwells wharf, a large two story building was struck by lightning, by which the building was fired, was so powerful as to effect people passing along Merrimac street near the building, so severely as to knock over several, and greatly shock others. In Charter street trees and fences were struck, and the bark taken of the trees, as high as the branches. A great many were shocked but no serious personal injury was sustained.

Riots in Chicago.—On the 21st of April a small procession of Germans and Irish passed through the streets, on their way to the court house square, preceded by a drum and fife; a crowd immediately collected, the police interfered, to stop the procedings, when a general fight ensued; during which one man was killed, and some five or six wounded. The ringleaders were taken into custody, and the excitement subsided till some time in the afternoon, when a party of armed Germans crossed the river from the north side, and marched to the court house square, which was a signal for a renewal of hostilities; in the row one policeman and two Germans were killed, and a number on both sides wounded. A special military force of five hundred has been organized, and considerable excitement still prevailed on the 23d.

Railroad Accident.—Baltimore, April 23, 1855.—The 11 o'clock train from this city for Philadelphia was precipitated into Gunpowder Creek, by the breaking of a portion of the bridge. None of the passengers were seriously injured.

A most disastrous explosion of the steam boiler of the propeller Oregon took place near Detroit on Friday, killing ten persons, and wounding several others.

School Struck by Lightning—Four Boys Killed.—Albany, April 23, 1855.—At Arcadia, Madison County, Missouri, on the 17th inst., during a severe storm, the Arcadia High School was struck by lightning, and four boys, pupils, who were in the building burned to death. One of the boys was the son of F. L. Ridgeley, Esq., of St. Louis.

The Nunnery Difficulty in Massachusetts.—Boston, April 23, 1855.—Mr. Joseph Hiss, member from Boston, resigned his seat in the House of Representatives to-day, on account of the difficulties growing out of the Nunnery investigation. His letter of resignation was referred to a committee.

Steamer Destroyed by Fire.—Louisville, April 23, 1855.—The steamer William Knox, bound to the Upper Mississippi, was burned yesterday, about one hundred miles below this place. No lives were lost. The hull sunk, and everything was lost, including the books, money, and baggage. The boat was insured.

The Ohio River.—Pittsburgh, April 23, 1855.—The water in the channel of the river at this point is ten feet deep and is falling. The weather is warm and close.

A law against concealed weapons has just been passed by the Legislature of Louisiana. The penalty is a fine, ranging from $250 to $1,000 or imprisonment, ranging from one month to three months.

Barnum is now plowing with an elephant. The Bridgeport Farmer has seen him at it. The huge fellow was put to a plow in a field of green sward, west of Iranistan, and walked off with it, at the bidding of his keeper, as easily as a yoke of oxen would draw an empty cart.

Cuba.

It is reported that the government of Spain had issued a decree, to arrest every American without distinction on the Island, not even excepting the United States Consul.

New Orleans, April 18, 1855. The Black Warrior has arrived, bringing dates from Havana to the 15th. It seems that Dr. Peck was arrested by mistake. Passengers by the Black Warrior state that sixteen companies of mulattoes were being organised at Havana.

The sloop-of-war Jamestown was passed by the Black Warrior off Moro Castle.

List of Passengers shipped on board the "Juventa," for Philadelphia, by F. D. Richards, Liverpool, February 31, 1855.

Disastrous Inundation in Germany—a Call for Relief.—Accounts from Dantzic, Prussia, state that the breaking up of the ice on the Vistula has swept away the dykes, and four hundred miles of fertile plains have been submerged. One hundred human bodies have been recovered near Tiegenhoff. The misery and destitution caused by this calamity are very great. Those who have escaped from the fierce torrent have saved nothing but their lives. Parents have lost their children; children are left without their natural protectors. In this emergency a call is made for relief upon the Germans of New York, many of whom are amply able to respond to it. Contributions may be sent to No. 133 Nassau street, or to box 4,001 Post Office.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privi ege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Arrive at Tooele City by 5 p. m.

NOTES.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained, three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connection with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one-fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained by certificates of postmasters, or the affidavits of other creditable persons, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office, for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract; for disobeying the Post Office laws or instructions of the Department, or for assigning the contract without the assent of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General may alter the schedule. He may also order an increase of service on a route by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay. He may also curtail or discontinue the service, at pro rata decrease of pay, if he allow one month's extra compensation on the amount dispensed with. No extra pay will be allowed for excess of actual over advertised distance, if the points to be supplied are herein correctly stated. The bids should be addressed to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, superscribed "Mail proposals in the Territory of Utah." The contracts are to be executed and returned to the Department by or before the 1st day of September, 1855. For further particulars as to conditions to be incorporated in the contracts, see advertisement for California, Oregon, Utah, &c., dated 13th October, 1853.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

For the Mormon.

MORMON.

They call me a Mormon; well, what if I am?
I'm a freeman by birth, and have right to the name;
I've obey'd the requirements the Bible enjoin,
And the fruits of obedience most surely are mine.

GENTILE.

They say that the Mormons are blockheads and fools,
Knaves, scapegraces, rascals, or pliable tools;
Obscene and corrupted in body and mind;
Rakes, hypocrites, rascals, the scum of mankind.

MORMON.

If They is a personage honest and true,
Attend to what they said when They was a Jew:
They said that our Saviour was born of ill-fame;
They declared that opprobrium attached to his name;
They proclaimed all the good works he did as an evil,
And ascribed all his power to the aid of the devil.
They said his disciples were impious and mad;
Stirrers up of sedition, blasphemers and bad.
They whipp'd, ston'd, and scourged them, and put them to death;
They were banish'd and martyr'd because of their faith.
If They as a Jew ascribed good to the devil,
They Gentiles may also make righteousness evil.

GENTILE.

But you don't rank yourselves with the Christians of old!
You surely don't think you're of their flock or fold;
What a Mormon, a Christian? Polygamist, too!
Now don't say any more—hold up—that will do.

MORMON.

I believe in the Bible, and what more did they?
And I practice its precepts—can you as much say?
Polygamist? Yes. Would you charge God with evil,
And send the old patriarchs all to the devil?
You may cleave to your priestcraft, and whoredoms, and vice;
With a sanctified face in oppression rejoice;
Like the Jews, you may call every virtue an evil,
And ascribe the pure gospel of grace to the devil.
I am reaching a higher, a holier aim;
I aspire to a nobler, more durable fame;
My ambition is this, that to me may be given,
To follow the Prophets and Jesus to Heaven. T.

DISCOURSE

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, February 18th, 1855.

READ BY ELDER THOMAS BULLOCK.

BRETHREN, SISTERS AND FRIENDS:

We are a people believing in the providences of God, and acknowledging his hand, in his dealings with us, from day to day.

We are a people whose rise, and progress from the beginning, has been the work of God our Heavenly Father, which in his wisdom he has seen proper to commence, for the re-establishment of his kingdom upon the earth.

Still further, we believe that the Lord has been preparing that, when he should bring forth his work, that when the set time should fully come, there might be a place upon his footstool where sufficient liberty of conscience should exist, that his saints might dwell in peace under the broad panoply of constitutional law and equal rights. In this view we consider that the men of the Revolution were inspired by the Almighty to throw off the shackles of the mother government, with her established religion. For this cause were Adams, Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, and a host of others inspired to deeds of resistance to the acts of the King of Great Britain, who might also have been led to those aggressive acts, for aught we know, to bring to pass the purposes of God in thus establishing a new government, upon a principle of greater freedom, a basis of self-government allowing the free exercise of religious worship.

It was the voice of the Lord inspiring all those worthy men who bore influence in those trying times, not only to go forth in battle, but to exercise wisdom in council, fortitude, courage and endurance in the tented field, as well as subsequently to form and adopt those wise and efficient measures which secured to themselves and succeeding generations the blessing of a free and independent government.

This government, so formed, has been blessed by the Almighty until she spreads her sails in every sea, and her power is felt in every land.

The American Government is second to none in the world in influence and power, and far before all others in liberal and free institutions. Under its benign influence the poor, down-trodden masses of the old world can find an asylum where they can enjoy the blessings of peace and freedom, no matter to what caste or religious sect they belong, or are disposed to favor, or whether they are disposed to favor any, or none at all. It was in this government, formed by men inspired of God, although at the time they knew it not, after it was firmly established in the seat of power and influence, where liberty of conscience and the free exercise of religious worship were a fundamental principle guaranteed in the Constitution, and interwoven with all the feelings, traditions and sympathies of the people, that the Lord sent forth his angel to reveal the truths of heaven as in times past, even as in ancient days. This should have been hailed as the greatest blessing which could have been bestowed upon any nation, kindred, tongue, or people. It should have been received with hearts of gratitude and gladness, praise and thanksgiving.

But as it was in the days of our Saviour, so was it in the advent of this new dispensation. It was not in accordance with the notions, traditions and preconceived ideas of the American people. The messenger did not come to an eminent divine of any of the so-called orthodoxy—he did not adopt their interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. The Lord did not come with the armies of heaven, in power and great glory, nor send his messengers panoplied with aught else than the truth of heaven, to communicate to the meek, the lowly, the youth of humble origin, the sincere inquirer after the knowledge of God. But he did send his angel to this same obscure person, Joseph Smith, Jr., who afterwards became a Prophet, Seer and Revelator, and informed him that he should not join any of the religious sects of the day, for they were all wrong; that they were following the precepts of men instead of the Lord Jesus; that he had a work for him to perform, inasmuch as he should prove faithful before him.

No sooner was this made known and published abroad, and people began to listen and obey the heavenly summons, than opposition began to rage, and the people, even in this favored land, began to persecute their neighbors and friends for entertaining religious opinions differing from their own.

I pause now to ask, had not Joseph Smith a right to promulgate and establish a different, a new religion and form of worship in this government? Every one must admit he had. This right was always held sacred, for upon it was based the religious liberty of every citizen of the Republic. It was a privilege held sacred in the bosom of every class of people; no judge dared invade its holy precincts; no legislator nor governor ventured to obstruct the free exercise thereof. How then should it be esteemed an object worthy of persecution that Joseph Smith, the man called of God to perform a work in restoring the gospel of salvation unto the children of men and his followers, true believers in his divine mission, should attempt to exercise the same privilege held sacred by all others, of every name, nature and description, and equally so by them? Why should he and his followers be debarred the privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of their consciences? Legally they cannot, and I will further state, that legally they have not. No! whenever the iron hand of oppression and persecution has fallen upon this people, our opposers have broken their own laws, set at defiance and trampled under foot every principle of equal rights, justice and liberty found written in that rich legacy of our fathers, THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Whenever popular fury has been directed against us, no power in the government has been found potent enough to afford protection, and, what is still more astonishing, honorable enough to yield redress, nor has any effort succeeded in bringing to justice those individuals who had perpetrated such fearful crimes. No! The murderer, the assassin, the mid-day plunderer and highway robber roam unmolested, and mingle unquestioned in the society of the rulers of the land; they pass and repass as current coin, producing no jar in the sensibilities of refinement—no odium in the atmosphere in which they move.

I ask you, friends, how is this? Are not our religious sentiments as sacred to us as to any other portion of the community? And should it not be the duty, as well as the pride, of every American citizen to extend that provision of the Constitution to us which he claims for himself? And is not that sacred instrument invaded and broken as much in debarring and excluding this people from its privileges, rights and blessings, as it would be if your rights and privileges were thus invaded? No, gentlemen, we have broken no laws; our glorious Constitution guarantees unto us all that we claim. Under its broad folds, in its obvious meaning and intents, we are safe, and can always rejoice in peace. All that we have ever claimed, or wish to, on the part of the government, is the just administration of the powers and privileges of the National Compact.

It is not our acts, neither our intentions, that the people or the government are afraid or complain of; but their own evil surmisings concerning us.

In our first settlement in Missouri, it was said by our enemies that we intended to tamper with the slaves, not that we had any idea of the kind, for such a thing never entered our minds. We knew that the children of Ham were to be the "servants of servants," and no power under heaven could hinder it, so long as the Lord should permit them to welter under the curse, and those were known to be our religious views concerning them. Yet the misrepresentation of our enemies found willing ears in those prejudiced against us, and we were driven from our homes in consequence of the fears of the people, and the prejudice which had been raised against us in consequence thereof.

Again, in Missouri, in the early part of our history, the fears of the people and government were aroused, because they, not we, said that it was our intention to tamper with the Indians, therefore we must not be allowed to exist in their vicinity; and again the alarm was sounded, and we were driven from our homes, plundered, mobbed, some killed, and all this not for any crime which we had committed, but for fear we might commit one.

Again, it was industriously circulated that we were going to declare our "independence," not that we had or intended to do so absurd a thing; yet anything, no matter how absurd, seemed sufficient excuse to startle the fears of the community, and they began to drive, plunder, rob, burn our houses and lay waste our fields, and this was called "Mormon disturbances," and the aid of the government was invoked to quell "Mormon insurrection," "Mormon troubles," and "Turbulent Mormons." And although it was found necessary, as they state, to drive us from Missouri and the frontiers, to prevent us from tampering with the slaves and Indians, yet it was found equally necessary, ten years afterwards, when we were a hundred to one at that time, to drive us from Nauvoo into the very midst of the Indians, as unworthy of any other society.

Fears of what we might do with the Indians had by this time subsided, and fears of something else that we might hereafter do, if left to remain in peace, and a desire to plunder accomplished our exodus from Illinois. Perhaps, however, in this last case our enemies might have entertained some fears that, if we were permitted to remain unmolested, the blood-thirsty assassins who killed our Beloved Prophet and Patriarch, Joseph and Hyrum, who were inhumanly massacred while reposing under the pledged faith of the State for their protection and safety, might not be permitted to remain undisturbed in their guilt.

As in the case of the Indians upon the frontier, this also was a false conclusion, for if ever a people would have been justified in redressing their own wrongs, and could have done so with impunity, it was at the time of this horrible murder. But they proved to the world, by their quiet and peaceable demeanor, that they had no such intention, but this was forgotten, and in less than a year and a half we were again assailed, our houses and grain stacks burned, and our brethren shot down in the glare of the light thereof, while attempting to save a pittance to drive starvation not from the doors, nor the tents, for there were none of either, but from the famishing hearts of their social circle—of their wives and children.

And again was the aid of the government invoked to quell the so-called "Mormon disturbances," and still we see the newspapers teeming with these and the like epithets, "Turbulent Mormons," "What shall be done with these turbulent Mormons?" is the cry from one end of the Union to the other. In the name of Heaven, what have we done to excite the fears of any people or government, that the sound of war and blood must eternally be kept ringing in our ears? I answer, nothing. It is the same as before, in the case of tampering with the slaves and Indians, a certain fearfulness that if we are not looked to, driven, plundered of our homes and possessions, slain and massacred as before, that we may do something, they have not yet, to my knowledge, defined precisely what.

Have not this people invariably evinced their friendly feelings, disposition and patriotism toward the government by every act and proof which can be given by any people?

Permit me to draw your attention, for a moment, to a few facts in relation to raising the battalion for the Mexican war. When the storm cloud of persecution lowered down upon us on every side, when every avenue was closed against us, our leaders treacherously betrayed and slain by the authorities of the government in which we lived, and no hope of relief could penetrate through the thick darkness and gloom which surrounded us on every side, no voice was raised in our behalf, and the General Government was silent to our appeals. When we had been insulted and abused all the day long by those in authority requiring us to give up our arms, and by every other act of insult and abuse which the prolific imagination of our enemies could devise to test, as they said, our patriotism, which requisitions, be it known, were always complied with on our part; and when we were finally compelled to flee for the preservation of our lives and the lives of our wives and children, to the wilderness, I ask had we not reason to feel that our enemies were in the ascendant? That even the government, by their silent acquiescence, were also in favor of our destruction? Had we not, I ask, some reason to consider them all, both the people and the government, alike our enemies?

And when, in addition to all this, and while fleeing from our enemies, another test of fidelity and patriotism was contrived by them for our destruction, and acquiesced in by the government (through the agency of a distinguished politician, who evidently sought and thought he had planned our overthrow and total annihilation), consisting of a requisition from the War Department to furnish a battalion of five hundred men to fight under their officers, and for them, in the war then existing with Mexico, I ask again, could we refrain from considering both people and government our most deadly foes? Look a moment at our situation, and the circumstances under which the requisition was made. We were migrating, we knew not whither, except that it was our intention to go beyond the reach of our enemies. We had no homes, save our wagons and tents, and no stores of provisions and clothing; but had to earn our daily bread by leaving our families in isolated locations for safety, and going among our enemies to labor. Were we not, even before this cruel requisition was made, unmercifully borne down by oppression and persecution past endurance by any other community? But under these trying circumstances we were required to turn out of our traveling camps five hundred of our most efficient men, leaving the old, the young, the women, upon the hands of the residue to take care of and support; and in case we refused to comply with so unreasonable a requirement, we were to be deemed enemies to the government, and fit only for the slaughter.

Look also at the proportion of the number required of us, compared with that of any other portion of the Republic. A requisition of only thirty thousand from a population of more than twenty millions was all that was wanted, and more than was furnished, amounting to only one person and a half to a thousand inhabitants. If all other circumstances had been equal, if we could have left our families in the enjoyment of peace, quietness and security in the houses from which we had been driven, our quota of an equitable requisition would not have exceeded four persons. Instead of this, five hundred must go, thirteen thousand per cent. above an equal ratio, even if all other things had been equal, but under the peculiar circumstances in which it was made comparison fails to demonstrate and reason itself totters beneath its enormity. And for whom were we to fight? As I have already shown, for those that we had every reason to believe were our most deadly foes. Could the government have expected our compliance therewith? Did they expect it? Did not our enemies believe that we would spurn, with becoming resentment and indignation, such an unhallowed proposition? And were they not prepared to make our rejection of it a pretext to inflame the government still more against us, and thereby accomplish their hellish purposes upon an innocent people, in their utter extinction? And how was this proposition received, and how was it responded to by this people? I went myself, in company with a few of my brethren, between one and two hundred miles along the several routes of travel, stopping at every little camp, using our influence to obtain volunteers, and on the day appointed for the rendezvous the required complement was made up; and this was all accomplished in about twenty days from the time that the requisition was made known.

Our battalion went to the scene of action, not in easy berths on steamboats, nor with a few months absence, but on foot over two thousand miles across trackless deserts and barren plains, experiencing every degree of privation, hardship and suffering during some two years absence before they could rejoin their families. Thus was our deliverance again effected by the interposition of that All-Wise Being who can discern the end from the beginning, and overrule the wicked intentions of men, to promote the advancement of his cause upon the earth. Thus were we saved from our enemies by complying with their, as hitherto, unjust and unparalleled exactions; again proving our loyalty to the government.

Here permit me to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of Captain Allen, the bearer of this requisition from the government. He was a gentleman full of humane feelings, and, had he been spared, would have smoothed the path and made easy the performance of this duty, so far as laid in his power. His heart was wrung with sympathy when he saw our situation, and filled with wonder when he witnessed the enthusiastic patriotism and ardor which so promptly complied with his requirement. Again proving, as we had hundreds of times before proved by our acts, that we were belied by our enemies; and that we were as ready, and even more so than any other inhabitants of the Republic, to shoulder the musket, and go forth to fight the battles of our common country, or stand in her defence. History furnishes no parallel either of the severity and injustice of the demand, or in the alacrity, faithfulness and patriotism with which it was answered and complied with. Thus can we cite instance after instance of persons, holding legal authority, being moved upon, through the misrepresentation and influence of our enemies, to insult us as a people by requiring a test of our patriotism. How long must this state of things continue? So long as the people choose to remain in wilful ignorance with regard to us; so long as they choose to misinterpret our views, misrepresent our feelings, and misunderstand our policy.

To accuse us of being unfriendly to the government, is to accuse us of hostility to our religion, for no item of inspiration is held more sacred with us than the Constitution under which she acts. As a religious society, we, in common with all other denominations, claim its protection; whether our people are located in the other States, or Territories, as thousands of them are, or in this Territory, it is held as a shield to protect the dearest boon of which man is susceptible, his religious views and sentiments.

The government of the United States has never engaged in a crusade against us as a people, although she has remained silent, or refused us, when appealed to for redress of grievances. She has permitted us to be driven from our own lands, for which she had taken our money, and that too with her letters patent in our hands, guaranteeing to us peaceable possession. She has calmly looked on and permitted one of the fundamental and dearest provisions of the Constitution to be broken; she has permitted us to be driven and trampled under foot with impunity. Under these circumstances, what course is left for us to pursue? I answer that, instead of seeking to destroy the very best government in the world, as seems to be the fear of some, we, like all other good citizens, should seek to place those men in power who will feel the obligations and responsibilities they are under to a mighty people; who would feel and realize the important trusts reposed in them by the voice of the people who call them to administer law under the solemn sanction of an oath of fidelity to that heaven-inspired instrument, to the inviolate preservation of which we look for the perpetuity of our free institutions.

It should be the aim of all good citizens, and it is our intention and design as a people, to promote virtue, intelligence and patriotism; and when any person seeks to invade our virtue by sowing the seeds of corruption and vice, and when rebuked therefor, assails our rights and patriotism, as has universally heretofore been done, he exhibits, before this people, his own depraved heart. Should not those persons who are appointed to administer law, observe it themselves? Should not those officers who have been sent among us by the United States be an example in point of morality, virtue and good behavior, and do honor to those laws which they came here to execute and administer? And shall they so far forget themselves as to spend their time in licentiousness, gambling, and seducing the innocent and unsuspecting, and in a variety of ways sow the seeds of sin and immorality with impunity, and no man dare utter his protest? I tell you nay. With me, with this people you will have war, if needs be, upon this principle. It is incumbent upon us to use our influence for the preservation of ourselves, our wives, our children, our brethren, our sisters, and all of our society, from the contaminating influence of vice, sin, immorality and iniquity, let it emanate from where it will. If it exists in high places, so much the more need of rebuking it, for from thence it will do the most harm.

I claim this as a right, as a constitutional right; I believe it is legal to exercise all the power and influence which God has given me, for the preservation of virtue, truth and holiness; and because we feel sensitive upon points such as these, should it be construed that we are enemies to the Federal Government? Our history proves that for such things we have been persecuted even unto death, but this deters me not. I would rather have God my friend, and all the world enemies, than be a friend with the world and have God my enemy; and in this view of the case the government should also be our friends, for assuredly in the preservation of virtue, morality and intelligence, she may look for the perpetuity of her free institutions and the preservation of her liberty. And in the moment of her disregard of these principles, when wickedness and sin can run riot with impunity, and not moral influence and force enough be found in the people to check it, and walk it under foot, then may she reckon on a speedy downfall. When moral obligations cease to exert an influence, and virtue hides its face, and the unblushing effrontery of sin and foul corruption takes its place, then may the nation consider there is danger. "When the wicked rule the people mourn."

This then is our position toward the Government of the United States, and toward the world, to put down iniquity and exalt virtue; to declare the word of God which he revealed unto us, and build up his Kingdom upon the earth. And know all men, governments, nations, kindreds, tongues and people, that this is our calling, intention and design. We aim to live our religion, and have communion with our God. We aim to clear our skirts of the blood of this generation by our faithfulness in preaching the truth of heaven in all plainness and simplicity; and I have often said, and repeat it now, that all other considerations, of whatever name or nature, sink into insignificancy in comparison with this. To serve God, and keep his commandments, are first and foremost with me. If this is higher law, so be it. As it is with me, so should it be with every department of the government; for this doctrine is based upon the principles of virtue and integrity; with it the government, her Constitution and free institutions, are safe; without it, no power can avert their speedy destruction. It is the life-giving power to the government; it is the vital element on which she exists and prospers; in its absence she sinks to rise no more.

We now proceed to discuss the question, does our faith and practice—our holy religion, as we hold and believe it—come within the purview of the Constitution; or, in other words, is it a religious question over which the Constitution throws its protecting shield? It reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Ours is peculiarly a religious establishment; in it are centered all our hopes of salvation, honor, glory and exaltation. In it we find our hopes of a resurrection, and of a life of immortality in another state of existence. By it we are actuated in all our business of life, through its influence we have preserved virtue, established truth, and been enabled to endure persecution. By its influence we have surmounted the difficulties of a banishment from the abodes of civilization and this world's enlightenment, and established ourselves in these distant vales, where, until we came hither, there was nothing, either in soil, climate, or productions, to attract the notice of even the adventurous and enterprising; in a country which offered no inducements worthy of consideration to any people but us. And why to us as a people? Because here, far distant from any white settlements, upon a piece of earth not valuable for its facilities either for cultivation, navigation, or commerce, where the whole face of the country presented the most barren and forbidding aspect, we considered we might live and enjoy our religion unmolested, and be free from the meddlesome interference of any person. If our principles and religion were obnoxious to any, they were relieved from our presence, unless they chose to follow us.

If the people of the United States do not like our religious institutions, they are not compelled to mix in our society, or associate with us, or with our children. There is nothing here to tempt their cupidity, their avarice, or their lust. Then let them remain at home, or if they wish to roam in quest of new locations, there are none less desirable than this, for any other purpose than the one for which we have selected it, not for its intrinsic value in a pecuniary point of view, but in order that we might enjoy our religion in peace, preserve our youth in virtue, and be freed from the insults, abuse and persecution of our enemies.

Why should we have enemies? Why is it, say our objectors, that you cannot mingle and mix in society like other religious denominations? It has been seen that the people would not permit us to dwell in their midst in peace. We have been universally driven by illegal force, by mobs, murderers and assassins, as unworthy of having a place among the abodes of civilized man, until, as a last resort, we found peace in these distant valleys. It is because our religion is the only true one. It is because we have the only true authority, upon the face of the whole earth, to administer in the ordinances of the gospel. It is because the keys of this dispensation were committed by messengers sent from the Celestial world unto Joseph Smith, and are now held on the earth by this people. It is because Christ and Lucifer are enemies, and cannot be made friends; and Lucifer, knowing that we have this priesthood, this power, this authority, seeks our overthrow.

I am aware that these answers involve the truth of our principles, the divine appointment of Joseph Smith, the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, &c.; but this subject I leave for your consideration and investigation, with this simple declaration, that whether our religion is believed by any other people or not, it is by us, and no power or authority in the government can lawfully or righteously molest us in the peaceable and quiet enjoyment thereof. It cannot be done without law, and surely the government have no right to make any law concerning it, or to prevent the free exercise thereof.

Why should tests of patriotism to the government be required of this people, more than of any other community in the States and Territories? Would it not be considered insulting and abusive in the highest degree, by any other community in the government, to be thus subjected and humiliated? Cannot the people and government perceive in us, as a people, industry, sobriety, order, and well-regulated society; also a general diffusion of knowledge and dissemination of moral principle? And do they not know that these are the unmistakable signs and fruits of virtue, truth, love of our country, and high regard for her institutions? And do not such views, feelings, practices and principles emanate from a pure and undefiled religion, a high sense of faith, practice and obligation unto Christ our Lord, and his revealed will unto us?

Does our doctrine, containing such views, sentiments and practices, and exercising so genial an influence upon society; or, in other words, does our religion disqualify us from being faithful, good and patriotic citizens of the American government? Have the American people so far gone astray, and wandered from the light and power of the Gospel, that they cannot understand, recognize and appreciate the savory element of religious influence, high tone of morality, and exemplary practice of virtuous and holy principles? If so, then indeed have the degenerate sons of worthy and patriotic sires well nigh spent their substance, and are preparing to subsist on husks, with swine. If so, then does the moral dearth well nigh betoken a famine far exceeding the scorching drought, wasting pestilence and direful calamities of 1854. If so, then will the government, like the storm-driven barque, soon dash to atoms, having neither rudder to guide nor calibre to withstand the angry surging of the tempestuous waves.

In the sincere observances of the principles of true religion and virtue, we recognize the base, the only sure foundation of enlightened society and well-established government. In truth, and by virtue of divine appointment, we combat error, and seek to rend asunder the veil of darkness enveloping the human race.

In the progress of the age in which we live, we discern the fulfillment of prophecy, and the preparation for the second coming of our Lord and Saviour to dwell upon the earth. We expect that the refuge of lies will be swept away, and that city, nation, government, or kingdom which serves not God, and gives no heed to the principles of truth and religion, will be utterly wasted away and destroyed.

The word has gone forth from the Almighty, and will not return unto him void. It becomes us, therefore, one and all, to have on our wedding garments, to have our lamps trimmed and burning, well filled with oil, lest we also be taken unawares, and share the fate of the foolish virgins.

May the Lord bless us with the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, that our minds may be enlightened, our understandings enlarged and strengthened; and may his grace, wisdom and intelligence be given unto us for our preservation and sanctification according to our day and generation, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

AN ORIGINAL ANECDOTE.—Some years ago a young Methodist parson, who had just taken to himself a better-half, feeling anxious that the whole world and "the rest of mankind" should know it, and that quick, was publishing it as he went, after the following manner: "Good morning:—I am married!"

Meeting with a Mr. B—, a shrewd Irishman, the parson hardly passed the usual salutation, when, almost involuntarily he exclaimed: "I am married!"—"Faith! and are ye married, then, parson H—!" inquired the Irishman.—"Indade and ye met with good luck for once. And whom did ye marry!" "O, I married one of the Lord's children," was the grave reply. "And did ye, now! I congratulate ye on marrying into a good family; but, poor man, I fear ye will never get to see your Father-in-law!"

The London Times on the Aristocracy.

THE revolutions of 1848, and the crimes, miseries, and absurdities to which they gave rise, had produced a reaction against liberal sympathies and opinions, and a tendency to submit without inquiry to whatever authorities might be placed over us. The election of 1852 was a struggle for a principle virtually condemned already, and practically obsolete, and the nation only sought to strengthen the hands of those in whose adhesion to free trade they felt entire confidence. From different circumstances it came to pass that at no period since the reform bill had the aristocratic families obtained so firm a hold on office, place, and patronage as in the commencement of the year 1854. They had conducted our business for many years, without any extraordinary miscarriage, or misfortune, and we were content to leave them in the field of politics as their peculiar vocation and monopoly.

But war has always been noted as an unsparing innovator, the destroyer of conventional respectabilities, and the overthrower of all manner of snug and comfortable cliques and coteries. The experience of the last few months has awakened the people of England from their dreams of wealth and prosperity, from their traditional self gratulations over the naval and military exploits of the late war, and from the supposition that men invested with high rank and with great office are possessed of faculties equal to the direction of our affairs whenever there is more than an ordinary strain on the vessel of the state.

Our eyes are open, and we behold that we are naked. We ask for talent sufficient to conduct great affairs to successful conclusions, and instead of talent we are offered titles and pedigrees. We ask for merit, and we are offered in exchange high connexions, or, at best, seniority. The cold shade of aristocracy is over us all, and nothing can grow beneath it except the offshots of the tree itself.

Up to the middle of November this country believed itself to have armies, generals, statesmen, departments, all equal to their several duties, all of the very best the world could afford, and now, in the middle of February, in three short months, all is changed, or rather all is reversed. We have awoke from our dream of hope, prosperity, and success, to disaster and dismay. Our generals have turned out worse than useless, our Ministers something more than incapable, every public department has been crushed into hopeless imbecility by the weight of unbending routine and worthless formalities, and on no one occasion that we are aware of has the right man been selected to fill the right place. Everything has been mismanaged to a degree which, if predicted, would have been deemed incredible; yet, so far as the public are aware, no single official has yet been recalled, and, after a week's interregnum, Government has been reconstituted and strengthened only by the omission of three of its leading members, and the promotion of one who is at least guilty as any of those omitted.

We have been ready to allow place and patronage to be monopolized by a few great families. We have been content to live in our own country, strangers to our own Government, excluded from the working of our own institutions, but it was only on condition that our national pride should be respected, and our interest and position in the great family of nations remain inviolate. This our aristocracy have failed to secure to us, and therefore the people of England will, we hope, demand, in no spirit of wild and theoretical levelling, in no spirit of hatred or animosity to any portion of the community, but in the spirit of practical reform of an urgent and intolerable grievance, that the system which excludes plebeian talent from high office shall henceforth be discontinued, and that in the army, at the desk, and in the council, those men shall be called to the public service who are best able to serve the public. We wish all success to this movement.

It has been our painful lot to witness more nearly than others, and to obtain more ample information as to the manner in which this war has been conducted, and we do not hesitate to express the opinion that without an entire change of system, a substitution of youth and energy for age and decrepitude—unless some plan be hit upon by which merit shall be the only criterion in the filling up of civil and military offices—without, in fact, a complete abandonment of the claims of wealth, of family, and of interest, in favor of that higher nobility which the hand of God has impressed on the forehead of every man of talent, it is vain for us to continue the present contest, and better to accept any conditions, however degrading and however humiliating, since no degradation and no humiliation at the hands of the enemy can exceed those which our own servility and meanness have inflicted, and are about to inflict, upon ourselves.

Our Silver Coinage.

The silver contained in the gold from California is not included in the statement made by the United States Mint, of the amount of the gold deposites from the State. It is separated from the gold in preparing the latter for coinage or for manufacturing fine bars. The value of the silver thus parted from the gold during the year was $328,198.83. This does not include the amount of silver purchased for coinage pursuant to the act of March 3, 1853. During the last year the sum purchased was $5,494,839.92, and the silver coins issued amounted to $8,619,270. The sum issued of silver coins at the reduced standard weight, authorized by the act, before mentioned, is as follows: in 1853, $8,654,161; in 1854, $8,619,270; making a total of $17,273,431 of the half dollar and lower denominations struck, distributed and put into circulation, except the the sum of $584,898.33 in the treasury of the mint and ready for distribution and circulation.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1855.

The Mormons.

The other side of the Story.

We feel a kind of reverence, almost amounting to awe, for the man, and he an editor too, that dares to venture out in the face of popular prejudice, and give "the other side of the story."

It is so unpopular for editors to venture an expression in the least favorable to the Mormons that when he does, we feel a strong inclination to take off our hat to him. But how many mean, dastardly, bigoted, contemptible, unprincipled, selfish, conceited and ignorant weathercocks, or turkey buzzards, there are called editors, that will gather up all the carrion, every festering, putrid production of their own, or some other corrupt minds against the Mormons, simply that, for some cause they are not popular. They will catch hold of every trifling story, every absurdity from every blackguard, no matter how improbable, or inconsistant, it's enough if it suits the popular palate—like the alligators upon the banks of the Mississippi, with their jaws wide apart, everything goes down for flies, if it is a toad or brickbat, down it goes; so with our honorable editors: no matter about common sense, the public maw is open for more—no matter, toss it down, they'll never know the difference. In this way will many of these gentlemen administer to the public: Mormon outrage! War in Utah! Rebellion of the Mormons! Dreadful corruptions and horrid sensuality of the people! But let there be contradictory reports—let there be accounts of the peace, good morals, good order and loyalty of the people of Utah, nobility, disinterested generosity of Brigham Young, or kindness and attention of the people of this Territory to strangers, and lo, there is a silence in all Babylon, not a voice to be heard in the stillness, until the hue and cry arises, "great is the goddess Diana of the Ephesians."

No matter how well authenticated the favorable report may come, though it may be by a Steptoe, on whom every eye has been turned, expecting him to rend the veil, or by the Chief Justice, sent out also by the general government, though an angel from Heaven came into their midst, and bring the truth about the Mormons, these noble minded editors have not a word to say.

There are, however, some exceptions to this, and as we before said, we feel like touching our hat, and giving them a cordial grasp of the hand, we don't care whether he be Jew or Gentile, bond or free, Russ' or Turk, Catholic, Presbyterian or Infidel, if he be but bold enough to speak the truth fearlessly: we want nothing more—"Let all be shaken that can be shaken."

Gentlemen—Free trade and Sailors' rights. We give the following from the Washington Sentinel of April 27th:

One of our exchanges extracts from the Deseret News of February 8th, the following relative to the condition of society in the Territory of Utah:

At a re-union of the members of the Assembly at the dwelling of Hon. A. W. Babbitt, the Chief Justice appointed by President Pierce, the Hon. John F. Kinney spoke as follows:

"I do not rise to tell a story, to offer a toast, or propose a conundrum, but to express my feelings. I have watched the doings of the Legislative Assembly during the past session. I see you have adopted the wise policy of enacting few and simple laws. Those governments are accounted the most wise which have enacted the fewest and simplest laws. You do not wish to rule your people by law; you try to rule them by love. I speak this not merely to eulogise Gov. Young, or his council. Everything in this valley bespeaks the enterprise, the industry, the refinement, and the intelligence of this people. Your fine settlements, unsurpassed in loveliness and beauty, your public buildings, your machinery, and the union and good feeling pervading throughout your Territory, are all monuments of the wisdom and power that influence and control every department. No stranger coming into this Territory but will be struck at the luxury, magnificence, symmetry, and ingenuity that exists throughout this valley.

"I was one of the Judges of the Supreme Court in Iowa for seven years; my salary was $1,000 per year; the salary of Chief Justice in Utah was then $1,800. I had a delightful home in Iowa, as many of you have here. My appointment to Utah was soon rumored, and my friends, the members of the bar, reasoned with me on the propriety of leaving Iowa; my post was flooded with letters from my friends on the subject; my old friend in New York, with whom I studied law for years, informed me that I could not live here and discharge the official duties assigned me. If I examine my own feelings in relation to coming to this place, I was actuated by one feeling, which was to show to the world the slanders that had been heaped upon the people, than by any other motives. It could not be for wealth or honor. I have a wife and five children, one daughter grown to womanhood; and I can say there is less immorality, less drunkenness, and less licentiousness here, than anywhere I have ever been. I turned my back on the advice of my friends; I have never regretted the step I took. They tried to stay my family, but I controlled them enough; I left it to their choice to come or stay. If you call this a compliment to your Territory, you are welcome to it, and I am proud of it."

State of Affairs in Kansas.

The reception of Governor Reeder, of the Territory of Kansas, by his friends of all parties, on his return temporarily to Easton, Pennsylvania, has resulted in the confirmation of a revolutionary and dangerous state of things in said Territory. The Governor affirms that the very worst statements which have been promulgated of the unlawful irruption of the Missourians into Kansas at the late election, are true. He says "that the conduct of the people of the border counties of Missouri had astounded and amazed him, by their reckless disregard of all laws, compacts and constitutions; that the Territory of Kansas, in her late election, was invaded by a regular organized army, armed to the teeth, who took possession of their ballot boxes, and made a Legislature to suit the purposes of the pro-slavery party." He concluded by saying that "Kansas is a conquered country, conquered by force of arms," and he calls upon the North to vindicate their rights.

The Herald attributes those difficulties to the unnatural introduction of abolitionists into their immediate vicinity, although unwise and injurious, as a measure of self-defence. What would be said of Utah if she acted as above? Kansas is excused for what she has done, Utah condemned for what it is thought she will do; a slight difference. Many of our cotemporaries are, however, loud in their denunciations against the proceedings of Missouri in this affair, which we presume none will attempt to defend on constitutional principles. We are again reminded of "Auld lang syne." The Mormons were blamed for being driven out of Missouri; the Missourians are now blamed for doing the same thing to the abolitionists. The difference is, "it was your ox." The old treatment begins to pinch when applied to others.

The following is from the St. Louis Morning Herald:

A PRESS MOBBED.—The people of Parkville, Mo., have resorted to mob law to rid themselves of an abolition press established in their town. On the 14th ult. a number of men from the country assembled, and threw into the river the press of the Parkville Luminary. Resolutions were passed, violently condemning freesoilism, and declaring that no minister of the Methodist Church North should be permitted to preach in Parkville. This spirit of violence is much to be deplored; but, as we are not acquainted with the full extent of the aggravation, we shall not condemn the action of the mob too harshly. It was, perhaps, the only manner in which the case could be reached, and many instances arise which fully justify a resort to the code of Judge Lynch. Whether or not this is one, we are not prepared to say.

MORE OF IT.

THE TRIBULATIONS OF REEDER.—The Free Sollers are terribly exercised about "unfortunate Governor Reeder," a gentleman whom Mr. Pierce, by advice of the editor of the Washington Union, sent out to Kansas to act as Governor, and who appears to have found the job anything but a pleasant one. These Western squatters are a little independent and rough in their manners, and as they believe what the Washington Union has so often told them, that they are the "sovereigns" of the new Territory, they appear to have shown less respect for the sovereign the President sent out to govern them than the White House clique had expected. This gentleman, it seems, has now left the Territory, and the people, acting upon the principle of the revolutionists in Rome, when the Pope fled to Naples in 1848—a principle highly lauded by the Tribune and Evening Post in those days—have proceeded to call an election to choose another chief magistrate—whereat the Tribune and Evening Post of to-day are consistently and excessively irate.

The Post, speaking for Mr. Marcy as usual, demands of the President that Reeder be forced back upon the people of Kansas. If the President has any wisdom left, he will attempt no such thing. We believe in the true doctrine of popular sovereignty, and believe, moreover, that Kansas and Utah will teach the President what that doctrine is, before they have done with him. Let us have no pro-consuls sent out with legions at their back. There are people enough in those Territories to organize governments for themselves, and they are doing so. The President had better not interfere. —[N. Y. Daily News, April 26.

Though Spain is weak and we are strong, as compared now, yet in this question, at this time we strain a cord already nearly severed, that holds the North and South together. The compromise barrier is already thrown down. The Fugitive law disregarded. The confidence of all, is lessened in the whole. The North looks jealously upon the South, and the South is equally mistrustfull of the North. Do some hope that a foreign war will be the means of allaying internal broils? This might be the case with a war with some nations, but not with Spain, for the time now is, when there are many in this country, who say with the woman whose husband was contending with the bear, "it's the only fight she ever saw, that she did'nt care which best." For in that war, as every one knows, is involved the long coveted acquisition of Cuba; and if that is acquired the abolitionist would say adieu to northern influence, and free to the breeze floats the Pro-Slavery flag forever, on the land and over the sea, for says the South, this little gem, is the key that will unlock all the fair lands of the Southern continent. Who will then stop, for scruples, for have we not found a currency though light and glittering, and of the meanest metal, that passes current for the intrinsic value of honesty? And we're the greatest nation on the earth. We have got a part of Mexico, we have got Cuba now, who shrinks at Mexico, Guatamala, Nicaragua, Columbia, Peru, Brazil? Honesty, nobility is but a name. The Thracian Robber and the conqueror were old fogies, they lived not in an age as fast as ours. They were outside barbarians. We are a nations of Czars and Alexanders, a perfect host of Napoleons. But pause one moment my friends, says Jonathan, Cuba is not taken yet, the Andes not scaled, nor the Portugese Americo Empire reduced. The Yankee with his keen, and scrutenizing eye, is always up for a trade, but then he will count the cost. So while he significantly applies his thumb to his nose, he reckons whether it will make nutmegs, cucumber seed or eight day clocks, he wants to know if he is going to fight to secure a greater area for slavery, while he has all the time been contending against the fugitive law, is he going to strive to extend that which he already thinks draws too largely upon his profits and too much upon his influence? No; he is proud of his everlasting Yankee nation, and ready to swallow all creation, but then he stops to think, how it will digest. He thinks a war with Spain, will give him the night mare, and visions of nullification flit before him, with Cuba and cotton bales floating in the distance to other customers, leaving him with the shell in his hand, and the oyster in anothers mouth. No Mr. Pierce and Marcy don't be in a hurry yet, even though Spain fires a few more guns, nobody will think you are afraid, only preserve us from our friends, and the country's safe.

The Sun in a Fog.

THE SUN with its usual perspicuity, and accuracy, takes up the address of Governor Brigham Young, in the following gentle terms:

"We have dates from Salt Lake, U. T. to the 1st of March. The news is unimportant, except as relates to the unamiable temper which the report of the appointment of Col. Steptoe, to the Governorship had produced in Brigham Young. Brigham rants and raves over the prospects of his removal, and abuses the United States officers that have been sent to the Territory in the filthiest language."

Excepting the "gallant gentleman" referred to, of course; and then there are Judge Kinney, Judge Reed, Judge Shaver, Judge Snow, and several other government officers that our amiable editor must have forgotten, "for Brutus is an honorable man."

The deep penetration of the Sun is again evident where he adds, "There is considerable cunning exhibited in the following passage, extracted from a speech made by Brigham Young to the Saints:"

"'If the gallant gentleman who is now in our midst had received the commission of Governor of this Territory, as was reported, and had accepted it, I would have taken off my hat and honored the appointment; and this people would have been just as passive and submissive to him, as ever they could be to me; that I will warrant and vouch for.'"

Now, Mr. Sun, pray explain; is this the "cunning," or is it the "unamiable temper," or Brigham's rants and ravings over the prospects of his removal? No; we presume it must be in that which follows. But to show the want of principle of the writer in the Sun, we insert that portion of the remarks of Gov. Young, left out by him, which probably is that in which so much "cunning" is displayed:

"If they wish to send a Governor here, and he is a gentleman, like the one I have referred to, every heart would say, thank God, we have a man to stand at our head in a gubernatorial capacity; a man who has got a good heart, and is willing that we should enjoy the federal rights of the Constitution, as well as himself; I am with all such men, heart and hand."

Now follow the conscientious extracts of the Sun.

"'But I will say to the praise of the gallant gentleman referred to, if there was going to be a gentleman called upon to be Governor, that there is not a man under (only a slight typographical error) (out) of the Kingdom of God that I would listen to sooner, and feel more confidence and cordiality towards, than to him. I wish this meed of praise could be awarded to every officer in the government, but it cannot. We have some of the most damnable mean curses here that ever disgraced the earth, some who even wish to carry the holy sanctuary in one hand and a jug of whiskey in the other, and follow a ——, and have a saint trail behind them to hold up their garments to prevent their drabbling.'"

We have published the above to show how some editors, with a pretension to decency and respectability, can stoop to such weak, contemptible meanness as the above attempt at warping and twisting the remarks of Governor Young, and an omission that, when read, at once brands them as liars, and manifests to every one, with less folly than themselves, their littleness among honorable men, and the shallow pretensions to morality and delicacy are as thinly covered with the —— as his dishonesty and meanness are from his readers.

Mormon Preaching.

A YOUNG man all the way from Salt Lake City, seemingly not more than 20 years old, preached in the Universalist Church last Sunday, morning and afternoon. He was with the Mormons at the time of the murder of Joseph Smith. He bears the appearance in his face of good moral character, and high tone of mind, accompanied with rather superior intelligence. If we had not seen something of Mormons before, and of this favorable kind, we should have felt like a young friend of ours, a true blue Orthodox, after hearing an Unitarian clergyman in Albany, years ago. Coming out of church, he exclaimed, with evident surprise, "Why he looks and preaches like a right good man!" And to many of our readers it now is doubtless a matter of surprise that a young man of naturally good moral character and excellent intelligence, can be at the same time a Mormon preacher. He spoke plainly, and without attempt at ornament. We learned from him that the Mormons believe in the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, essentially; but they do not believe them entirely pure; and added, to these Scriptures they have a revelation of their own, which they claim to be in agreement with the former, and even prophesied of in the Hebrew record. This new revelation is entitled The Book of Mormon, and is said to have been buried in the earth, and miraculously discovered to Joseph Smith, engraved on plates of gold, and by him it was miraculously translated into the present printed English version.

The popular violent prejudice against these people appears to be owing solely to their claim to have a revelation of their own, and and their polygamic faith and practice. While the Mormons assert that neither of these things is in contravention of their persecutors' own Bible.—[Public Medium, Wilamantic Conn.

The above refers to Elder Angus M. Cannon who has been laboring in that district of country. We are glad to learn that he is doing so well, and pray that the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, may bless him in his endeavors, to propagate the truth.

THERE is no special news from the Crimea.

The North and the South.

IN another column will be found an article on this subject, communicated by Alexander Robbins, Jr. There is a great deal of good sound sense in his remarks, and the writer a citizen of Massachusetts, is anxious that his native State should not lend herself to anything like fanaticism; this is all right, yet there are some points wherein we should beg leave to differ from the writer. In the first instance, the Southern people have just as much right as the Northern, to say whether Slavery is an evil or not. It exists among them, they ought to be the best judges of its workings, and operations. In the second place, if it should be decided to be an evil, we don't see why the Nation should be called upon to pay for its removal. Let those who profess to be philanthropists, put their hands into their own pockets, and meet the slaveholders, at least, half way; a course of this kind would prove their sincerity, and meet with countenance from the South, much more than all their professed philanthrophy either out of the National treasury, or by robbery.

The N. Y. Herald.

NEW-YORK, April 30, 1855.

IT is really melancholy to see the violent twistings and contortions of the Herald upon the "great pronunciamento," as he is pleased to call it, of Brigham Young. It looks as though he had taken a heavy cathartic, and was suffering somewhere, with severe gripings, the starts and feverish tossings, during his last night dreams, must have been truly distressing; the symptoms this morning are somewhat "diarhetic" but there is still hopes of his recovery, since the Maine Law is not yet in force. If he should unfortunately suffer another attack after July, his case is surely hopeless.

We must however admit that in publishing the above article, he has done justice to the subject; there Governor Young is permitted to speak for himself, and the reader to judge. We ask nothing more than a fair representation of our own sentiments.

The Nicaragua Expedition.

COL. KINNEY is to be tried on Monday next on the charge of violating the neutrality act; he was to sail on his expedition, in the steamer United States, on the 7th inst., accompanied by many others, companions du voyage. Whatever his ulterior designs may be, it is supposed that should Marcoleta be able to find one or two witnesses to swear that they believe Col. Kinney designs making war upon Nicaragua, that the Colonel will be able to find fifty—if the court will hear them—who have engaged to go out with him, that he has declared, to them, that his sole purpose is peaceful colonization, and that they are not aware of any military organization.

Utah.

THERE is not much additional news in our March mail from Utah; as the paper is just going to press, we merely make a few extracts from our correspondent:

SALT LAKE CITY, March 1, 1855.

There were several of the United States soldiers deserted and ran away, but were overtaken and brought back to the city; it is said the officers intend shaving their heads and drumming them out of the service. All is peaceable between the citizens and soldiers. There was a man by the name of John Murry, who had been addicted to stealing for some time past, was shot by the guard at Provo while in the act of stealing wheat.

The Minute Men paraded the other day with their new uniform, which adds much to their appearance; they wear the Kossuth hat with a plume on the right side, with a neat silver sword to sustain the rim, and as a socket for the plume; a dark blue coat, with brass buttons with a bee-hive and motto, "Always ready," and gray pants with black stripe on the side.

The Indians who killed Captain Gunnison, seven in number, have been apprehended and brought to the city, to await their trial; they were given up by Canosh, their Chief, without any difficulty.

We have fears that we are going to be deprived of the mail from the East altogether, and the only chance seems to be at present by express via California. When will Government correct such negligence? We have received no letters since the December mail.

The weather this winter has been very fine indeed.

VERY EXTRAORDINARY—VERY!—Chicago, April 24.—The city is now quiet. The military and the cannon have been withdrawn. No more trouble is apprehended.

What would be said if cannon had to be withdrawn from Salt Lake City? and what of the quiet and peaceable nature of its inhabitants?

FIRE AT BOSTON.—On April 27th a tremendous fire broke out in Boston. It commenced at about 2 o'clock, on Battery wharf, and spread over East Boston ferry, Constitution, Lincoln, and Battery wharves. Several vessels were much injured, and a great amount of property destroyed. The wind was blowing a gale from the northwest. Estimated loss from $500,000 to $800,000.

A SEIZURE of liquor has been made at Hartford, under the new Maine Law. The case was tried before the County Court, and as about $3,000 was involved, it created considerable interest. The jury were unable to agree in the case, and after spending some time, reported four in favor of confiscation and eight against.

THE friends of Mr. Soule in New Orleans had called a meeting to make preparations for giving him a public reception on his arrival in that city.

A gentleman by the name of Geo. W. Hollester, was killed by a Dr. Henry, while surveying near Belleview, Iowa, on the 5th. Dr. Henry is now in charge of the Sheriff.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire occurred in the paint and oil store of Ward, Case & Co., Maiden Lane, New York. Loss $30,000.

SEVERAL hundred acres of wood and cleared land was burnt over on Monday last, in Barnstable, Mass.

ON April 20th, the first boat of the season, from Lake Ontario, arrived at Ogdensburg.

THE Spring is later in Texas than has been known for thirty years.

FOR THE MORMON.

Massachusetts and the General Government.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

SLAVERY, the great bone of contention in nearly all sections of the Union, is a national institution; and its principles are recognized in the Federal Constitution. The position that we occupy with reference to that institution is involuntary—it is an inheritance from our fathers. The question then is not shall we take a position of the kind we now occupy? but already being in that position, the question with us is, what course shall we pursue under the circumstances, to do justice to ourselves, to our State, and to our country? Our fathers in the North have been as instrumental in establishing slavery in this country, as theirs of the South, and even more so; in fact the early slave traffic was a Yankee enterprise, but the southern country being the best adapted to the application of slave labor, they were sold principally to Southen men; this difference of climate has had the effect to continue the use of slave labor at the South, and at the North to employ slaves as servants of a less sable complexion; of this latter servitude we will not treat here, as it is of a different character from the one under consideration; the consequent issue of this difference of latitude is, that we of the North have inherited from our fathers the proceeds of their early slave traffic, in the shape of lands, mechanical and manufacturing establishments, and money; while our brethren of the South have inherited from their fathers an equivalent in the shape of African negroes, recognized as property by our fathers, no less than by theirs; the responsibility of this institution being mutual, between every section of the Union, it would be unfair for us, in the North, to say to our Southern friends that happen to be more unfortunate than us, in the kind of property they hold, "you shall give up your property without remuneration; while we, who are just as responsible, cling to our golden god with enthusiasm and veneration.

If we have that holy horror for the institutions that we profess to have, let us do something more than tell southern people of their faults, and occasionally aid by our clandestine movements, and underground railroad operations, the alleged escape of slaves from their masters. The great God that hath created us, does not require that we should condescend to such underhanded meanness, to accomplish his purposes, and instead of meeting our brethren in a spirit of mediation and honorable compromise, we assume an attitude that is calculated, and does add fuel to the burning element.

Whoever has studied the Southern character knows that I speak the truth, when I say that it is not behind the North in magnanimity and liberality; yet, at the same time, they feel an encroachment upon what they consider their rights; probably more sensibly than those of a colder latitude: this is attributable to the effects of Southern climate.

I believe I know enough of the Southern character from observation and experience in their midst, to justify me in saying, were they met through the general government in a spirit of liberality, by those who have unfortunately taken thus far another course, and they would be both willing to compromise, and give up their slaves, and would even go farther on the principle of concession than those who are now their enemies. Let those slaves be bought and paid for out of the national resources; there is an abundance, and it is just as right, under the circumstances, for a citizen of Boston to bear his part of the expense of eradicating this national evil, as it is for a citizen of Charleston, S. C.

Again I say let the government pay the full value of every slave, as soon as financial arrangement can be made (which will not be long when the minds of the people are ready for it) and send them to Africa from whence they came, or some other good place where they can be colonized. We are still able to do this great act of national philantlhropy, and by doing it on such a principle, the good feelings of the great family would be preserved, and civil wars and anarchy, that must inevitably follow the fanatical movements now on foot, would be obviated—the good results of such an amicable settlement of these difficulties, that now so portentiously threaten us, cannot be reckoned in dollars and cents; these are facts which may not now be fully appreciated; but they are facts that it will take but a few years to demonstrate to the satisfaction, or dissatisfaction of every one.

Who is Safe?

ANOTHER CHLOROFORM ROBBERY—A WHOLE FAMILY DRUGGED.—A letter in the Iowa Gazette of April 14th gives the following account of a robbery at the house of Jacob Fees, of Davis County, Iowa: "Last night father was robbed of eight hundred dollars in gold, (twenty dollar pieces.) He had moved on his farm on the 2d inst, and on the night of the 3d the house was entered through the window by persons of course to us unknown. The manner of effecting the theft was ingenious. The window was raised, and small rolls of paper saturated with chloroform of opium thrown into the room, by which the house was filled with smoke, and a deep sleep came over all the inmates. The money was between the straw and feather beds in which father and mother were sleeping. Linen cloths, wet with chloroform, were placed over the faces of the old lady and gentleman, and thus they were kept unconscious while the money was taken from under them. There were five persons in the house, and all slept till an unusually late hour this morning."

THE Hon. Augustus Cæsar Dodge left the United States, in the steamer Pacific en route for his appointment to Madrid where he is to enter upon the discharge of his diplomatic duties. It is supposed that his instructions are of a pacific character.

Correspondence.

From our Texas Correspondent.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, Texas,
April 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Through the blessing of my Father in heaven, to whom be glory and honor forever and ever, my life has been spared, and I have been permitted to arrive in this land in safety. From the above you will see my whereabouts, I am some one hundred and fifty miles inland from the Mexican Gulf coast; this is reckoned to be the wealthiest and best settled County in the State. General Saml. Houston resides in this county, not a great way from my present location. The inhabitants have generally emigrated here from Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi; although scattering ones you will find from almost every State in the Union. They are generally plain country people; all own slaves and make cotton. There is a mixture of all kinds of religion among them that you can think of, but the largest portion have no religion at all, nor do they care about any; probably Spiritualism is the most common, and from my limited acquaintance, just around here, I would say decidedly the most popular; what the world would call the most intelligent are generally its advocates. I have taken some pains to become acquainted with their views. They disbelieve Jesus to have been the Son of God; but look upon him as the most perfect man that ever lived. They deny the resurrection of the dead, and the doctrine of the forgiveness of sin; but say if a man commit sins, he will have to suffer for them until the uttermost farthing is paid. They believe in the eternal progression of man in the spirit world. They claim to hold constant communion with spirits in the unseen world. They believe in prophets, and some of them with whom I have conversed think Joseph Smith to have been a prophet; but they say all prophets are extremely liable to be mistaken, in many of their visions; owing to the imperfectness with which Spiritual influences operate through dull mortals. Some of them come out to hear me preach, they do not seem to be afraid to investigate; in this they differ from those of other religions, in these parts.

The country, in this part of Texas, is rolling, interspersed in about equal proportions with prairie and timber lands; the soil is black, very strongly impregnated with lime, and extremely productive; millions of acres throughout this vast empire of a State yet lie uncultivated, and if your "soup kitchen" and "calico ball" philanthropists down East would only send out here some of the starving poor in your great cities, they would soon make themselves comfortable. The farmers here generally live in humble cottages, situated in a prairie, in the midst of small live oak groves, and the grounds set out in rose bushes and other shrubbery, which are and have been in full plumage ever since I have been here, and indeed some varieties of the rose flower all winter, which, however, hardly deserve the name in this latitude, for it seldom freezes even in January. Notwithstanding the soil here is extremely rich, the prospects for a crop this year are very gloomy; the corn crop, which was planted during the months of January and February, (the usual time of planting,) was all cut down by a frost in March, and almost all the farmers plowed up their fields and planted over again; and the cotton, which was planted in March and the first of April, has hardly any of it come up, owing to the drought which has been prevailing ever since the first of January, it not having rained here since that time. The weather here now is about as hot as in our harvest time in Utah; if it grows much hotter, which it certainly must do very greatly toward July, I shall have to give up traveling around and preaching, but erect me a cot under the umbrageous boughs of some wide-spreading live oak, and lie up to keep from melting and running away into a stream, like some of the immortal half-breeds of Jupiter that I used to read about in some of the Latin poets in my school-boy days.

Upon my arrival here, now nearly three weeks, when I alighted from off the mail stage, on examining the contents of my purse, I found I had just one dime and a half; so I thought it a good time to commence preaching, as I could now go, as the Saviour directs, without purse or scrip; to be sure, I had a purse, but it was minus the scrip, and as to the empty purse I could leave it; accordingly, I gave out an appointment, and preached the same evening to a small congregation, but a very attentive one. Since that time I have preached four or five times, the number of hearers increasing somewhat from time to time; some began to believe, and among them were several prominent members of the Baptist Church; pretty soon the devil got mad and began to show his teeth; the people began to rage, and the old priest raised the cry of alarm, turned some out of the synagogue, and sounded the tocsin of war; but, alas! it was too late; the pure principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ had taken deep hold upon the hearts of some, and could not be shaken off. The result has been that yesterday five were baptized, and others will most likely soon follow. The old priest, yesterday, in the forenoon, preached a pitiful discourse from the text of scripture, "Will ye also go away?" You can guess at the drift of his discourse; but it will not all do; the leaven is at work, and it will work and work until the whole lump gets leavened. I have several appointments out; whenever I preach, the Spirit of the Lord rests upon me mightily, just as President Grant said it should when he blessed me in the Tabernacle, in Great Salt Lake City, upon my leaving home. Sometimes I hear of private hints being given out around, such as tar, feathers, blackjacking, and such like appliances of Missouri mobocratic memory; but I heed them not; I go to my appointments, and strictly observe the Mormon creed that you keep always flying at your mast-head. Of those baptized yesterday there was one of the most prominent members of the Baptist Church here, and his family; this is a heavy blow to their Church here; it will, no doubt, astound many, and set them to thinking. Thus, you will see, Mr. Editor, that the scenes with me have greatly changed; instead of sitting in the galleries of the Senate and those of the Congress of the United States, listening to would-be great men quarrel about Nebraska and anti-Nebraska, and such like abstractions, I am away down here South, under other influences, and engaged in other scenes much more interesting to me, and of infinite more importance to the welfare of my race, even that of proclaiming eternal life to the people; and although an entire stranger here, I have already many warm friends, and all my wants supplied; for which I fail not to express my gratitude to the Almighty from day to day. With sentiments of esteem the most sincere for yourself, and wishes the most ardent for your prosperity, I remain, as ever, your devoted friend,

THE MORMON THAT WAS IN WASHINGTON.

WAGGONER'S RIPPLE, Adams Co., O.,
April 20, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

THE virtue of any act consists in the intention of the mind; now as reproduction is, abstractly considered, but a vegetative process, it can, therefore, hardly be said to have any intention about it, so long as it is not allowed to engross the mind; yet the exclusive devotion of the female mind to an adscititious virtue that is purely corporeal eclipses a host of mental qualities that are infinitely more necessary to the accomplishment of their duties, and the perfection of their character as necessity demands. And what is the necessity, or urgent motive for the ferocious exhibition of factitious virtue, who is hurt in any case by the unlicensed obedience of some to the command "increase and multiply?" No one; not even the ferociously virtuous, except in imagination; but our duties are founded on something more solid than imagination. If any one is hurt it is God and nature, and they are abundantly able to detend their rights, and revenge themselves, asking in nothing man's help, nor woman's neither. Many women would be glad to be exempt from this duty and this ferocious virtue, especially such as are barren, or have lost their children, and to be allowed the privilege enjoyed by Sarah and Rachel of having children by proxy; but this last refuge of bereft and disappointed nature is denied them by the inflexible rigidity of modern institutions.

The recorded place of man's primitive nativity and residence shows that he is a native of a warm climate, his body destitute of natural covering testifies the same, and in such climates the females are by much the more numerous.

Now as the apparatus of reproduction is a much more essential part of the female body than of the male, marriage becomes much more a necessity to her than to him. The feebleness both of her mind and body, also bear testimony that she constitutionally needs a companion on whom she may rely for help, counsel, and protection. Both nature and necessity, therefore, declare that it is the right of every woman to have a husband an impossibility in man's native climate, unless some men would have more than one. And if mankind have by migration changed the operation of the laws of their nature, they have not therewith changed the primitive laws destined to govern that nature, any obligation deduced from such a change is at best but a comment on that law, a right based on a violation of it, therefore destitute of foundation. The original disparity between the sexes as to number must, in the primitive ages have been much increased by the frequent loss of the men incurred in defence of the women and children. But in those times especially, when strength, sagacity and courage were the chief virtues of a man, as even now they still are in a woman's eyes, many a man, far from being capable of defending and guiding a woman and family, himself needed a guardian. The last plea of monogamists, if it deserves the name is derived from the researches of the statistics, namely, that though in warm climates females preponderate, and males in cold climates, yet in the whole globe the numbers of both sexes are equal, that is to say that the disconsolate bachelors in the cold climates import wives from the warm climates like they do rice and coffee, or if they don't, they could do it. Now let people of common sense judge whether such a thing ever has been done, is practicable, or would answer the purpose, even if it were made fashionable to buy them against their will. When men use such arguments as this which they must know to be simply ridiculous, they certainly feel that the strength of their cause is not in reason, but in the pressure of conventional influence.

The same decree that imposes on man labor, imposes on the woman the moral necessity of submission to the man, and the physical necessity of reproduction; the same voice that said to the man "in the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat bread," said to the woman "I will greatly increase thy sorrow and thy conception," so that it is as much the woman's destiny to have children as the man's to work, and accordingly the Hebrews thought it a great disgrace and calamity to a woman to be barren or without a husband. The sparseness of the population in the primitive ages has been alleged as an urgent cause for polygamy and concubinage. But that cannot avail as a reason; unless it be made to appear that in those times the females by far exceeded the males in number, and even if so, the rule will hold good still. For, on the contrary, the absence of restriction in this respect has been found rather to check than to promote redundancy of population, an excellent effect in the eyes of the Matthusian school of philosophers. In the consideration of the several aspects of the sexual relation it must always be borne in mind, that though reason and revelation give the man the pre-eminence, as the guardian and adviser always has, yet all the rights of the relation belong to the woman, and if the rights are hers, it is her right and her duty to seek them; therefore the initiation in all stages of the relation more properly comes from her, not from him; a right which the mutual jealousy and competition of females has transferred to the other sex.

CENTERVILLE, Del., April, 1855.

But the most magnificent part is the fireworks, and particularly in the dusk of the evening. This they told me cost them in all about ten thousand roubles; they think they will be abundantly blessed in basket and store for all their trouble and expense. At this Poojah there are thousands of natives gathered from various parts, and all, or a great number of the whites and half casts (who of course are what are falsely called Christians) of the station. This Poojah lasts for days, but the Europeans only attend the last evening from about an hour by sun until dusk, at which time the above takes place.

The natives, of course you understand, burn their incense, make their fires, scatter their flowers, &c., around the image before this. This Poojah takes place in October of each year, but I disremember the day of the month and the name, not having my journal with me.

Then the next evening was the winding up of a Mahomedan festival or worship. Theirs, of course, was of a different kind; they had buildings erected upon a platform, which was laid on bamboo poles; this building was not entirely after the fashion of a mosque, neither of a temple, but rather between the two; the first part, or lower story, of some are about fifteen feet square (they have them various sizes), then the next about two feet less and two feet lower than the first story, and so on for three or four offsets or stories—the first being about six or seven feet high; then on this platform (being larger than the mosque) stands one, and sometimes two or three women, with fly brushes in their hands, and keep brushing all the time, night and day, as if to keep the flies or mosquitoes off. This mosque, or what you please to call it, is built of bamboos, covered with cuprah (cloth), paper, &c., very richly decorated with ribbons, tinsel work in imitation of gold, silver, &c. These mosques are in great numbers, in each station, of various sizes, and cost thousands upon thousands of rupees. About from ten to twelve o'clock at night they are carried upon the shoulders of as many natives as can get under them, these long bamboos sticking out fore and aft, and as close together as not to be in each other's way; when one set get tired, another set take it; in this way it is carried all over the station, attended with music of their kind, such as tumtums, horns, pieces of brass and tin beat together, with sometimes bugles and settars (a native instrument). This lasts until near daylight, when they drown (as they call it) this concern by throwing it into a river, or tank, and it is all destroyed. At each of these festivals they have all sorts of native sweetmeats and toys to sell, with many other things, too numerous to mention. There is a name for this Poojah, but it has slipped my memory. Then there is a way the native merchants have of getting a blessing (or at least they think so): that is by hiring four men (who do nothing else), at high wages, to pray, sing, talk, dance, &c., in their way, for fifteen days, on the same spot, in a station or village, near the stores, from two until six o'clock in the afternoon. Some of them have rings on their legs or ankles and arms, with bells in them; some have two pieces of wood or bone, which they hold between their fingers and clapp, similar to some of our American boys. These men are not costly dressed (their cuprah is yellow); the merchants all join to pay them, as all wish the Lord to prosper them in their business, and that is what it is done for.

Then there is another festival, which is called the Unnowpoonah Poojah. There are five personages represented in this; the first or head one is a woman; her name is Unnowpoonah; she is the goddess, and is dressed in very fine style, her dress being richly decorated with tinsel work of silver, or imitation; she had a splendid looking crown upon her head, apparently set with costly jewels, &c.; one of her legs was drawn up as in the attitude of being crossed, but was not. Next to her, on her right, stood an image of a man, said to be her husband; his name is Mohadeb; he had three snakes about him (that is imitation), one on each of his shoulders, and one around his neck and down about his waist; he stood upright, holding out his hands with something in them; he is said to be a snake charmer. Then next to the goddess (so called), on her left, stands an old white-headed and white-bearded man (image), but has very little cuprah (cloth) about him; he represents a fucheer (beggar). On the right of her husband, and left of the fucheer, stands an Iah, dressed in splendid style for the Iah cast, with a hair fly brush in her hands, rather facing the goddess, as the throne is in the way; the stand forms nearly a half moon. An Iah is a woman or girl to wait upon her mistress, to assist her about washing, dressing, and to do anything a woman wants done who does little or nothing herself.

The throne upon which she sat, and the rest stood was all overlayed with silver, or imitation, and at the back over the head of the Goddess, was all set here and there with looking glasses of various sizes and shapes. They burn incense before the throne, for two reasons; one is to complete the service, and the other to keep off any pollution which might get thereon, from the christians going to look at it, although they keep them off a respectable distance say eight or ten feet by a fence; until they take it out to carry around the station, and then drown it. All who have been at the expense—that is of the Bramin cast—have something to eat beside the throne, at about 10 o'clock at night.

After that they have their band of music—of tum tums and have a place fenced in so as to keep spectators off, and those in their dance (in their way) sing songs, halloo, and keep up a noise most of the remainer of the night. The next day about 5 o'clock, P. M., this throne, with the images thereon are brought out of the shed, under which it is built, and carried all around the station attented with music, dancing, flags, &c., &c., then some time in the night, (at 10 or 12 o'clock I believe it is) they drown it by throwing it into the river. This last operation is attended with some considerable noise I can assure you, and in fact you cannot sleep during the time they are marching around, if you are any where near them; the images are composed mostly of mud. This takes place on the 26th or 27th of June.

I will yet speak of one more Poojah, which is called by the Natives the Cherric Poojah, this is rather the most beastly operation I ever saw. In the first they set up a post some thirty or thirty-five feet high, they then put a cross piece of about twenty feet long which works on a pivot on top of the upright one, so that one end will sway down; to each end of this cross pole is attached a rope reaching to the ground. They then, when the day and hour arrives bring up a man looking I may judge like one of the fiends of the lower reigions, and another man or two of about the same looks, have two large hooks, something like meat hooks, say of one quarter inch iron, which they insert into the first one's back, just as a man would a steelyard hook into a piece of meat, one on each side of the back bone, just below the point of the shoulder blade. They then much against the will of the man, and those by whom he is hired, as the English law requires it of late years, put a piece of cuprah around him, so that if the flesh and skin should give way, which it does sometimes, it would catch him; but this is left so loose that not the least particle of weight comes thereon unless the hooks tare out of both flesh and skin; and if the latter should take place, they would rather be dashed to pieces than be caught by this cloth, as they think it would give a much greater blessing; and the man so killed would go straitway to heaven. As soon as the hooks are in, and the cuprah around, the man walks up to the gallows; one of the above named ropes are fastened to the hooks, the rope on the lower end, then two men take the other rope and pull down the high end, suspending the man some thirty-five feet in the air, by those two hooks in the flesh. They then run around with the rope they have hold of and this sets him flying; they go so fast that his weight will not keep the rope on which he hangs perpendicular. The man then swinging generally has fruit of various kinds, in a basket, which he throws out while going around, at this swift rate, among the multitude of thousands that are gathered from the surrounding country, and they who get the first think it will prove a blessing to them.

They are kept in this position from one-quarter to three-quarters of an hour, just according to the price paid, or the blessing desired; as one will correspond with the other. The man when he first came up to have the hooks put into his back seemed a little afraid, fell on the ground rolled around &c.; but soon arose and stood apparently calm, while they were put through, which was done very quickly; for the operators took no particular care, not so much as we would in piercing ones ears with a cambric needle: while swinging they draw themselves into various shapes, I suppose from the pain. I have seen three all swinging at one time, and I never felt so much of the power of the evil one, as on that occasion; it seemed as if the devil, or some of his emisaries were there, urging them on to this deed. The blessings they wish to receive by this heinous exercise are various, so that the price varies, as it is seldom that the persons swing wish the blessing for themselves.

In one respect those people are like the ancient Israelites, that is they consider it a great reproach or stigma upon a woman if she does not bear children, within a proper time after marriage; in fact they say (that is the Padrees) they believe the Old Testament, but not the New. So the Ranny's (Roger's wives) or rich Babboo's wives, will hire one of these men to swing, and in that way get the Lord to take pity on her, and open her womb, and give her children, as He did old Mother Sarah, and Rachel, when they gave their hand-maids to their husbands to wife; some of these men have a number of wives. And again if some of their family are very sick, and have been so for some time and they are very desirous that they should get well, they have this done so that the Lord will be merciful and heal them &c. &c. The price for swinging is from two to five rupees, and I believe on some extra occasions they told me they gave as high as eight or ten rupees. A rupee is worth about forty-eight and one-quarter cents there, and forty-three or forty-four here.

This Poojah, that is the swinging part, takes place on the 12th day of April in the afternoon; but the poojah lasts for some days.

Then there is another way which they think they can obtain the same blessing and particularly the poorer class, and that is by going to the Fucheers and making them in the first place a handsome present, and then promising a greater one at the birth of the child; or on the reception of the desired blessings he then pow-wows over them for some time, figures writes &c., tells them to go and receive their blessing; if it is a child wanted, they go and attend to the law of procretaion in full faith and often at the appointed time, (so I am told) give birth to a child. As to what those fucheers do with their means I cannot tell as they eat but little, wear no clothes, except in the parts where the English law compells them so to do, and then nothing but a small, narrow strip of thin cloth around their private parts fastened at each end to a piece of twine, or string tied around them above. They mud themselves all over with white clay, hair, face, eye-brows, and all parts, so that they look frightful at first sight: as their hair and beards are very long, not shaving as others do, and they are generally large robust men. But I will not go into the details of these men's characters and doings, lest peradventure it might shock the modesty of some of our fair American ladies. I have reference to those (Fucheers) of the interior of the country.

The natives think as much of a rupee as you would of $5, or perhaps more, so what they would call a handsome present would not be a great sum. Their money is reckoned by pie, pice, Annas and Rupees; three pie makes one pice, (a pice is about five-eighths of a cent,) four pice one annas, one-sixth annas one rupee, and then they have Cowery shell, as they call them, and one hundred and twenty make one pice, so that they divide their money quite small; and if you give one of them two pice, he is made up at once, and will make half-a-dozen salams to you for it. I just mention this to give you an idea of a present, among them.

I will continue this at another time, when I get some better ink.

Please remember me kindly to Bros. George and Felt, I am quite well, and Baptized three yesterday morning, I desire an interest in your prayers. I preached to quite a congregation of attentive hearers last evening. Nothing new under the sun that I know of.

I pray for your prosperity in your responsible station, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

I am as ever your humble servant, and Brother affectionately in Christ,

S. A. WOOLLEY.

From Our Kansas Correspondent.

ATCHISON, KANSAS TERRITORY, April 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Supposing that your numerous readers would like to hear something in, regard to the western country, I take a moment's leisure from the press of business to drop you a line.

First, in regard to the weather; there has no rain fallen here for several months, that could be called a season, and but very little snow during the past winter; high winds prevail, and the weather is becoming very warm, without any prospect of rain; occasionally clouds fly so high that the prayers of the "pious" cannot reach them, and I am sometimes led to believe that the Lord has forgotten poor, miserable Missouri; that prophecy is now fulfilling which says, "Men's hearts shall fail them for fear." A contract had been entered into, and only needed closing by those written forms which are so requisite in Missouri, in one of the towns on the river, near this place, for eight hundred sacks of flour; and upon orders being received to close the contract, by an instrument of writing, the miller requested a little time to look round the country to see if the wheat could be bought; after a careful search he came in with a downcast countenance, and said that the farmers would not sell a bushel of wheat until it rained, which, to all appearances, it will not do soon. The grass is very backward, and it is doubtful whether our emigration will start so soon as anticipated on that account; but everything else will be in readiness.

There are now, at this place, a camp of the Saints, numbering about two hundred and fifty souls, under Bro. Richard Ballantyne's presidency, who will cross the plains this season; health and happiness prevades the camp, and sickness and death, with the many evils that attend the outsiders, we are exempt from. The Spirit of God fills the minds of all the Saints at this place; and although we experience many privations, and have many desires which cannot be gratified in this portion of the country, we are clear of the spirit of grumbling and growling, and the camp would remind you of a bee-hive, (drones excepted,) if you could see the brethren going to and returning from their labor, the sisters washing and cooking, the lads and lasses gathering wood to kindle a fire, and children sporting and playing like so many lambs. When I look on I am led to exclaim:

Ah, the merry! O, the merry! he! the merry Mormons!
I never knew what joy wos till I became a Mormon.

The election in Kansas, about which there was such a blow, has passed and gone, and the grave-diggers have not got rich by digging graves for those who were to be killed on that day, as some of the hot bloods predicted they would; it resulted in giving a majority, in both branches of the Legislature, to the pro-slavery party. Governor Reeder is still alive, although he was to have been drawn and quartered long since; were it not for the threats that have been made against the Governor and free soil party, which his opposing friends say he belongs to, having so signally failed, I should anticipate that our people would have trouble this season, to be brought on by the few remaining servants of his "Square-toed" majesty, that took such an active part in assisting the Church of Jesus Christ to move from amongst them and go to Illinois. There are many arriving in the Territory daily; many of them come destitute of means to sustain themselves; such are dissatisfied, and would be if they were going to be hung; but those who have enough to pay a week's board feel better about the prospect of life. This place is beginning to prosper. The work of the Lord has a poor chance to be grafted on, in this portion of the country, as the stump is rotten, and the roots dry; but should there be those who are not entirely corrupt, there is an opportunity of their seeing correct principles developed among the saints here.

A word upon polygamy before I conclude: while in conversation with a gentleman a few days since, he informed me that in a certain city, not one hundred miles from this place, there was an amount of sexual corruption, both among the married and unmarried, and that too among what is called the fairest portion of the community, that, if developed, would shock the sensibilities of every refined and virtuous man; this, when connected with "woman's rights," spirit rapping and affinity, looks like the devil's polygamy, as he is fond of following patterns.

May the Lord prosper you and THE MORMON.

I am yours, TRAVELER.

Shooting Affair in New Haven.

THE New Haven Palladium of April 30th gives an account of a brutal and, apparently, premeditated murder, committed in that city, the Saturday evening previous. A Mr. William Clark, who keeps a small grocery store, had for some time paid attention to a Miss Henrietta Bogart. An engagement of marriage had been concluded between them; but had been broken off by mutual consent. Miss Bogart had subsequently married a Mr. Richard W. Wight. Without an apparent or avowed provocation, Clark went to the house of Wight, and while he was stooping presented a pistol to within about a foot of his victim's head, unobserved by Wight, and shot him through the head. The murderer was soon after arrested, and manifested the greatest unconcern, stating that he had not been ill-treated by the family, and did not know why he committed the awful deed.

A Husband's Dishonor and Vengeance.

A Mr. Alexander J. Forbes, an old resident of Buffalo, and recently returned from California, where he had been absent about three years, finding his family on the eve of being materially increased, and having satisfied himself that the author of this disgrace was a Mr. Michael Shaler, a clerk in the employ of Mr. George Gage, grocer on Seneca street, proceeded this morning about 11 o'clock to Mr. Gage's store, and after asking for an account which Mr. Gage had against him, drew a revolver and rapidly discharged five shots against Shaler—only one, however, took effect—passing through the right breast and out at the back. Shaler now lies in rather a critical condition, although it is supposed that he will not die.

As soon as the act was done, Mr. Forbes at once gave himself up to the officers—he was entirely calm—expressed his regret that the man Shaler was not killed—said he had good and sufficient cause for the perpetration of his apparently rash act.

The case of Forbes seems a peculiar distressing one. He appears quite an intelligent man, and apparently was prompted by no other motive than that of in some measure repairing a great wrong which had been done to him. He was formerly in the employ of Cutler, Stearns & White, as a cabinet maker; afterwards had a shop of his own on Exchange street, and then left for California, where he has labored assiduously for the past three years, during which time he had remitted over $3,000 to his wife.

Shaler was supposed to be his particular friend, and on his return, Forbes bought a richly mounted cane, costing him $65, and presented it to him as an evidence of his esteem. We are told that Shaler was warned by Mr. Forbes, as soon as he learned the amount of his disgrace, that he had better leave the city. Shaler paid no attention to the advice, and the result followed, as above detailed.—[Buffalo Commercial.

The California Pioneer.

"A sad story is that of General Sutter, a man noted for his benevolence, but now reduced to poverty. The first gold found in California was discovered in the race of his mill,* and soon thousands of squatters had 'prospected' upon his possessions. With a 'hand open as the day to melting charity,' he relieved the wants of all. We are told that he was a patriarch, guiltless as a child, and totally wanting in commercial tact, unsuspectingly confided his secrets, his business, even his property, to any one who, by an affection of interest or a hypocritical show of assistance, offered themselves to his friendship. One after another, thousands of his broad acres slipped from his grasp, he placed his affairs in the hands of an agent who deceived, deluded and finally robbed him of some hundreds of thousands of hard dollars; his property dwindled down to merely a tithe of what it had been, and the old man's sorrows were heavy upon him. In this condition he put a farm, his sole remaining support, into the hands of his son, who proved worse even than strangers, and robbed him of his last possession. He is now reduced to all but begging, but awaits the decision of some commissioners in respect to a land claim."

* This was discovered by a Mormon.—ED. MOR.

THE utility of camels in the western prairies has been a subject of discussion for a number of years. It is now about to be tested, for Major Wayne intends to go out in the storeship Supply, destined for the Mediterranean, to purchase some of these animals, Congress having authorized them to be purchased for military purposes. The camel may answer till superseded by the railroad, the most certain and most efficient means of conveyance known.

A RUMOR prevails in Vienna that the Emperor Napoleon is to visit that city after his visit to London; also that the Emperor Francis Joseph and Queen Victoria will at the same time visit his Majesty at Paris during the Exhibition. The Queen will occupy the Tuilleries.

ADVANCING PRICES AT THE HOTELS.—The St. Nicholas, the New York and the Clarendon increased their rates per diem, for board, from two dollars and a half, to three dollars. This advance is supposed to be partly owing to the passage of the new liquor law. It is said that the "hotel keepers want to make up for the diminished sales of liquor by the charge of the extra half dollar per day for board." This may be correct; but we should think that the extra price of provisions may be a better reason, at the present.

A UNANIMOUS vote of thanks has been given to Captain John Taylor, of the ship "Siddons," by the Latter Day Saints who were passengers with him, for his courteous and gentlemanly behavior during a voyage from Liverpool to Philadelphia; embodied in which is a vote of thanks to John S. Fulmer. (Signed) JOHN S. FULMER, ISAAC ALLRED, JAMES PACE.

A Typographical error had occurred in relation to the sailing of the ship "Juventa," in our last week's issue; we are made to say the 31st of Feb. It ought to have been she left Liverpool March 31.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office, by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in th World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les eces: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the s[pot] from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great S[alt] Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the plac[es] and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the co[m]mencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may [be] relled upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuab[le] owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the co[n]flicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jed[e]diah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker hnd Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in t[he] first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, a[nd] beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which [its merits] alone justify its publication.

Poetry.

For the Mormon.

Who art thou man, and what may be thy name?
Thou standest here among this motley crowd,
Like some lone bird, or solitary tree.
All look at thee, and most pass by as though
Thou wert not human—some monster, to be
Shunn'd, despis'd, or trodden under foot.

Who am I! why, a Saint! who should I be?
Is it so strange that Saints should be alone?
'Twas always so in every age. Those men
Whom God esteem'd have been despised by man;
Hated, cast out as poor degraded things;
As though they were the foulest, meanest
Scum of Nature's filthiest dregs—the very Excrescence and scrapings of the stench of Corrupt, debas'd, wretched, fallen man.

The Prophets, what were they? poor wretches all,
(If man should be the judge,) cast out, despis'd,
And trodden under foot; they wander'd forth,
Far from the haunts of men; in solitary caves,
In dens, or deserts dwelt; 'mid savage beasts,
Or fed by ravens, fled the face of man:
For so repugnant were the truths they bore
To fallen mortals' ears, who knew not God,
Their testimony always brought disgrace.
Theirs were not sleek, soft, honey'd, gentle words,
To lull the wanton profligate and vile;
They dar'd proclaim the message to them given,
And thunder forth the great decrees of fate;
They spake as men whose inmost souls were fired
With living truth, fresh from celestial realms;
In heavenly visions wrapt, they gazed upon
The great designs of God. The present, past,
And future, was to them laid bare: they saw
As Gods and Saints can only see; while Heaven's Curtains were withdrawn, they gazed through
The opaque, vista of unnumber'd years,
And revelled in the mysteries of God.
And when to erring mortals they proclaimed
The will of Elohelm, 'twas no weak word,
No simple theory, or vague opinion;
They spake things that they knew—the truths of Heav'n—
In living, burning words; that drop'd like fire,
Or burning, molten lead, upon the hearts
—If hearts they have—of corrupt, shameless man;
These cut like two-edg'd sword, bare laying
The filth, pollution, mean hypocrisy,
With all their scathing power; he trembled
When the rays of truth laid bare his hideous
Deformity; he saw himself an ingrate,
A corrupt wretch—a rebel against God;
False to himself, his friends, his soul, his God;
A miserable reptile, and no man,
Crawling about, besliming all he touch'd;
Without that hope that ought to dwell in man,
And elevate him to, among the Gods;
That knowledge of his God; his origin and fate
Perverting and corrupting all his ways;
He knew not God; the future was to him
A dread abyss—a yawning gulf—a blank;
He stood a zero 'midst the works of God,
And liv'd without an object, aim, or hope;
Or worse, a cumberer of the ground, a
Pervert 'mong his race; an idiot, madman,
Reprobate and fool; who barter'd Heaven
And hopes of endless bliss; his claims
Upon eternity, his friends, his all. For what?
A few vain bubbles, bursting ere they form'd,
Or, like the moth that flutters round the flame,
Headlong he'll rush to ruin and to death;
Amused, poor fool, with what does him destroy.
He had not power to rise, retrace his steps;
Resume his dignity, and be a man.
And failing to do this, he hisses forth
His deadly venom'd spite against the man
Who dar'd to tell him of his devious tracks,
And say he was a venomed, crawling wretch;
He vents his fury on the man of God,
And hates the precepts he cannot obey.

But I'm a Saint, I glory in the name,
And would not change for all the glittering,
Empty bawbles of this evanescent earth.

Oh! how I love the men that dared to Worship God, and call their souls their own—men
Who have hearts that swell with sacred truths;
On whom high Heaven looks down and approbates;
In whom the Gods would feel a sacred pride,
And say: "These are our friends; the friends of truth,
Of virtue, God, and Heaven."

These are my choice companions, friends; these
The living, dead, past, present, and to come;
All—all are mine; I'll share their obloquy;
Their path be mine, while here, and through all worlds.
A Saint! a Saint! I am a Saint, and 'tis
My highest aim to live, to die, and be
A faithful Saint; in time, and throughout all,
A boundless, vast eternity. T.

DISCOURSE.

THE following is an Address delivered by President Brigham Young, in the Tabernacle, at Salt Lake City, after the reading of the Discourse which we published in our last.

REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.

A portion of this congregation have been brought up in America, and are more or less acquainted with the Constitution, with the constitutional rights of the people, with the institutions of the country, with the State governments, laws, &c.; and if they have paid particular attention, and have heard Br. Bullock read my written discourse, so that they could understand it, they know whether their minds, feelings and judgments coincide with mine, upon the views that have just been presented.

For one, I can say they are true; they are the sentiments of this people, so far as they are acquainted with the principles of the government of the United States; though a part of our present community have not been reared under the benign influences of the institutions of our parent government. But as far as they understand, I will venture to say that these are the sentiments of all the Latter-Day Saints.

In my conversation, I shall talk and act as I please. Still I am always aware, when speaking in public, that there are those present who are disposed to find fault with this people, and to try to raise a prejudice against them; and they will pick up isolated words and sentences, and put them together to suit themselves, and send forth a garbled version to prejudice the world against us. Such a course I never care anything about; for I have frequently said, spoken words are but wind, and when they are spoken are gone; consequently I take liberties in speaking which I do not allow when I commit my sentiments to writing.

The discourse that has just been read, pointing out the path this people have walked in, is merely a brief summary of our experience, of what we have borne, and of what we believe.

Before the Book of Mormon was printed, and immediately after Joseph Smith obtained the plates and the revelations he received concerning this record being the record of the Nephites, and of the Lamanites, who are the fathers of the present aborigines of our country, and in which the Lord told him that he was about to set to his hand the second time to gather Israel, the war commenced against him; this was long before the book was printed. I will now tell you all a secret, although it has already been read to you; it is this—Christ and Belial are not friends; they are enemies. We ask where Christ's Church is? My conclusive answer is, if the Latter Day Saints do not constitute the Kingdom of God on the earth, the Church of Jesus Christ, it is no where to be found upon it. It is easily proved by the Scriptures that no other church, professing to believe in the Old and New Testament, bears hardly a resemblance to the ancient true church in the fullness of the doctrines of the Lord Jesus.

So far as morality goes, in many instances I have no complaints to make. Thousands and millions of people live according to the best light they have, but the Holy Priesthood is not on the earth unless the Latter Day Saints have it. It is the Priesthood again given to the children of men, shall I say it out? (Yes.) That raises the devil, and makes all hell angry; and the servants of the devil will run to and fro, and publish his lies about Christ and his church on the earth. They are not angry with me or with you; and the professors of Christianity, the priests are not angry with us, but they are filled with wrath and indignation with themselves, and with the Almighty. Why are they angry? Because they are men, and like other men. If a man sees his house about to fall, if he sees something or other continually gnawing, and gnawing, and picking, and operating upon the foundation, and discovers that by and by his house must fall, perhaps when he is asleep, or when he is gone from home, and destroy his women and children, he is all the time worried, and in a stew; all the time watching with a fearful looking for the time when it will crumble to pieces. This is the difficulty with the professing Christian world. Is it so with the infidel? No, he does not care anything about the matter; but those sweet, loving, blessed Christians, the priest in the pulpit, and the deacon under it, and the sage followers of their own nonsense and the traditions of their fathers, are the ones who are at war with the Eternal Priesthood of God.

The Universalists say that we are all going to heaven in a heap together, and if they believe their religion, they do not trouble themselves about Mormonism. Though I confess that I think the most of them are like the old man who was a strong believer in Universalism, and, while walking among his cattle, and musing over his doctrine, stepped up to a favorite ox, and said to himself, "I believe the doctrine of the Universalists, but, old Bright, as well as I love you, I would willingly give you if I knew it was true." You find a man who does not believe in any religious doctrines, who does not believe in a future existence, and what does he care about Mormonism? Nothing at all.

Who is it that stirs up the devil all the time? Those sanctified hypocrites, those old sectarians who profess so much sanctity, and so much religion. They see that their old, favorite dwelling is crumbling to the dust, never to be rebuilt again before Mormonism will triumph. That is what stirs up all the mischief. It was priests who first persecuted Joseph Smith. I will here relate a few of the circumstances which I personally know concerning the coming forth of the plates, from a part of which the Book of Mormon was translated. This fact may be new to several, but I had a personal knowledge with regard to many of those circumstances.

I well knew a man who, to get the plates, rode over sixty miles three times the same season they were obtained by Joseph Smith. About the time of their being delivered to Joseph by the angel, the friends of this man sent for him, and informed him that they were going to lose that treasure, though they did not know what it was. The man I refer to was a fortune teller, a necromancer, an astrologer, a soothsayer, and possessed as much talent as any man that walked on the American soil, and was one of the wickedest men I ever saw. The last time he went to obtain the treasure he knew where it was, and told where it was, but did not know its value. Allow me to tell you that a Baptist deacon and others of Joseph's neighbors were the very men who sent for this necromancer the last time he went for the treasure. I never heard a man who could swear like that astrologer; he swore scientifically, by rule, by note. To those who love swearing it was musical to hear him, but not so to me, for I would leave his presence. He would call Joseph everything that was bad, and say, "I believe he will get the treasure after all." He did get it, and the war commenced directly.

When Joseph obtained the treasure, the priests, the deacons, and religionists of every grade, went hand in hand with the fortune teller, and with every wicked person, to get it out of his hands, and to accomplish this a part of them came out and persecuted him.

Ours is professedly a Christian nation, and those who profess to be Christians should be so in very deed; if they were, they would not hesitate to have a good man and a Christian preside over them. As much as is said against Christians sitting in the Presidential chair of the government, they are the only suitable persons to rule, and should be taught of the Lord by dreams and visions. But after all the hue and cry about "Church and State," there has not been a President, nor a Governor, in our day, but what has been controlled, more or less, by priests who deny revelation, believe not in visions, and receive not the ministration of angels. Presidents, Governors, members of the Cabinet and of Congress, are more or less controlled either by the priests, or by a traditionary religious influence; and at the same time nearly all of them will turn round and curse the priests, and curse religion to the lowest hell, while they are governed and controlled by it. The false religion that is in the world is what raises this "hue and cry," misguides the people, and opposes itself against the Kingdom of God on the earth. Now if we would only fall in with the wicked all would be right, and then no person would wish to persecute us.

I will mention a few sayings and doings that transpired in Missouri, when they had Joseph and many others in prison. Old General Clark had discretionary power, from Governor Boggs, to kill man, woman and child, or to spare the women and children, or distribute the whole community of the Saints among the other inhabitants, just as he pleased. The cause of this was laid to "Mormon disturbances," "Mormon troubles;" though the Mormons had not been out of their own county, for they owned nearly all the county where they lived, and they did not go beyond their own boundaries, except upon lawful and necessary business. We had given up our arms, by their request, to prove our loyalty to the government, and then many of them said, "Now, God damn you, we will shoot you;" and some of the Saints were killed after they had surrendered their arms in faithful compliance with the requisition.

The starting point of our persecutions there arose by our enemies setting fire to their own houses, and swearing that they were burnt out and driven by the Mormons. This I know, for it came under my own observation. When General Clark came into the Far West with his army, he sent George M. Hinkle, the apostate, to call out the remainder of the brethren on to the public square, and when they were assembled he surrounded them with his men, and said, "Gentlemen, I have discretionary power in my hands, and I will now tell you what we desire—we wish one to go home with this man, and another with that man, and take your wives and children with you, and distribute yourselves through the State. You are the best mechanics and the most industrious people we have; and you have accomplished more here in two years than our old settlers have in twelve. We wish you to live with us. Why cannot you associate with us? I want you to scatter among our people, and give up your religion and Prophet, for I will tell you now, in the beginning, you will never see your Prophet, Joseph Smith, again." (Said I to myself, that is a falsehood.) "Only mingle with us, and give up your Prophet, your Apostles, and your assembling yourselves together, and we wish you to stay with us, for you are the best citizens in the State." I thought that these expressions did not correspond well with many of his remarks, and being determined not to give up my religion, I at once concluded that he might go to hell, and I would leave the State; and so I did, with the balance of the Latter Day Saints, as they had previously killed many.

Brethren and sisters, our friends wish to know our feelings toward the government. I answer they are first-rate, and we will prove it too, as you will see if you only live long enough, for that we shall live to prove it is certain; and when the Constitution of the United States hangs, as it were, upon a single thread, they will have to call for the Mormon Elders to save it from utter destruction; and they will step forth and do it.

We love the Constitution of our country; it is all we could ask; though in some few instances there might be some amendments made which would better it. We love the Federal Government, and the laws of Congress. There is nothing in those laws that in the least militates against us, not even to our excluding common law from this Territory. I can inform our lawyers who plead at the bar here, that the Congress of the United States have passed laws giving us the privilege of excluding common law at our pleasure, and that too without any violation of the Constitution, or general statutes. They have also given us privilege to stop drunkenness, swearing and gambling, and to prevent horse-racing, and to punish men for hurting and robbing each other. The Constitution of the United States, and the whole Federal Government, in their acts, have given us this privilege.

Now, I will tell you one thing that I am opposed to, and that this people are opposed to; it is to a man's coming here as an officer, with a bit of sheep's skin in his pocket having some great man's name to it, and beginning to set up his rules of discipline for the people, and saying, "I am a gentleman, I am a high-minded gentleman: can you tell me where I can find a woman to sleep with me to-night?" and setting up gambling shops, and drinking, and carousing, and stirring up strife, and hatching up law suits; hunting out disaffected spirits, and then lecturing the people on morality, wishing them to become like other communities, and saying to Mrs. Such-a-one, or Miss Such-a-one, "Won't you ride with me—won't you take a sleigh ride to-night with me? I am a high-minded gentleman." A prudent father, or husband, says, "Come home here, this is your place; you have no business with strangers." What is the result of this? Why, from most of the high-minded gentlemen you can hear, "God damn the Mormons, they are opposed to the Federal Government, because they will not let us sleep with their wives and daughters." I am opposed to such men, and am after them with the barbed arrows of the Almighty. To what extent? Let them intrude upon the chastity of my family, and, so help me God, I will use them up. (All the congregation said, "Amen.") Such characters may cry, "Aliens, aliens! the Mormons are all hostile to the government;" and they may cry it until they are in hell.

As I have already stated, the President of the United States should be a perfect pattern for all the people to walk after; so also should the Vice President, the members of the Cabinet and of Congress, the Governors of States and Territories, and, in fine, all the officers in the government, be patterns for the people to imitate. But what do you find among the leaders of the people? Almost everything but an upright example.

Corrupt men cannot walk these streets with impunity, and if that is alienism to the government, amen to it. The Constitution of the United States we sustain all the day long, and it will sustain and shield us, while the men who say we are aliens, and cry out "Mormon disturbance," will go to hell. There have been officers here who were not fit to live in our midst, and they ran home, and raised the cry, "Mormon disturbances," "Mormon rebellion," "Mormon war," and "treasoners;" but their day is over.

When a man professes to be my friend, and the friend of this people, he will take my counsel, instead of stirring up strife, and practicing iniquity. I dislike the wilfully corrupt, and by and by I will come out thunder-like, as I have done upon others when practicing iniquity; and as I did upon a certain individual when he made his glorious speech, and insulted this people from the highest to the lowest. I chastised him, and he ran off and reported as my sayings those which I did not say. It was told him, while he was on the plains, that President Zachary Taylor was dead and damned, and it has gone through the States, from side to side, that I said so. It was first given out that the Mormons said so, and then that Brigham said so; well, I backed it up, because I knew it was true. I have just as good a right to say that President Taylor is in hell, as to say that any other miserable sinner is there. Was he any more than flesh and blood? I have as good a right to canvass him, in a religious point of view, as I have to canvass the peasant upon the dung-hill. He has gone there, and so have many others; and the Lord Almighty is removing the bitter branches, as foretold in the Book of Mormon.

The newspapers are teeming with statements that I said; "President Pierce and all hell could not remove me from office." I will tell you what I did say, and what I now say; the Lord reigns and rules in the armies of the heavens, and does his pleasure among the inhabitants of the earth. He sets up a kingdom here, and pulls down another there, at his pleasure. He walks in the midst of the people, and they know it not. He makes Kings, Presidents and Governors at his pleasure; hence I conclude that I shall be Governor of Utah Territory just as long as He wants me to be; and for that time, neither the President of the United States, nor any other power, can prevent it. Then, brethren and sisters, be not worried about my being dismissed from office; for when the President appoints another man to be Governor of Utah Territory, you may acknowledge that the Lord has done it, for we should acknowledge his hand in all things.

All people are in the hands of the Almighty, and he governs and controls them, though they cannot perceive, neither do they acknowledge his handiwork. He exalts the President to be the head of the nation, and places Kings upon their thrones. There is not a man that escapes his cognizance, and he brings forth his purposes in the latter days. I can tell you something more, brethren and sisters, and friends, and the United States, and all the world; the Lord Almighty will not suffer his Priesthood to be again driven from the earth, even should he permit the wicked to kill and destroy this people. The Government of the United States and all the Kings of the world may go to war with us, but God will preserve a portion of the meek and humble of this people to bear off the Kingdom to the inhabitants of the earth, and will defend his Priesthood; for it is the last time, the last gathering time; and he will not suffer the Priesthood to be again driven from the earth. They may massacre men, women and children; but the Lord will not suffer them to destroy the Priesthood; and I say to the Saints, that if they will truly practice their religion, they will live and not be cut off.

"There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding;" and many who do not hold the Priesthood have ideas which are really true, yet they are not always certain whether they are true or not. The cogitations, concerning this people, of men upon their beds, of the President of the United States, of the members of Congress, and of the rulers of different nations, when they meditate upon the condition of the world, and their final exit from this stage of action, are that there is no evil in the Latter Day Saints. And I tell you, in the name of the God of Israel, that their secret reflections tell them this, unless they are so far depraved by wickedness that the Spirit of the Lord has ceased to strive with them. But as soon as they engage in the turmoil of their daily duties, the hue and cry that "the Mormons are about to do this and that," attracts their attention. Formerly the rumor was that "they were going to tamper with the slaves," when we had never thought of such a thing. The seed of Ham, which is the seed of Cain descending through Ham, will, according to the curse put upon him, serve his brethren, and be a "servant of servants" to his fellow creatures, until God removes the curse; and no power can hinder it. These are my views upon slavery. I will here say a little more upon this point. The conduct of the whites toward the slaves will, in many cases, send both slave and master to hell. This statement comprises much in a few words. The blacks should be used like servants, and not like brutes, but they must serve. It is their privilege to live so as to enjoy many of the blessings which attend obedience to the first principles of the Gospel, though they are not entitled to the Priesthood.

But to proceed; the principal evil is in the rulers, or those who profess to be rulers, and in the dispensers of the law, and not the Constitution; it is pure. Even those who have evil in their hearts, when they contemplate the powers that be, as now exhibited before their eyes, when they think of them upon their beds, and in their most sober reflections, are beginning to realize that God is visiting the earth, that the Latter Day Saints are not as bad a people as they are represented to be by their enemies; that they are not disposed to be hostile to the government, and that they are a good people. Many who occasionally reflect calmly are beginning to realize that we have something which they know but little about, and to wish that they understood it. When they cast off these reflections fear comes upon them, because the cry, from one end of the Union to the other, is that "the Mormons are going to do something." What was said in Nauvoo? "Let Joe Smith and the Mormons alone, and it will be but a little time before they control the election of this State; and the man that Joe Smith says shall be Governor, so will he be, and the men whom he says shall be Representatives, so shall they be; and we will not bear it."

It was the priest in the pulpit thorning the politician, and gouging underneath, saying, "Don't you bear it;" and this because the priest could not bear to stand up in the pulpit and own his shame for vindicating a false religion, for our elders could silence every one of them, and crimson their faces with shame. Hence their words and determinations were and are, "We will kill the Mormons;" and the priests were pinching the Mormons from behind the politicians. How long would it have been before the whole election of Illinois would have been controlled by the Latter Day Saints? Our enemies saw this, and the devil knew it, and was mad, and determined to remove us. He did so, and I thank God for it. The priests and the politicians could discern that Mormonism was gathering to its banner its thousands and tens of thousands, and that it would be but a very short time ere the State would be governed entirely by the Latter Day Saints. The whole election would have been controlled by them, if we had not come out and forbidden our people to vote. We had to do this, or control the ballot box.

They succeeded in killing Joseph Smith and Hyrum his brother, and in driving us to these valleys. Now, we are here, and what are they afraid of? I will tell you, they are afraid that we shall become independent of them.

The relation between us and the government may be likened to a man having twelve sons, and all the elder sons pitch upon the younger one, as Joseph's brethren of old did upon him. They persecuted him, and lied to their father about him, and tried to alienate the feelings of the old man from him, and succeeded in a measure in estranging the feelings of the father from the young child. So it is with the General Government and us. We have plead time and time again, and will plead, saying, "Spare us, love us; we mean to be one of the best boys you have got; be kind to us, and if you chasten us, it may be said that we have kissed the rod and reverenced the hand that gave it, and tried again: but be merciful to us, for do you not see that we are a dutiful child?" But no; Tom, Bill, Dick, Harry, and the rest of the boys are eternally running to the old man with lies in their mouths, and he will chastise little Joseph. And though the old fellow has not come out in open war upon him, and arrayed the force and arms of the government to kill the boy, yet he sleeps in his chair, and dreams it over, and talks in his sleep, saying, "Go it, boys, go it, boys, we will not say anything here." And Tom, Bill, Dick, &c., commence pouncing on to little Joseph; and the old man is dozing in his chair, saying, "Go it, boys." What will become of this little Joseph? I will tell you. We are a child of the government, one of the youngest children, and we cling to our parent, and desire to be reckoned in the family, and to hail our brethren as brethren, and be numbered among them either in a Territorial or State capacity. What next? The cry is raised by the older boys that "it never will do to admit this younger child into the Union, he is an alien, and we must exclude him." I will you you what this will amount to; they will pound and abuse little Joseph until his affections are entirely weaned from his parent, and from his brethren, and he becomes an independent boy. Who will cause this, the Mormons? No, the elder brethren will do it. They will urge on their hostility against little Joseph until he is driven into Egypt for succor. Well, if this is not Egypt enough, where will you find it?

"What is going to be done with these turbulent Mormons, these outrageous Mormons?" I will tell you what might be done, and what ought to be done. The Government of the United States, and the Presidents of the United States, ought to treat the religion of the Latter Day Saints as they do Methodism, Presbyterianism, Quakerism, Shakerism, and many other isms, and say, "Here, I wish you to hold your tongues about the Mormons, for they have just as good a right to their religion as you have to yours." And when the people petition for this or that (as the right of petition should never be denied), it is the duty of those who are addressed to hearken to the petitions of the people, and to let them have officers of their own choice, for the appointing power is elected by the voice of the people, and the mass of the people hold the reins of government in their hands. Then let the people carry out those principles they have adopted and profess to abide by, and when we wish for a Governor, or a Judge, or any other appointed officer, let us have the men we prefer, and not those who will run away and report falsehoods about us.

Many of the battalion boys are here to-day who walked over the plains and deserts; they know what they have endured. They left their fathers, mothers and children on the prairie, and some of them they have never since seen, and will not in this time, for they sleep in the silent grave. They suffered all this in fighting for the country that had cast them out!

Do I love murderers and mobocrats as I do good men? No. Do I pray for them? Yes, that the Lord would judge them out of their own mouths, and that speedily.

We plead all the time to be let alone, and to be permitted to live in peace, and not to be whipped and abused without cause, for we are "flesh of your flesh, and bone of your bone;" then why not let us enjoy our piece of cake, as we let you enjoy yours? For this we plead, and plead, and plead continually, but no, they say, "we will chastise you because we have the power to do it; we will whip you because we are stronger than you."

I will take the Government of the United States, and the laws of Missouri and Illinois from the year 1833 to 1845, and if they had been carried out according to their letter and spirit, they would have strung up the murderers and mobocrats who illegally and unrighteously killed, plundered, harassed and expelled us. I will tell you how much I love those characters. If they had any respect to their own welfare, they would come forth and say, whether Joseph Smith was a Prophet or not, "We shed his blood, and now let us atone for it;" and they would be willing to have their heads chopped off, that their blood might run upon the ground, and the smoke of it rise before the Lord as an incense for their sins. I love them that much. But if the Lord wishes them to live and foam out their sins before all men and women, it is all right, I care not where they go, or what they do.

I have but one fear concerning this people in the valleys of the mountains, I have but one trembling sensation in the nerves of my spirit, and that is, lest we do not live the religion we profess. If we will only practice what we profess, I tell you we are at the defiance of all hell. But if we transgress the law God has given us, and trample his mercies, blessings, and ordinances under our feet, and treat them with the indifference which I have thought that some occasionally do, not fully realizing the obligations that they are under to their God, I have feared that in consequence they would be overcome, and that the Lord would let them be scattered and smitten. But only let them live their religion, and I have no more fears with regard to their being driven, than I have with regard to these mountains being blown over upon this city. I am willing to fight, or to go; to run, or to stay; or to do anything else that the Lord Almighty requires of me for his Kingdom's sake, and then to lay down my life for his cause. But I swear by the Gods of eternity that I will not suffer men in our streets, and in our houses, to corrupt this people and overthrow them, the Lord and good men being my helpers.

To whom do I allude but to those who wish to destroy this people? Not one. I am not opposed to any man or set of men who are here, there, yonder, or anywhere else; but I am opposed to wickedness or vice, wherever they may be found in the whole earth; I am opposed to unrighteousness, and I always intend to be.

I prefer to remark upon subjects as they present themselves to my mind; though I might prepare a course of lectures, and confine myself to given subjects, as I have often done; but when I am in this stand, I hoist the gate and let the flood run, not caring which way it goes, or how.

What happened when I chastised a runaway officer? I did not say one rash word to him, nor chastise him half as much as he deserved; but I told him what he was, and how he looked to me; what he was sent here for, and what he should be, if he magnified his office. Before the meeting was out the word was, "O! we are going to be driven; here is a mob coming." Said I, "Get out of my way, or I will kick you out; what are you afraid of?" "O! of the Government of the United States." I replied, "Let me die and go to my Father in heaven, before I stoop to that abominable wickedness; I never will stoop to it, so help me God." What was the result of the course I then took? He was chastened, and our Chief Justice who is now here told him in Washington that he was chastened for his own iniquity, and said to him, "I expect they did not chastise you half enough." Do you suppose that I am going to crouch down, and suffer this people to bow down continually to the rod of corruption? No. Come on with your knives, your swords, and your faggots of fire, and destroy the whole of us, rather than we will forsake our religion. Whether it is true or false is none of your business; whether the doctrine of plurality of wives is true or false is none of your business. We have as good a right to adopt tenets in our religion as the Church of England, or the Methodists, or Baptists, or any other denomination, have to in theirs. Our doctrine is a Bible doctrine, a patriarchal doctrine, and is the doctrine of the Gods of eternity, and of the heavens, and was revealed to our fathers on the earth, and will save the world at last, and bring us into Abraham's bosom, if we ever get there. Are the officers of the government the judges of our religion? It is none of their business whether it is true or false. I know whether it is true or not, and that is enough for me; you know, brethren and sisters, and that is enough for you. If they do not believe it, we do not trouble them with it. We say that we will meet you as friends, and as neighbors, as "flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone," but not, as the world meet you, upon the platform of corruption and iniquity. We are not there, neither will we meet you there; but we will hail you as friends, and as brethren, pertaining to the citizenship of the government; so we hail the officers who are now with us. And if the gallant gentleman who is now in our midst had received the commission of Governor of this Territory, as was reported, and had accepted it, I would have taken off my hat and honored the appointment; and this people would have been just as passive and submissive to him as ever they could be to me. That I will warrant, and vouch for. If they wish to send a Governor here, and he is a gentleman, like the one I have referred to, every heart would say, "Thank God, we have a man to stand at our head in a gubernatorial capacity; a man who has got a good heart, and is willing that we should enjoy the federal rights of the Constitution as well as himself." I am with all such men, heart and hand. But for a man to come here and infringe upon my individual rights and privileges, and upon those of my brethren, will never meet my sanction, and I will scourge such an one until he leaves; I am after him. But I will say, to the praise of the gallant gentleman referred to, if there was going to be a gentleman called upon to be our Governor, there is not a man, out of the Kingdom of God, that I would listen to sooner, and feel more confidence and cordiality towards, than to him. I wish this meed of praise could be awarded to every officer in the government, but it cannot. We have some of the most corrupt, damnable, mean curses here that ever disgraced the earth; some who even wish to carry the holy sanctuary in one hand and a jug full of whiskey in the other, and follow a whore, and have a saint trail behind them to hold up their garments to prevent their drabbling. They are like the pilot fish to the shark, serving to lead him to his victim. I despise them; and so does every good man. Show your colors, gentlemen, and let us know what and who you are as I do, that all the earth may see and hear.

Have I any feelings against the man who has a true heart for constitutional rights? I have nothing but love and good feelings for all such. What have I for the sinner, the hypocrite, the unbeliever, the ungodly, the liar, the sorcerer, the whoremonger, and the adulterer? I have nothing but chastisement for them, until they repent of their wicked ways, and turn to God and find mercy. This is according to my priestly office. I informed you, in my discourse that has just been read, that my religion is first and foremost with me, and I will send it to all the earth, to President Pierce, whetaer he retains me as Governor of Utah Territory or not; and, whether I should be President of the United States, or King of Great Britain, or Monarch of all the world, my religion and my God are first and foremost with me. My kingship, my presidentship and all shall bow to that eternal Priesthood, which God has bestowed upon me. I have been Governor of this Territory ever since it has had one, and in all my official transactions I have acted in accordance with the Priesthood. I never will infringe upon it with anything I may operate in, in any office; let them all go by the board, before I will be brought into a situation that will cause me to infringe upon my Priesthood. In all my doings as an Elder of Israel, as holding the keys of the Priesthood to this generation, if I continue to be the Governor of this Territory, I shall magnify my office by my Priesthood. No matter what my Priesthood and calling are, all must bow to my God, and to his commandments. Have I been obliged to violate any law? No. The Priesthood assists me to honor, to preserve, to see, and understand the welfare of the government I am acting for, and enables me so to do a thousand times more effectually than I could if I had not this Priesthood; and if any one can produce documents to prove that any Governor has magnified his office better than I have, let him bring them forth.

In the free and independent Government of the United States, who in the eyes of the Almighty ought to have the privilege of sitting in the Presidential chair to be countenanced, adored, loved and reverenced in his capacity, and be justified therein by the heavenly hosts? It is that man who is sanctified before God, and who loves the Lord Jesus with all his heart, or in other words, who is endowed with wisdom from on high, and has revelations, visions and dreams, giving him understanding to provide for the welfare of every portion of the nation, and a willingness to preserve to every one their fair and just religious rights, as well as political, for the good and benefit of all. In the eyes of Eternal Justice, only such a man has the right to that office. They are afraid to put a man there who is a professor of religion, lest he favors his own party. A man is a fool that would do that when he has laws to preserve and keep inviolate toward the Methodists, and all religious denominations.

The Kingdom that Daniel saw will push forth its law, and that law will protect the Methodists, Quakers, Pagans, Jews, and every other creed there ever was or ever will be, in their religious rights. At the same time the Priesthood will bear rule, and hold the government of the Kingdom under control in all things, so that every knee will bow, and every tongue confess, to the glory of God the Father, that Jesus is the Christ. Every one must bow to the Saviour, and acknowledge and confess him with their mouths. Can they still be Methodists? Yes. Presbyterians? Yes. And I some expect that many will be brought into close places, as the Jew was by the Catholic priest. The Jew fell through the ice, and was about to drown, and implored the Catholic priest to pull him out. "I cannot," said the priest, "except you repent, and become a Christian." Said the Jew, "Pull me out this once." "Do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Catholic Church?" asked the priest. The Jew answered, "No, I do not." "Then you must stay there," and the priest held him under the water awhile. "Do you believe in Jesus Christ now?" "O yes; take me out." "Well," remarked the priest, "thank God that another sinner has repented; you are safe now, and while you are safe I will send you right to heaven's gate," and he gave the Jew a push under the ice.

I most assuredly expect that the time will come when every tongue shall confess, and every knee shall bow to the Saviour, though the people may believe what they will with regard to religion. The Kingdom that Daniel saw will actually make laws to protect every man in his rights, as our government does now, whether the religions of the people are true or false. We believe this as sincerely as we believe anything else; and I think that the course of this people has proved it as far as the acts of the children of men are concerned. All creation could ask for no more witnesses than they have that the New Testament is true, that Jesus is the Christ, that the holy prophets are true, that the Book of Mormon is true, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet and revelator. But the Lord has so ordained that no man shall receive the benefits of the everlasting Priesthood without humbling himself before Him, and giving Him the glory for teaching him, that he may be able to witness to every man of the truth, and not depend upon the words of any individual on the earth, but know for himself, live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," love the Lord Jesus Christ and the institutions of His kingdom, and finally enter into His glory. Every man and woman may be a revelator, and have the testimony of Jesus which is the spirit of prophecy, and foresee the mind and will of God concerning them, eschew evil, and choose that which is good.

There are thousands of things I would like to name with regard to ourselves and our government. Our whole interest is in it; we cling to it as a sucking child to its mother's breast, and we will hang to it until they beat us off, until we can hang no longer, and this will never happen, unless they drive us from it under the pretext of what Mormonism is going to do. What is the Kingdom of God going to accomplish on the earth? It will revolutionize not only the United States, but the whole world, and will go forth from the morning to the evening, from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, so shall be the ushering forth of the Gospel until the whole earth is deluged with it, and the righteous are gathered.

The sinner will slay the sinner, the wicked will fall upon the wicked until there is an utter overthrow and consumption upon the face of the whole earth, until God reigns whose right it is. As it was said in the days of the Saviour, "If we let this man alone, you may depend upon it that through his influence he will take away our place and nation." If you let Mormonism alone, I will promise that every honest man and woman in the United States will be in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and be governed by the Law of God.

Let them take the counsel of the late Captain Gunnison, who was massacred by the Indians; he was convinced that it would not do to persecute the Mormons, for every time we were driven we have succeeded beyond our most sanguine anticipations. It has happened to us as it did to the old man's stone wall, which was five feet high and six feet thick. The boys could not get his apples, and said among themselves, we will turn over the old wall; they turned it over, and it was higher than before. So with us; every time the Mormons have been driven they have enlarged their borders. Look out; drive us again, and we will take the kingdom before you are aware of it.

We certainly shall gather out all the good as fast as we can, for the people who love truth will hear sound argument, which is our rule of battle, and it is a scientific one. Now come on to war, whenever you think best, and we will gather out the honest until the last seed of Israel is gathered, and there is hardly enough left to elect a President, even among the Know Nothings.

Only persecute us, and we will grow the faster. Say they, "What shall we do? do tell us which way we shall go, for we do not know what to do, nor what to say; if we persecute them they will grow the faster, and take away our place and nation, and will get all the good people to follow them, and what shall we do?" It is a hard case I know.

When strangers come among us they often feel diffident, for we keep to ourselves here in these distant parts, and do not always immediately know whether we are about to receive friends or enemies into our community. We have been persecuted and driven, and been a scoff and a by-word, and when strangers come among us they feel a delicacy in making our acquaintance. I say, brethren and sisters, be frank with strangers, and when you talk with them, or are in their presence, live your religion, and do not vary one particle from the truth.

You say, "I love my God and my religion." Then manifest to them what your religion is, and if they are honest, ere long they will fall in with it; if not, they will take up their line of march and leave us; and my prayer is, that we may be delivered from every inbred corruption.

So far as the time and your patience would permit, I have endeavored to candidly and truly portray our real feelings and views with regard to the General Government, the members of the various Christian denominations, the upright everywhere, and the corrupt and abominable wherever they are to be found; and also to briefly sketch a few of the scenes and incidents of our past and present history.

Let us live our religion, and show the world that we love the Lord Jesus Christ better than anything else. Though the world persecute you, yet cling to the Lord and the Holy Gospel, even if you lay down your lives for the truth's sake. May God bless you. Amen.

Matrimonial Speculation.

A GENTLEMAN in Kelooshoo, Ark., was married to a young woman, and after four months' connubial felicity, was presented with a black baby. He called on his lawyer, related the circumstance, and asked his advice.

"All right," said the man of the law, "let me have the papers, and you shall have a divorce instanter."

"Oh, hang a divorce," replied the gentleman, "I only want to know if I can sell the cursed nigger!"

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1855.

The Herald's Correspondent.

In our last week's issue we published an address of Governor Young's, which was read by Mr. Bullock from the stand; on the first page of this week will be found an extemporaneous address, delivered by his Excellency on the same occasion. We recommend it to the perusal of every candid man; it manifests a frank, straightforward, honest spirit, which are so characteristic of the gentleman, and which we cannot help but admire. Its sentiments recommend it to every reflective, candid mind. It may not be so soft, gentle and mealy-mouthed as some of our fashionable libertines would like, and as some of our nimby-pimby, Miss Nancy, epauletted gentlemen would dictate. Men of dark deeds generally like soft-tongued, smooth speech, to cover their rascality, debauchery and corruption. It is very fashionable to be profligate, of course: what gentleman of spirit is not? but then to be told of it is very vulgar; it is a decided breach of etiquette, and the very height of ill manners.
